(e) Counsel permitted.—Any witness subpoenaed by the Committee or Subcommittee to a public or executive hearing may be accompanied by counsel of his own choosing who shall be permitted, while the witness is testifying, to advise him of his legal rights.

(f) Expenses of witnesses.—No witness shall be reimbursed for his appearance at a public or executive hearing before the Committee or Subcommittee unless such reimbursement is agreed to by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee or by a majority vote of the Committee.

(g) Limits of questions.—Questioning of a witness by members shall be limited to 10 minutes duration, except that if a member is unable to finish his questioning in the 10-minute period, he may be permitted further questions of the witness after all members have been given an opportunity to question the witness.

Additional opportunity to question a witness shall be limited to a duration of 10 minutes until all members have been given the opportunity of questioning the witness for a second time. This 10-minute time period per member will be continued until all members have exhaused their questions of the witness.

RULE 5.—VOTING

(a) Vote to report a measure or matter.—No measure or matter shall be reported from the Committee unless a majority of the Committee are actually present. The vote of the Committee to report a measure or matter shall require the concurrence of a majority of the members of the Committee who are present.

Any absent member may affirmatively request that his vote to report a matter be cast by proxy. The proxy shall be sufficiently clear to identify the subject matter, and to inform the Committee as to how the member wishes his vote to be recorded thereon. By written notice to the Chairman any time before the record vote on the measure or matter concerned is taken, any member may withdraw a proxy previously given. All proxies shall be kept in the files of the Committee, along with the record of the rollcall vote of the members present and voting, as an official record of the vote on the measure or matter.

(b) Vote on matters other than a report on a measure or matter.—On Committee matters other than a vote to report a measure or matter, no record vote shall be taken unless a majority of the Committee are actually present. On any such other matter, a member of the Committee may request that his vote may be cast by proxy. The proxy shall be in writing and shall be sufficiently clear to identify the subject matter, and to inform the Committee as to how the member wishes his vote to be recorded thereon. By written notice to the Chairman any time before the vote on such other matter is taken, the member may withdraw a proxy previously given. All proxies relating to such other matters shall be kept in the files of the Committee.

RULE 6.—QUORUM

No executive session of a Committee or a Subcommittee shall be called to order unless a majority of the Committee or Subcommittee, as the case may be, are actually present. Unless the Committee otherwise provides or is required by the Rules of the Senate, one member shall constitute a quorum for the receipt of evidence, the swearing of witnesses, and the taking of testimony.

RULE 7.—STAFF PRESENT ON DAIS

Only members and the Clerk of the Committee shall be permitted on the dais during public or executive hearings, except that a member may have one staff person accompany him during such public or executive hearing on the dais. If a member desires a second staff person to accompany him on the dais he must make a request to the Chairman for that purpose.●

CALENDAR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I understand it, the following calendar items have been cleared: No. 95, No. 96, No. 97, No. 98, No. 99, No. 100, No. 101, No. 102, No. 103, No. 104, and No. 106.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have checked carefully, and on this side there is no objection to proceeding with the calendar orders that the distinguished majority leader has enumerated.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar items I have enumerated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL SCIENCE WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 59) to designate "National Science Week," was considered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on February 21, 1985, I, along with Senator KENNEDY, introduced Senate Joint Resolution 59, a resolution establishing the week of May 12-18, 1985, as "National Science Week." This week will consist of science-related activities sponsored by local, State, and national organizations. These activities will include such things as radio and television programs, museum exhibits, science programs in schools of all levels, and open houses in research facilities. The National Science Foundation will assist these various organizations and serve as a coordinator for the week's events.

By promoting public recognition of the achievements of science and technology, "National Science Week" will help to facilitate an increased level of interest among our Nation's youth. While "National Science Week" activities are for all Americans, the fresh enthusiasm of young people for discovery is vital in tomorrow's increasingly technological world.

I take a few minutes of our time today to recognize the University of Utah for its efforts to promote the public understanding of science and technology in Utah. National Science Week is being commemorated by the faculty, staff, and students at the University of Utah in a week-long series of events relating to science, technology, and mathematics.

The scheduled events cover a wide spectrum of activities benefitting and equally wide range of people. There will be science demonstration shows for children held at the Children's Museum of Utah, a nature walk featuring Utah's remarkable trees and flora in conjunction with the State Arboretum of Utah, and lectures, informal talks, and demonstrations by Utah's science and engineering scholars in their particular specialties. These professors will familiarize Utahns with everything from the Utah/MIT Dextrous Hand, the world's most sophisticated robotic limb, to mathematical models of the chemical, biological, and physical worlds. Utahns will even be able to experience the world of flight simulators used for pilot and tactical training and the realm of computer graphics with the well-known computer-aided design and computer-aided manufacturing system.

With the participation of business, academia, and various State and local organizations, and with the guidance of the National Science Foundation, National Science Week observances will further the awareness of scientific and technological progress taking place in Utah. We are, I believe, justifiably proud of our achievements.

I am sure other Senators' States are also planning appropriate activities to celebrate National Science Week. I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing their efforts not only to recognize America's accomplishments during this special week, but also to support our scientists and engineers in their continuing search for knowledge. America's future depends on their abilities and on their devotion to the pursuit of American excellence in all of these fields of endeavor.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 59

Whereas science and technology are currently major elements in the expansion of the economy and in the improvement of the quality of life in the United States;

Whereas the rate of scientific discovery and technological innovation continues to increase more rapidly than at any time in our history;

Whereas it is vital to build and maintain a highly dedicated and motivated work force with scientific and technological skills;

Whereas it is important that scientific research be made more interesting and accessible to youth as a potential career option;

Whereas it is in the national interest to increase the public's awareness and understanding of science and technology; and

Whereas schools, universities, museums, and professional, educational, and voluntary organizations, along with industry, labor, government, and private individuals, should be encouraged to work cooperatively to develop programs, events, and materials that will contribute to the public's education in science and technology: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of May 12 through May 18, 1985, is designated as "National Science Week". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities, including programs aimed at furthering the awareness of all Americans, and particularly the Nation's youth, of the importance of science and technology.

NATIONAL CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 64) to designate the week beginning May 5, 1985, as "National Correctional Officers Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 64

Whereas American correctional officers who work in our jails and prisons are currently responsible for the containment and control of over six hundred thousand prisoners;

Whereas correctional officers must protect inmates from violence while encouraging them to develop skills and attitudes that can help them become productive members of society following their release;

Whereas the morale of correctional officers is affected by many factors, and the public perception of the role of correctional officers is more often based upon dramatization rather than factual review;

Whereas good job performance requires correctional officers to absorb the adverse attitudes present in confinement while maintaining themselves as professionals in order to have their actions appreciated and accepted by the public at large;

Whereas correctional officers had been similarly honored by many States and localities in 1984;

Whereas correctional officers had been similarly honored by a similar joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled in 1984; and

Whereas the attitude and morale of correctional officers is a matter worthy of serious congressional attention: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning May 5, 1985, hereby is designated "National Correctional Officers Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

BALTIC FREEDOM DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 66) designating June 14, 1985, as "Baltic Freedom Day."

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased and proud to offer my support to proclaim June 14, 1985, as Baltic Freedom Day.

As Americans, we are fortunate to live in a society where our freedoms are protected by the Constitution. We are guaranteed the freedom to speak out opinions, to practice our religions, to gather in meetings.

There is a nation which does not recognize these basic human rights. It is a country which persecutes those who wish to practice religion. It is a country which suppresses speech. That nation is the Soviet Union. We hope and pray they will modify their positions.

In 1941, President Franklin Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill signed a historic declaration known as the Atlantic Charter. The charter embodied fundamental principles of human rights, including freedom from fear and want, freedom of speech, and freedom of religion. More importantly, the second provision in the Atlantic Charter stresses the importance of the "principle of self-determination." The Soviet Unions forcible incorporation of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia clearly violates the spirit and word of the charter.

United States' policy has consistently supported freedom for the Baltic States. That policy must remain unchanged. As the deputy chairman of the U.S. delegation to the 1980 Review Conference of the Helsinki Act stated, "No occupation or acquisition of territory in contravention of international law will be recognized as legal." This provision applies directly to the Baltic States.

We must not rest until the brave people of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia are allowed to pursue their dreams of liberty.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 66

Whereas the people of the Baltic Republics of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia have cherished the principles of religious and political freedom and independence;

Whereas the Baltic Republics have existed as independent, sovereign nations belonging to and fully recognized by the League of Nations; and

Whereas the people of the Baltic Republics have individual and separate cultures, national traditions, and languages distinctively foreign to those of Russia;

Whereas the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics (U.S.S.R.) in 1940 did illegally seize and occupy the Baltic Republics and by force incorporate them against their national will and contrary to their desire for independence and sovereignty into the U.S.S.R.;

Whereas the U.S.S.R. since 1940 has systematically removed native Baltic peoples from their homelands by deporting them to Siberia and caused great masses of Russians to relocate in the Baltic Republics, thus threatening the Baltic cultures with extinction;

Whereas the U.S.S.R. has imposed upon the captive people of the Baltic Republics an oppressive political system which has destroyed every vestige of democracy, civil liberties, and religious freedom;

Whereas the people of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania find themselves today subjugated by the U.S.S.R., locked into a union they deplore, denied basic human rights, and persecuted for daring to protest;

Whereas the U.S.S.R. refuses to abide by the Helsinki accords which the U.S.S.R. voluntarily signed;

Whereas the United States stands as a champion of liberty, dedicated to the principles of national self-determination, human rights, and religious freedom, and opposed to oppression and imperialism;

Whereas the United States, as a member of the United Nations, has repeatedly voted with a majority of that international body to uphold the right of other countries of the world, including those in Africa and Asia, to determine their fates and be free of foreign domination;

Whereas the U.S.S.R. has steadfastly refused to return to the people of the Baltic States of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, the right to exist as independent republics separate and apart from the U.S.S.R. or pemit a return of personal, political, and religious freedoms, and

Whereas the U.S.S.R. conscripts Estonians, Latvians, and Lithuanians into the Soviet Armed Force, compelling them to serve in Afghanistan, Vietnam, and Cuba: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress of the United States recognizes the continuing desire and the right of the people of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia for freedom and independence from the domination of the U.S.S.R. and deplores the refusal of the U.S.S.R. to recognize the sovereignty of the Baltic Republics and to yield to their rightful demands for independence from foreign domination and oppression and that the fourteenth day of June 1985, the anniversay of the mass deportation of Baltic peoples from their homelands in 1941, be designated "Baltic Freedom Day" as a symbol of the solidarity of the American people with the aspirations of the enslaved Baltic people and that the President of the United States be authorized and requested to issue a proclamation for the observance of Baltic Freedom Day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

NATIONAL ASTHMA AND ALLERGY AWARENESS WEEK

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 83) designating the week beginning on May 5, 1985, as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 83

Whereas asthma and allergic diseases result in physical, emotional, and economic hardship for more than thirty-five million Americans and their families;

Whereas thousands of Americans, many of them young, die each year from asthma even though sufficient medical knowledge and resources exist to prevent many asthma-related deaths;

Whereas student absenteeism is due in significant part to asthma and allergic diseases;

Whereas environmental conditions in the workplace often cause or exacerbate asthma and allergic diseases among employees;

Whereas many hospital patients suffer allergic reactions to prescribed medications;

Whereas it is estimated that the American public pays $4,000,000,000 per year in medical bills directly attributable to the treatment and diagnosis of asthma and allergic diseases and pays another $2,000,000,000 per year as a result of the indirect social cost of such illnesses;

Whereas, because of recent developments in the study of immunology, health care providers are better equipped to diagnose and treat asthma and allergic diseases; and

Whereas increased public awareness of recent scientific advancements in the study of immunology will help many of the common misconceptions concerning asthma, allergic diseases, and the victims of those illnesses: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning on May 5, 1985, is hereby designated as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

NATIONAL POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 87) to provide for the designation of July 19, 1985, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day," was considered.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to urge the support of my colleagues for Senate Joint Resolution 87 which I introduced on March 19. This resolution would designate July 19, 1985, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day," and would conform with 6 previous such days that have served as an important symbol of the gratitude all Americans feel toward those who were interned while serving bravely in defense of our Nation as well as those servicepersons who have yet to be accounted for and who remain missing in action. Senate Joint Resolution 87 was reported unanimously from the Judiciary Committee on May 2.

The intent of this special day is to provide proper recognition to those brave Americans who rendered honorable and faithful service to their country, often under very brutal and inhuman conditions.

This resolution honors those missing heroes and those who endured terrible pain and deprivation before they were returned to their families and to the country for which they fought so courageously. For the prisoners of war, comfort was believing that America was still working for their release. Their endurance through such arduous times reflected their faith in our country's efforts to obtain their freedom. The missing-in-action and their families need to know that the search will not end until all who are missing are accounted for. Those who have suffered such hardship keep their faith by remembering the ideals and people which have guided them and which have provided the justification for their endurance of such hardships. In turn, we must never forget them.

A POW/MIA Recognition Day accords to the POW's, MIA's, and their families, our very special thanks for their many sacrifices and special contributions. By this gesture, we enhance ourselves as a nation and keep in mind that there have been and will always be those to serve so that our country can remain strong and free.

In addition to its symbolic value, "National POW/MIA Recognition Day," would serve to increase public awareness in the United States and throughout the world that there remain almost 2,500 servicemen and civilians still unaccounted for in Indochina. During the last 3 years, the Governments of Laos and Vietnam have taken the first steps toward cooperation, compelled, in part, by a sensitivity to the increased public awareness of this significant humanitarian concern.

The designation of July 19 will coincide with the activities planned by the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia.

The league is holding its 16th annual meeting in Washington, DC, during the week of July 14-20, 1985. The league is the only organization comprised solely of family members—membership approximately 2,000—of American POW/MIA's. The league's efforts to increase public awareness have played an important role in the progress made to date with the Indochinese governments.

I believe that it is important that we continue the vigil for our missing Americans and that we reaffirm our support for the effort to resolve their fate. To underline this commitment, I urge my colleagues to join with me in a mutually bipartisan spirit to honor these most patriotic citizens, the former prisoners-of-war and the missing-in-action, on July 19, 1985.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 87

Whereas the United States has fought in many wars;

Whereas thousands of American prisoners of war were subjected to brutal and inhuman treatment by their enemy captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war and many such prisoners of war died from such treatment;

Whereas many Americans missing in action remain unaccounted for and the uncertainty surrounding their fate has caused their families to suffer acute hardship; and

Whereas the sacrifices of American prisoners of war and Americans missing in action and their families are deserving of national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the nineteenth day of July 1985 shall be designated as "National P.O.W./M.I.A. Recognition Day" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate such day with appropriate activities.

NATIONAL FOSTER GRANDPARENTS MONTH

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 92) to designate October 1985 as "National Foster Grandparents Month."

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, on March 26, 1985, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 92, a resolution designating the month of October 1985 as "National Foster Grandparents Month." On May 2, the resolution was unanimously reported to the full Senate by the Judiciary Committee.

The Foster Grandparent Program, which is part of ACTION, the national volunteer agency, celebrates its 20th anniversary this year. When it was first established in 1965, there were 33 projects in 27 States, involving 782 foster grandparent volunteers; today, approximately 19,000 foster grandparents are serving 65,000 children in 245 projects jointly funded by Federal and private sectors and in eight totally non-federally funded projects. The projects are located in all 50 States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia.

The program recruits foster grandparent volunteers, usually low-income people who are age 60 or over. The volunteers are given 40 hours of preservice training and orientation, and thereafter are supervised by child-care teams in the agencies, in which they serve 20 hours each week.

The volunteers provide unique, personal guidance and care to tens of thousands of physically, emotionally, and mentally handicapped children, and to children who are abused, neglected, in the juvenile justice system, or in need of other special help.

The program brings benefits to all who participate, and to the Nation. The volunteers benefit from improved health, increased independence, decreased isolation, and lessened financial burdens; the children served make great gains in their physical, social, and psychological development. For many children, the love of a foster grandparent is the first personal warmth and concern they have ever known.

The Foster Grandparent Program is one of the most meaningful social service programs ever developed, providing volunteers with opportunities to participate creatively in community service. Their activities continue to improve our society's attitude about the ability of retired persons to help solve social problems. The foster grandparent volunteers represent a tremendous return on tax dollars, and are of a great value to the American people.

By designating October 1985 as "National Foster Grandparents Month" we will give the volunteers the recognition they so rightly deserve.

I urge my colleagues to support the joint resolution.

The joint resolution ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 92

Whereas the Foster Grandparent Program celebrates its twentieth anniversary in 1985;

Whereas the Foster Grandparent Program, administered by the national volunteer agency known as the ACTION Agency, was the first Federal program to provide older individuals with opportunities for retirement to service as an alternative to retirement from activity;

Whereas older individuals participating in the Foster Grandparent Program have provided unique, personal guidance and care to tens of thousands of physically, emotionally, and mentally handicapped chidren and children who are abused, neglected, in the juvenile justice system, or in need of special help;

Whereas in its first year of operation the Foster Grandparent Program established 33 projects in 27 States and involved 782 Foster grandparent volunteers;

Whereas today approximately 19,000 Foster Grandparents are serving some 65,000 children in 245 projects in the 50 States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia;

Whereas the growth of the Foster Grandparent Program reflects increasing public and institutional awareness of the enormous benefit that such Program brings to all who participate in it and to the Nation: the volunteers benefit from improved health, increased independence, decreased isolation, and lessened finanical burdens; and the children who are served make great gains in their physical, social, and psychological development, and the love of a Foster Grandparent is for many children the first personal warmth and concern they have known;

Whereas the service of Foster Grandparent volunteers represents a tremendous return on tax dollars and a great value to the American people;

Whereas the Foster Grandparent Program is one of the most meaningful social service programs ever developed, providing older individuals with opportunities to participate crucially and creatively in community service; and

Whereas the activities of Foster Grandparent volunteers continue to improve the public attitude concerning older individuals and to demonstrate the importance of using the expertise of retired persons to help solve social problems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1985 is designated as "National Foster Grandparent Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all government agenies, interested organizations, community groups, and the people of the Unted States to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the Foster Grandparent Program by observing such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

BETTER HEARING AND SPEECH MONTH

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 93) to designate the month of May 1985 as "Better Hearing and Speech Month," was considered.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of legislation designating May 1985 as Better Hearing and Speech Month. This resolution will promote awareness of the needs and the abilities of the communicatively disabled. Such awareness, along with understanding and compassion on the part of the nondisabled, has helped, and must continue to help, the hearing and speech handicapped to achieve their full potential.

My wife Annie is just one of millions of communicatively impaired people who has mastered her disability and has capitalized on her other, considerable skills and talents. It is from personal experience, then, that I have seen the extraordinary gains which can be made as long as the able-bodied recognize that, along with their special needs, the handicapped possess special abilities.

It is essential that we all realize what handicapped persons have long known—a disability is not an adversity to which one surrenders but an obstacle to overcome.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on a third reading.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 93

Whereas more than fifteen million Americans of all ages experience some form of hearing impairment, ranging from mild hearing loss to profound deafness;

Whereas more than ten million Americans of all ages experience some form of speech or language impairment;

Whereas the deaf, hard of hearing, and speech or language impaired have made significant contributions to society in virtually every occupational category and profession;

Whereas those with communication disorders continue to encounter impediments and obstacles which limit their education and employment opportunities; and

Whereas the remaining barriers which prevent the communicatively handicapped from fulfilling their potential must be recognized and eliminated: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of May 1985 is designated "Better Hearing and Speech Month" and the President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

VERY SPECIAL ARTS U.S.A. MONTH

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 103) to designate the month of May 1985, as "Very Special Arts U.S.A. Month," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 103

Whereas programs involving the arts enhance the learning and enrich the lives of disabled individuals;

Whereas arts with the handicapped is a means of integrating disabled individuals into the mainstream of education and cultural society;

Whereas programs bringing arts to the handicapped inform the general public, parents, volunteers, and the business community of the value of arts to the disabled;

Whereas the emphasis is needed to expand support for arts programs with the handicapped and to increase participation and commitment of the community and educators to these activities;

Whereas the National Committee, Arts with the Handicapped, an educational affiliate of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts has successfully entered into its eleventh year as the coordinating agency for arts programs for disabled children, youth, and adults; and

Whereas the National Committee conducts education programs in all fifty States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico to assure that all disabled individuals have access to programs which bring the arts into their lives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of May, 1985, is designated as "Very Special Arts U.S.A. Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

TIME OF REMEMBRANCE FOR VICTIMS OF TERRORISM

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 104) to proclaim October 23, 1985, as "A Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, on April 3, 1985, Senator LEAHY and I, along with 35 other cosponsors, introduced Senate Joint Resolution 104, a joint resolution proclaiming October 23, 1985, as a "Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world. On May 2, the resolution was unanimously reported to the full Senate by the Judiciary Committee. I believe it is especially appropriate that we take up consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 104 during this period in which we honor the memory of the victims of the Holocaust.

Mr. President, on September 28, 1984, the President signed into law Senate Joint Resolution 336, a joint resolution proclaiming October 23, 1984, as "A Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world and marking the first anniversary of the terrorist attack on the multinational peacekeeping mission in Beirut, Lebanon. I was proud to be the sponsor of that joint resolution which 59 of my colleagues cosponsored.

On October 19, the President issued a proclamation, called for by the joint resolution, urging "all Americans to take time to reflect on the sacrifices that have been made in the pursuit of peace and freedom * * *" and calling upon "the departments and agencies of the United States and interested organizations, groups, and individuals to fly U.S. flags at half staff throughout the world in the hope that the desire for peace and freedom take firm root in every person and every nation."

The originating and driving organization behind this effort was No Greater Love, a national nonprofit, nonpolitical humanitarian organization dedicated to providing programs of care and friendship to children whose parents have been killed while serving our country. On October 23, No Greater Love sponsored a commemorative ceremony marking a time of remembrance at Arlington National Cemetery. This ceremony proved to be one of international significance and success. Letters of support and appreciation for this effort were received from diplomatic officials, Governors, organizations, and individuals from across the Nation and around the world.

In light of the tremendous response to the declaration of October 23, 1984, as "A Time of Remembrance," and because of the continuing tragedy of world-wide terrorism families of the victims of terrorism have requested that "A Time of Remembrance" be made an annual occurrence. This would not only make us all more aware of the need to confront the problem of terrorism but would also assure the families that their loved ones who lost their lives in the service of our country would continue to be honored and that their service and sacrifice would never be forgotten by those whom they served.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support Senate Joint Resolution 104.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution and the preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 104

Whereas the problem of terrorism has become an international concern that knows no boundaries—religious, racial, political, or national;

Whereas thousands of men, women, and children have died at the hands of terrorists in nations around the world, and today terrorism continues to claim the lives of many peace-loving individuals;

Whereas October 23, 1983, is the date on which the largest number of Americans were killed in a single act of terrorism—the bombing of the United States compound in Beirut, Lebanon, in which two hundred and forty-one United States servicemen lost their lives;

Whereas many of these victims died defending ideals of peace and freedom; and

Whereas it is appropriate to honor all victims of terrorism, and in America to console the families of victims, and to cherish the freedom that their sacrifices make possible for all Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 23, 1985, be proclaimed as "A Time of Remembrance", to urge all Americans to take time to reflect on the sacrifices that have been made in the pursuit of peace and freedom, and to promote active participation by the American people through the wearing of a purple ribbon, a symbol of patriotism, dignity, loyalty, and martyrdom. The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the departments and agencies of the United States and interest organizations, groups, and individuals to fly the United States flags at half staff throughout the world in the hope that the desire for peace and freedom take firm root in every person and every nation.

MISSING CHILDREN DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 118) to designate May 25, 1985, as "Missing Children Day," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, and the preamble, are as follows:

S.J. RES. 118

Whereas on May 25, 1979, six-year-old Etan Patz disappeared from his home in New York City and is still missing;

Whereas over one million eight hundred thousand children disappear from home annually;

Whereas children who are missing from home and are not living in a family environment are frequently the victims of sexual and physical exploitation;

Whereas an estimated 60 per centum of missing children are sexually abused while away from home;

Whereas the search for missing children is frequently a low-priority investigation in many law enforcement agencies;

Whereas efforts between Federal and local law enforcement agencies in child abduction cases are usualy uncoordinated, haphazard, and ineffective; and

Whereas the problem of the missing child has been plagued by misinformation and there is a need to increase public understanding and awareness of this problem: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 25, 1985, is designated as "Missing Children Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all Government agencies and the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies, programs, and activities.

OLDER AMERICANS MONTH

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 195) designating May 1985 as "Older Americans Month," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DR. JONAS E. SALK DAY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 258, a joint resolution to designate "Dr. Jonas E. Salk Day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 258) to designate May 6, 1985, as "Dr. Jonas E. Salk Day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 258) was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to indefinitely postpone the Senate companion bill, Calendar No. 105 (S.J. Res. 123).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXPORT ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 883.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 883) entitled "An Act to extend the Export Administration Act of 1979", do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

Titles I and II of this Act may be cited as the "Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1979

SEC. 101. REFERENCE TO THE ACT.

Except as a otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this title an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Export Administration Act of 1979.

SEC. 102. FINDINGS.

Section 2 (50 U.S.C. App. 2401) is amended as follows:

(1) Paragraph (2) is amended by striking out "by strengthening the trade balance and the value of the United States dollar, thereby reducing inflation" and inserting in lieu thereof "by earning foreign exchange, thereby contributing favorably to the trade balance".

(2) Paragraph (3) is amended by striking out "which would strengthen the Nation's economy" and inserting in lieu thereof "consistent with the economic, security, and foreign policy objectives of the United States".

(3) Paragraph (6) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) Uncertainty of export control policy can inhibit the efforts of United States business and work to the detriment of the overall attempt to improve the trade balance of the United States.".

(4) Paragraph (9) is amended by striking out "achievement of a positive balance of payments" and inserting in lieu thereof "a positive contribution to the balance of payments".

(5) Section 2 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(10) It is important that the administration of export controls imposed for foreign policy purposes give special emphasis to the need to control exports of goods and substances hazardous to the public health and the environment which are banned or severely restricted for use in the United States, and which, if exported, could affect the international reputation of the United States as a responsible trading partner.

"(11) The acquisition of national security sensitive goods and technology by the Soviet Union and other countries, the actions or policies of which run counter to the national security interests of the United States, has led to the significant enhancement of Soviet bloc military-industrial capabilities. This enhancement poses a threat to the security of the United States, its allies, and other friendly nations, and places additional demands on the defense budget of the United States.

"(12) Availability to controlled countries of goods and technology from foreign sources is a fundamental concern of the United States and should be eliminated through negotiations and other appropriate means whenever possible.

"(13) Excessive dependence of the United States, its allies, or countries sharing common strategic objectives with the United States, on energy and other critical resources from potential adversaries can be harmful to the mutual and individual security of all those countries.".

SEC. 103. DECLARATION OF POLICY.

Section 3 (50 U.S.C. App. 2402) is amended as follows:

(1) Paragraph (3) is amended by inserting before the period at the end "or common strategic objectives".

(2) Paragraph (7) is amended—

(A) by striking out "every reasonable effort" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "reasonable and prompt efforts"; and

(B) by striking out "resorting to the imposition of controls on exports from the United States" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "imposing export controls".

(3) Paragraph (8) is amended—

(A) by striking out "every reasonable effort" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "reasonable and prompt efforts"; and

(B) by striking out "resorting to the imposition of export controls" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "imposing export controls".

(4) Paragraph (9) is amended—

(A) by inserting "or common strategic objectives" after "commitments" each place it appears; and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", and to encourage other friendly countries to cooperate in restricting the sale of goods and technology that can harm the security of the United States".

(5) Section 3 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(12) It is the policy of the United States to sustain vigorous scientific enterprise. To do so involves sustaining the ability of scientists and other scholars freely to communicate research findings, in accordance with applicable provisions of law, by means of publication, teaching, conferences, and other forms of scholarly exchange.

"(13) It is the policy of the United States to control the export of goods and substances banned or severely restricted for use in the United States in order to foster public health and safety and to prevent injury to the foreign policy of the United States as well as to the credibility of the United States as a responsible trading partner.

"(14) It is the policy of the United States to cooperate with countries which are allies of the United States and countries which share common strategic objectives with the United States in minimizing dependence on imports of energy and other critical resources from potential adversaries and in developing alternative supplies of such resources in order to minimize strategic threats posed by excessive hard currency earnings derived from such resource exports by countries with policies adverse to the security interests of the United States.

"(15) It is the policy of the United States, particularly in light of the Soviet massacre of innocent men, women, and children aboard Korean Air Lines flight 7, to continue to object to exceptions to the International Control List for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, subject to periodic review by the President.".

SEC. 104. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

(a) VALIDATED LICENSES AUTHORIZING MULTIPLE EXPORTS.—Section 4(a)(2) (50 U.S.C. App. 2403(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Validated licenses authorizing multiple exports, issued pursuant to an application by the exporter, in lieu of an individual validated license for each such export, including, but not limited to, the following:

"(A) A distribution license, authorizing exports of goods to approved distributors or users of the goods in countries other than controlled countries. The Secretary shall grant the distribution license primarily on the basis of the reliability of the applicant and foreign consignees with respect to the prevention of diversion of goods to controlled countries. The Secretary shall have the responsibility of determining, with the assistance of all appropriate agencies, the reliability of applicants and their immediate consignees. The Secretary's determination shall be based on appropriate investigations of each applicant and periodic reviews of licensees and their compliance with the terms of licenses issued under this Act. Factors such as the applicant's products or volume of business, or the consignees' geographic location, sales distribution area, or degree of foreign ownership, which may be relevant with respect to individual cases, shall not be determinative in creating categories or general criteria for the denial of applications or withdrawal of a distribution license.

"(B) A comprehensive operations license, authorizing exports and reexports of technology and related goods, including items from the list of militarily critical technologies developed pursuant to section 5(d) of this Act which are included on the control list in accordance with that section, from a domestic concern to and among its foreign subsidiaries, affiliates, joint venturers, and licensees that have long-term, contractually defined relations with the exporter, are located in countries other than controlled countries, and are approved by the Secretary. The Secretary shall grant the license to manufacturing, laboratory, or related operations on the basis of approval of the exporter's systems of control, including internal proprietary controls, applicable to the technology and related goods to be exported rather than approval of individual export transactions. The Secretary and the Commissioner of Customs, consistent with their authorities under section 12(a) of this Act, and with the assistance of all appropriate agencies, shall periodically, but not less frequently than annually, perform audits of licensing procedures under this subparagraph in order to assure the integrity and effectiveness of those procedures.

"(C) A project license, authorizing exports of goods or technology for a specified activity.

"(D) A service supply license, authorizing exports of spare or replacement parts for goods previously exported.".

(b) CONTROL LIST.—Section 4(b) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Commodity" and "commodity"; and

(2) by striking out "consisting of any goods or technology subject to export controls under this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "stating license requirements (other than for general licenses) for exports of goods and technology under this Act".

(c) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—Section 4(c) is amended—

(1) by striking out "significant" and inserting in lieu thereof "sufficient";

(2) by inserting after "those produced in the United States" the following: "so as to render the controls ineffective in achieving their purposes"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following: "In complying with the provisions of this subsection, the President shall give strong emphasis to bilateral or multilateral negotiations to eliminate foreign availability. The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall cooperate in gathering information relating to foreign availability, including the establishment and maintenance of a jointly operated computer system.".

(d) NOTIFICATION OF PUBLIC AND CONSULTATION WITH BUSINESS.—Section 4(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) NOTIFICATION OF THE PUBLIC; CONSULTATION WITH BUSINESS.—The Secretary shall keep the public fully apprised of changes in export control policy and procedures instituted in conformity with this Act with a view to encouraging trade. The Secretary shall meet regularly with representatives of a broad spectrum of enterprises, labor organizations, and citizens interested in or affected by export controls, in order to obtain their views on United States export control policy and the foreign availability of goods and technology.".

SEC. 105. NATIONAL SECURITY CONTROLS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—

(1) TRANSFERS TO EMBASSIES OF CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—Section 5(a)(1) (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(a)(1)) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The authority contained in this subsection includes the authority to prohibit or curtail the transfer of goods or technology within the United States to embassies and affiliates of controlled countries.".

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 5(a)(2) is amended—

(A) by striking out "(A)"; and

(B) by striking out subparagraph (B).

(3) SAFEGUARDS TO PREVENT DIVERSIONS.—Section 5(a)(3) is amended by striking out the last sentence.

(b) POLICY TOWARD INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES.—

(1) CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—Section 5(b) is amended by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(1) In administering export controls for national security purposes under this section, the President shall establish as a list of controlled countries those countries set forth in section 620(f) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, except that the President may add any country to or remove any country from such list of controlled countries if he determines that the export of goods or technology to such country would or would not (as the case may be) make a significant contribution to the military potential of such country or a combination of countries which would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. In determining whether a country is added to or removed from the list of controlled countries, the President shall take into account—

"(A) the extent to which the country's policies are adverse to the national security interests of the United States;

"(B) the country's Communist or non-Communist status;

"(C) the present and potential relationship of the country with the United States;

"(D) the present and potential relationships of the country with countries friendly or hostile to the United States;

"(E) the country's nuclear weapons capability and the country's compliance record with respect to multilateral nuclear weapons agreements to which the United States is a party; and

"(F) such other factors as the President considers appropriate.

Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be interpreted to limit the authority of the President provided in this Act to prohibit or curtail the export of any goods or technology to any country to which exports are controlled for national security purposes other than countries on the list of controlled countries specified in this paragraph.".

(2) EXPORTS TO COCOM COUNTRIES.—Section 5(b) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(2) No authority or permission to export may be required under this section before goods or technology are exported in the case of exports to a country which maintains export controls on such goods or technology cooperatively with the United States pursuant to the agreement of the group known as the Coordinating Committee, if the goods or technology is at such a level of performance characteristics that the export of the goods or technology to controlled countries requires only notification of the participating governments of the Coordinating Committee.".

(3) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 5(b)(1), as amended by paragraph (1) of this subsection, is amended in the last sentence by striking out "specified in the preceding sentence" and inserting in lieu thereof "set forth in this paragraph".

(c) CONTROL LIST.—

(1) ANNUAL REVIEW.—Section 5(c) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking out "commodity"; and

(B) by amending paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3) The Secretary shall review the list established pursuant to this subsection at least once each year in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(A) of this Act and the provisions of this section, and shall promptly make such revisions of the list as may be necessary after each such review. Before beginning each annual review, the Secretary shall publish notice of that annual review in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall provide an opportunity during such review for comment and the submission of data, with or without oral presentation, by interested Government agencies and other affected or potentially affected parties. The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register any revisions in the list, with an explanation of the reasons for the revisions. The Secretary shall further assess, as part of such review, the availability from sources outside the United States of goods and technology comparable to those subject to export controls imposed under this section.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

(d) EXPORT LICENSES.—Section 5(e) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking out "a qualified general license in lieu of a validated license" and inserting in lieu thereof "the multiple validated export licenses described in section 4(a)(2) of this Act in lieu of individual validated licenses"; and

(2) by striking out paragraphs (3) and (4) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) The Secretary, subject to the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, shall not require an individual validated export license for replacement parts which are exported to replace on a one-for-one basis parts that were in a good that has been lawfully exported from the United States.

"(4) The Secretary shall periodically review the procedures with respect to the multiple validated export licenses, taking appropriate action to increase their utilization by reducing qualification requirements or lowering minimum thresholds, to combine procedures which overlap, and to eliminate those procedures which appear to be of marginal utility.

"(5) The export of goods subject to export controls under this section shall be eligible, at the discretion of the Secretary, for a distribution license and other licenses authorizing multiple exports of goods, in accordance with section 4(a)(2) of this Act. The export of technology and related goods subject to export controls under this section shall be eligible for a comprehensive operations license in accordance with section 4(a)(2)(B) of this Act.".

(e) INDEXING.—Section 5(g) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) INDEXING.—In order to ensure that requirements for validated licenses and other licenses authorizing multiple exports are periodically removed as goods or technology subject to such requirements becomes obsolete with respect to the national security of the United States, regulations issued by the Secretary may, where appropriate, provide for annual increases in the performance levels of goods or technology subject to any such licensing requirement. The regulations issued by the Secretary shall establish as one criterion for the removal of goods or technology from such license requirements the anticipated needs of the military of controlled countries. Any such goods or technology which no longer meets the performance levels established by the regulations shall be removed from the list established pursuant to subsection (c) of this section unless, under such exceptions and under such procedures as the Secretary shall prescribe, any other department or agency of the United States objects to such removal and the Secretary determines, on the basis of such objection, that the goods or technology shall not be removed from the list. The Secretary shall also consider, where appropriate, removing site visitation requirements for goods and technology which are removed from the list unless objections described in this subsection are raised.".

(f) MULTILATERAL EXPORT CONTROLS.—Section 5(i) is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (3);

(2) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking out "(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(3)"; and

(B) by striking out "pursuant to paragraph (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "by the members of the Committee"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(4) Agreement to enhance full compliance by all parties with the export controls imposed by agreement of the Committee through the establishment of appropriate mechanisms.

"(5) Agreement to improve the International Control List and minimize the approval of exceptions to that list, strengthen enforcement and cooperation in enforcement efforts, provide sufficient funding for the Committee, and improve the structure and function of the Secretariat of the Committee by upgrading professional staff, translation services, data base maintenance, communications, and facilities.

"(6) Agreement to coordinate the systems of export control documents used by the participating governments in order to verify effectively the movement of goods or technology subject to controls by the Committee from the country of any such government to any other place.

"(7) Agreement to establish uniform, adequate criminal and civil penalties to deter more effectively diversions of items controlled for export by agreement of the Committee.

"(8) Agreement to increase on-site inspections by national enforcement authorities of the participating governments to ensure that end users who have imported items controlled for export by agreement of the Committee are using such items for the stated end uses, and that such items are, in fact, under the control of those end users.

"(9) Agreement to strengthen the Committee so that it functions effectively in controlling export trade in a manner that better protects the national security of each participant to the mutual benefit of all participants.".

(g) COMMERCIAL AGREEMENTS WITH CERTAIN COUNTRIES.—Section 5(j) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) COMMERCIAL AGREEMENTS WITH CERTAIN COUNTRIES.—(1) Any United States firm, enterprise, or other nongovernmental entity which enters into an agreement with any agency of the government of a controlled country, that calls for the encouragement of technical cooperation and that is intended to result in the export from the United States to the other party of unpublished technical data of United States origin, shall report to the Secretary the agreement with such agency in sufficient detail.

"(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply to colleges, universities, or other educational institutions.".

(h) NEGOTIATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES.—Section 5(k) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "conducting negotiations with other countries" the following: ", including those countries not participating in the group known as the Coordinating Committee,"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: "In cases where such negotiations produce agreements on export restrictions comparable in practice to those maintained by the Coordinating Committee, the Secretary shall treat exports, whether by individual or multiple licenses, to countries party to such agreements in the same manner as exports to members of the Coordinating Committee are treated, including the same manner as exports are treated under subsection (b)(2) of this section and section 10(o) of this Act.".

(i) DIVERSION OF CONTROLLED GOODS OR TECHNOLOGY.—Section 5(l) is amended to read as follows:

"(l) DIVERSION OF CONTROLLED GOODS OR TECHNOLOGY.—(1) Whenever there is reliable evidence, as determined by the Secretary, that goods or technology which were exported subject to national security controls under this section to a controlled country have been diverted to an unauthorized use or consignee in violation of the conditions of an export license, the Secretary for as long as that diversion continues—

"(A) shall deny all further exports, to or by the party or parties responsible for that diversion or who conspired in that diversion, of any goods or technology subject to national security controls under this section, regardless of whether such goods or technology are available from sources outside the United States; and

"(B) may take such additional actions under this Act with respect to the party or parties referred to in subparagraph (A) as the Secretary determines are appropriate in the circumstances to deter the further unauthorized use of the previously exported goods or technology.

"(2) As used in this subsection, the term 'unauthorized use' means the use of United States goods or technology in the design, production, or maintenance of any item on the United States Munitions List, or the military use of any item on the International Control List of the Coordinating Committee.".

(j) ADDITIONAL NATIONAL SECURITY PROVISIONS.—Section 5 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m) GOODS CONTAINING MICROPROCESSORS.—Export controls may not be imposed under this section on a good solely on the basis that the good contains an embedded microprocessor, if such microprocessor cannot be used or altered to perform functions other than those it performs in the good in which it is embedded. An export control may be imposed under this section on a good containing an embedded microprocessor referred to in the preceding sentence only on the basis that the functions of the good itself are such that the good, if exported, would make a significant contribution to the military potential of any other country or combination of countries which would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States.

"(n) SECURITY MEASURES.—The Secretary and the Commissioner of Customs, consistent with their authorities under section 12(a) of this Act, and in consultation with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, shall provide advice and technical assistance to persons engaged in the manufacture or handling of goods or technology subject to export controls under this section to develop security systems to prevent violations or evasions of those export controls.

"(o) RECORDKEEPING.—The Secretary, the Secretary of Defense, and any other department or agency consulted in connection with a license application under this Act or a revision of a list of goods or technology subject to export controls under this Act, shall make and keep records of their respective advice, recommendations, or decisions in connection with any such license application or revision, including the factual and analytical basis of the advice, recommendations, or decisions.

"(p) NATIONAL SECURITY CONTROL OFFICE.—To assist in carrying out the policy and other authorities and responsibilities of the Secretary of Defense under this section, there is established in the Department of Defense a National Security Control Office under the direction of the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy. The Secretary of Defense may delegate to that office such of those authorities and responsibilities, together with such ancillary functions, as the Secretary of Defense considers appropriate.

"(q) EXCLUSION FOR AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.—This section does not authorize export controls on agricultural commodities, including fats, oils, and animal hides and skins.".

SEC. 106. MILITARILY CRITICAL TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) Section 5(d) (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)—

(A) in subparagraph (B) by striking out "and" after "test equipment,";

(B) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (C);

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following:

"(D) keystone equipment which would reveal or give insight into the design and manufacture of a United States military system,"; and

(D) by striking out "countries to which exports are controlled under this section" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", or available in fact from sources outside the United States to, controlled countries"; and

(2) by striking out paragraphs (4) through (6) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(4) The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall integrate items on the list of militarily critical technologies into the control list in accordance with the requirements of subsection (c) of this section. The integration of items on the list of militarily critical technologies into the control list shall proceed with all deliberate speed. Any disagreement between the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense regarding the integration of an item on the list of militarily critical technologies into the control list shall be resolved by the President. Except in the case of a good or technology for which a validated license may be required under subsection (f)(4) or (h)(6) of this section, a good or technology shall be included on the control list only if the Secretary finds that controlled countries do not possess that good or technology, or a functionally equivalent good or technology, and the good or technology or functionally equivalent good or technology is not available in fact to a controlled country from sources outside the United States in sufficient quantity and of comparable quality so that the requirement of a validated license for the export of such good or technology is or would be ineffective in achieving the purpose set forth in subsection (a) of this section. The Secretary and the Secretary of Defense shall jointly submit a report to the Congress, not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985, on actions taken to carry out this paragraph. For the purposes of this paragraph, assessment of whether a good or technology is functionally equivalent shall include consideration of the factors described in subsection (f)(3) of this section.

"(5) The Secretary of Defense shall establish a procedure for reviewing the goods and technology on the list of militarily critical technologies at least annually for the purpose of removing from the list of militarily critical technologies any goods or technology that are no longer militarily critical. The Secretary of Defense may add to the list of militarily critical technologies any good or technology that the Secretary of Defense determines is militarily critical, consistent with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection. If the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense disagree as to whether any change in the list of militarily critical technologies by the addition or removal of a good or technology should also be made in the control list, consistent with the provisions of the fourth sentence of paragraph (4) of this subsection, the President shall resolve the disagreement.

"(6) The establishment of adequate export controls for militarily critical technology and keystone equipment shall be accompanied by suitable reductions in the controls on the products of that technology and equipment.

"(7) The Secretary of Defense shall, not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985, report to the Congress on efforts by the Department of Defense to assess the impact that the transfer of goods or technology on the list of militarily critical technologies to controlled countries has had or will have on the military capabilities of those countries.".

SEC. 107. FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.

(a) CONSULTATIONS ON FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—Section 5(f)(1) (50 U.S.C. App. 2404(f)(1)) is amended by inserting after "The Secretary, in consultation with" the following: "the Secretary of Defense and other".

(b) DETERMINATIONS OF FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—Section 5(f)(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The Secretary shall make a foreign availability determination under paragraph (1) or (2) on the Secretary's own initiative or upon receipt of an allegation from an export license applicant that such availability exists. In making any such determination, the Secretary shall accept the representations of applicants made in writing and supported by reasonable evidence, unless such representations are contradicted by reliable evidence, including scientific or physical examination, expert opinion based upon adequate factual information, or intelligence information. In making determinations of foreign availability, the Secretary may consider such factors as cost, reliability, the availability and reliability of spare parts and the cost and quality thereof, maintenance programs, durability, quality of end products produced by the item proposed for export, and scale of production. For purposes of this paragraph, 'evidence' may include such items as foreign manufacturers' catalogues, brochures, or operation or maintenance manuals, articles from reputable trade publications, photographs, and depositions based upon eyewitness accounts.".

(c) NEGOTIATIONS ON FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—Section 5(f)(4) is amended by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In any case in which export controls are maintained under this section notwithstanding foreign availability, on account of a determination by the President that the absence of the controls would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States, the President shall actively pursue negotiations with the governments of the appropriate foreign countries for the purpose of eliminating such availability. If, within 6 months after the President's determination, the foreign availability has not been eliminated, the Secretary may not, after the end of that 6-month period, require a validated license for the export of the goods or technology involved. The President may extend the 6-month period described in the preceding sentence for an additional period of 12 months if the President certifies to the Congress that the negotiations involved are progressing and that the absence of the export control involved would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States.".

(d) OFFICE OF FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 5(f)(5) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) The Secretary shall establish in the Department of Commerce an Office of Foreign Availability which, in the fiscal year 1985, shall be under the direction of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Trade Administration, and, in the fiscal year 1986 and thereafter, shall be under the direction of the Under Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration. The Office shall be responsible for gathering and analyzing all the necessary information in order for the Secretary to make determinations of foreign availability under this Act. The Secretary shall make available to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate at the end of each 6-month period during a fiscal year information on the operations of the Office, and on improvements in the Government's ability to assess foreign availability, during that 6-month period, including information on the training of personnel, the use of computers, and the use of Foreign Commercial Service officers. Such information shall also include a description of representative determinations made under this Act during that 6-month period that foreign availability did or did not exist (as the case may be), together with an explanation of such determinations.".

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 5(f)(6) is amended by striking out "Office of Export Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "Office of Foreign Availability".

(e) REGULATIONS ON FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—Section 5(f) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7) The Secretary shall issue regulations with respect to determinations of foreign availability under this Act not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985.".

(f) TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEES.—

(1) MEMBERSHIP.—Section 5(h)(1) is amended by inserting ", the intelligence community," after "Departments of Commerce, Defense, and State".

(2) MATTERS ON WHICH COMMITTEES CONSULTED.—Section 5(h)(2) is amended in the second sentence—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (C); and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence the following: ", and (E) any other questions relating to actions designed to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(A) of this Act.".

(3) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY CERTIFICATIONS.—Section 5(h)(6) is amended by striking out "and provides adequate documentation" and all that follows through the end of the paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the technical advisory committee shall submit that certification to the Congress at the same time the certification is made to the Secretary, together with the documentation for the certification. The Secretary shall investigate the foreign availability so certified and, not later than 90 days after the certification is made, shall submit a report to the technical advisory committee and the Congress stating that—

"(A) the Secretary has removed the requirement of a validated license for the export of the goods or technology, on account of the foreign availability,

"(B) the Secretary has recommended to the President that negotiations be conducted to eliminate the foreign availability, or

"(C) the Secretary has determined on the basis of the investigation that the foreign availability does not exist.

To the extent necessary, the report may be submitted on a classified basis. In any case in which the Secretary has recommended to the President that negotiations be conducted to eliminate the foreign availability, the President shall actively pursue such negotiations with the governments of the appropriate foreign countries. If, within 6 months after the Secretary submits such report to the Congress, the foreign availability has not been eliminated, the Secretary may not, after the end of that 6-month period, require a validated license for the export of the goods or technology involved. The President may extend the 6-month period described in the preceding sentence for an additional period of 12 months if the President certifies to the Congress that the negotiations involved are progressing and that the absence of the export control involved would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States.".

(i) STANDARD FOR FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—Subsections (f)(1), (f)(2), and (h)(6) of section 5 are each amended by striking out "sufficient quality" and inserting in lieu thereof "comparable quality".

(j) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—Subsections (f)(1), (f)(4), and (h)(6) of section 5 are each amended by striking out "countries to which exports are controlled under this section" and inserting in lieu thereof "controlled countries".

SEC. 108. FOREIGN POLICY CONTROLS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Section 6(a) (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking out "or (8)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(8), or (13)"; and

(B) by inserting in the second sentence after "Secretary of State" the following: ", the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury, the United States Trade Representative,";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (4) as paragraphs (3) through (5), respectively;

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Any export control imposed under this section shall apply to any transaction or activity undertaken with the intent to evade that export control, even if that export control would not otherwise apply to that transaction or activity."; and

(4) in paragraph (3), as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection, by striking out "(e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(f)".

(b) CRITERIA.—Section 6(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) CRITERIA.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the President may impose, extend, or expand export controls under this section only if the President determines that—

"(A) such controls are likely to achieve the intended foreign policy purpose, in light of other factors, including the availability from other countries of the goods or technology proposed for such controls, and that foreign policy purpose cannot be achieved through negotiations or other alternative means;

"(B) the proposed controls are compatible with the foreign policy objectives of the United States and with overall United States policy toward the country to which exports are to be subject to the proposed controls;

"(C) the reaction of other countries to the imposition, extension, or expansion of such export controls by the United States is not likely to render the controls ineffective in achieving the intended foreign policy purpose or to be counterproductive to United States foreign policy interests;

"(D) the effect of the proposed controls on the export performance of the United States, the competitive position of the United States in the international economy, the international reputation of the United States as a supplier of goods and technology, or on the economic well-being of individual United States companies and their employees and communities does not exceed the benefit to United States foreign policy objectives; and

"(E) the United States has the ability to enforce the proposed controls effectively.

"(2) With respect to those export controls in effect under this section on the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985, the President, in determining whether to extend those controls, as required by subsection (a)(3) of this section, shall consider the criteria set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection and shall consider the foreign policy consequences of modifying the export controls.".

(c) CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY.—Section 6(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY.—The Secretary in every possible instance shall consult with and seek advice from affected United States industries and appropriate advisory committees established under section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974 before imposing any export control under this section. Such consultation and advice shall be with respect to the criteria set forth in subsection (b)(1) and such other matters as the Secretary considers appropriate.".

(d) CONSULTATION WITH OTHER COUNTRIES.—Section 6 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (d) through (k) as subsections (e) through (l), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) CONSULTATION WITH OTHER COUNTRIES.—When imposing export controls under this section, the President shall, at the earliest appropriate opportunity, consult with the countries with which the United States maintains export controls cooperatively, and with such other countries as the President considers appropriate, with respect to the criteria set forth in subsection (b)(1) and such other matters as the President considers appropriate.".

(e) CONSULTATION WITH THE CONGRESS.—Section 6(f), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(f) CONSULTATION WITH THE CONGRESS.—(1) The President may impose or expand export controls under this section, or extend such controls as required by subsection (a)(3) of this section, only after consultation with the Congress, including the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate.

"(2) The President may not impose, expand, or extend export controls under this section until the President has submitted to the Congress a report—

"(A) specifying the purpose of the controls;

"(B) specifying the determinations of the President (or, in the case of those export controls described in subsection (b)(2), the considerations of the President) with respect to each of the criteria set forth in subsection (b)(1), the bases for such determinations (or considerations), and any possible adverse foreign policy consequences of the controls;

"(C) describing the nature, the subjects, and the results of, or the plans for, the consultation with industry pursuant to subsection (c) and with other countries pursuant to subsection (d);

"(D) specifying the nature and results of any alternative means attempted under subsection (e), or the reasons for imposing, expanding, or extending the controls without attempting any such alternative means; and

"(E) describing the availability from other countries of goods or technology comparable to the goods or technology subject to the proposed export controls, and describing the nature and results of the efforts made pursuant to subsection (h) to secure the cooperation of foreign governments in controlling the foreign availability of such comparable goods or technology.

Such report shall also indicate how such controls will further significantly the foreign policy of the United States or will further its declared international obligations.

"(3) To the extent necessary to further the effectiveness of the export controls, portions of a report required by paragraph (2) may be submitted to the Congress on a classified basis, and shall be subject to the provisions of section 12(c) of this Act. Each such report shall, at the same time it is submitted to the Congress, also be submitted to the General Accounting Office for the purpose of assessing the report's full compliance with the intent of this subsection.

"(4) In the case of export controls under this section which prohibit or curtail the export of any agricultural commodity, a report submitted pursuant to paragraph (2) shall be deemed to be the report required by section 7(g)(3)(A) of this Act.

"(5) In addition to any written report required under this section, the Secretary, not less frequently than annually, shall present in oral testimony before the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives a report on policies and actions taken by the Government to carry out the provisions of this section.".

(f) EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN ITEMS FROM FOREIGN POLICY CONTROLS.—Section 6(g), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "This section also does not authorize export controls on donations of goods (including, but not limited to, food, educational materials, seeds and hand tools, medicines and medical supplies, water resources equipment, clothing and shelter materials, and basic household supplies) that are intended to meet basic human needs."; and

(2) by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "This subsection shall not apply to any export control on medicine, medical supplies, or food, except for donations, which is in effect on the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985. Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the President may impose export controls under this section on medicine, medical supplies, food, and donations of goods in order to carry out the policy set forth in paragraph (13) of section 3 of this Act.".

(g) FOREIGN AVAILABILITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 6(h), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" immediately before the first sentence; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) Before extending any export control pursuant to subsection (a)(3) of this section, the President shall evaluate the results of his actions under paragraph (1) of this subsection and shall include the results of that evaluation in his report to the Congress pursuant to subsection (f) of this section.

"(3) If, within 6 months after the date on which export controls under this section are imposed or expanded, or within 6 months after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985 in the case of export controls in effect on such date of enactment, the President's efforts under paragraph (1) are not successful in securing the cooperation of foreign governments described in paragraph (1) with respect to those export controls, the Secretary shall thereafter take into account the foreign availability of the goods or technology subject to the export controls. If the Secretary affirmatively determines that a good or technology subject to the export controls is available in sufficient quantity and comparable quality from sources outside the United States to countries subject to the export controls so that denial of an export license would be ineffective in achieving the purposes of the controls, then the Secretary shall, during the period of such foreign availability, approve any license application which is required for the export of the good or technology and which meets all requirements for such a license. The Secretary shall remove the good or technology from the list established pursuant to subsection (l) of this section if the Secretary determines that such action is appropriate.

"(4) In making a determination of foreign availability under paragraph (3) of this subsection, the Secretary shall follow the procedures set forth in section 5(f)(3) of this Act.".

(2) AMENDMENTS NOT APPLICABLE TO CERTAIN EXISTING CONTROLS.—The amendments made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not apply to export controls in effect under subsection (i), (j), or (k) of section 6 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section) immediately before the date of the enactment of this Act, or to export controls made effective by subsection (i)(2) of this section or by section 6(n) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (as added by subsection (l)(1) of this section).

(h) INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS.—Section 6(i), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended by striking out "(f), and (g)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(e), (g), and (h)".

(i) COUNTRIES SUPPORTING INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 6(j), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(j) COUNTRIES SUPPORTING INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.—(1) The Secretary and the Secretary of State shall notify the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate at least 30 days before any license is approved for the export of goods or technology valued at more than $7,000,000 to any country concerning which the Secretary of State has made the following determinations:

"(A) Such country has repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism.

"(B) Such exports would make a significant contribution to the military potential of such country, including its military logistics capability, or would enhance the ability of such country to support acts of international terrorism.

"(2) Any determination which has been made with respect to a country under paragraph (1) of this subsection may not be rescinded unless the President, at least 30 days before the proposed rescission would take effect, submits to the Congress a report justifying the rescission and certifying that—

"(A) the country concerned has not provided support for international terrorism, including support or sanctuary for any major terrorist or terrorist group in its territory, during the preceding 6-month period; and

"(B) the country concerned has provided assurances that it will not support acts of international terrorism in the future.".

(2) APPLICABILITY TO PRIOR DETERMINATIONS.—Any determination with respect to any country which was made before January 1, 1982, under section 6(i) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as in effect before the date of the enactment of this Act, and which was no longer in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, shall be reinstated upon the expiration of 90 days after such date of enactment unless, within that 90-day period, the President submits a report under section 6(j)(2) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as amended by subsection (d) of this section and paragraph (1) of this subsection, containing the certification described in such section 6(j)(2) with respect to that country.

(j) CRIME CONTROL INSTRUMENTS.—

(1) CONCURRENCE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.—Section 6(k)(1), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

"(A) any determination of the Secretary of what goods or technology shall be included on the list established pursuant to subsection (l) of this section as a result of the export restrictions imposed by this subsection shall be made with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, and

"(B) any determination of the Secretary to approve or deny an export license application to export crime control or detection instruments or equipment shall be made in concurrence with the recommendations of the Secretary of State submitted to the Secretary with respect to the application pursuant to section 10(e) of this Act, except that, if the Secretary does not agree with the Secretary of State with respect to any determination under subparagraph (A) or (B), the matter shall be referred to the President for resolution.".

(2) APPLICABILITY OF AMENDMENT.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply to determinations of the Secretary of Commerce which are made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(k) CONTROL LIST.—Section 6(l), as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section, is amended—

(1) in the first sentence by striking out "commodity"; and

(2) by amending the second sentence to read as follows: "The Secretary shall clearly identify on the control list which goods or technology, and which countries or destinations, are subject to which types of controls under this section.".

(l) ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS ON FOREIGN POLICY CONTROLS.—

(1) CONTRACT SANCTITY, EXTENSION OF CERTAIN CONTROLS, AND EXPANDED AUTHORITY.—Section 6 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(m) EFFECT ON EXISTING CONTRACTS AND LICENSES.—The President may not, under this section, prohibit or curtail the export or reexport of goods, technology, or other information—

"(1) in performance of a contract or agreement entered into before the date on which the President reports to the Congress, pursuant to subsection (f) of this section, his intention to impose controls on the export or reexport of such goods, technology, or other information, or

"(2) under a validated license or other authorization issued under this Act, unless and until the President determines and certifies to the Congress that—

"(A) a breach of the peace poses a serious and direct threat to the strategic interest of the United States,

"(B) the prohibition or curtailment of such contracts, agreements, licenses, or authorizations will be instrumental in remedying the situation posing the direct threat, and

"(C) the export controls will continue only so long as the direct threat persists.

"(n) EXTENSION OF CERTAIN CONTROLS.—Those export controls imposed under this section with respect to South Africa which were in effect on February 28, 1982, and ceased to be effective on March 1, 1982, September 15, 1982, or January 20, 1983, shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this subsection, and shall remain in effect until 1 year after such date of enactment. At the end of that 1-year period, any of those controls made effective by this subsection may be extended by the President in accordance with subsections (b) and (f) of this section.

"(o) EXPANDED AUTHORITY TO IMPOSE CONTROLS.—(1) In any case in which the President determines that it is necessary to impose controls under this section without any limitation contained in subsection (c), (d), (e), (g), (h), or (m) of this section, the President may impose those controls only if the President submits that determination to the Congress, together with a report pursuant to subsection (f) of this section with respect to the proposed controls, and only if a law is enacted authorizing the imposition of those controls. If a joint resolution authorizing the imposition of those controls is introduced in either House of Congress within 30 days after the Congress receives the determination and report of the President, that joint resolution shall be referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and to the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives. If either such committee has not reported the joint resolution at the end of 30 days after its referral, the committee shall be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'joint resolution' means a joint resolution the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That the Congress, having received on a determination of the President under section 6(o)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 with respect to the export controls which are set forth in the report submitted to the Congress with that determination, authorizes the President to impose those export controls.', with the date of the receipt of the determination and report inserted in the blank.

"(3) In the computation of the periods of 30 days referred to in paragraph (1), there shall be excluded the days on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain or because of an adjournment of the Congress sine die.".

(2) APPLICABILITY OF AMENDMENTS.—Subsections (m) and (o) of section 6 of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as added by paragraph (1) of this subsection, shall not apply to export controls in effect immediately before the date of the enactment of this Act, or to export controls made effective by subsection (i)(2) of this section or by section 6(n) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (as added by paragraph (1) of this subsection).

SEC. 109. PETITIONS FOR MONITORING OR SHORT SUPPLY CONTROLS.

Section 7(c) (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) PETITIONS FOR MONITORING OR CONTROLS.—(1)(A) Any entity, including a trade association, firm, or certified or recognized union or group of workers, that is representative of an industry or a substantial segment of an industry that processes metallic materials capable of being recycled may transmit a written petition to the Secretary requesting the monitoring of exports or the imposition of export controls, or both, with respect to any such material, in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act.

"(B) Each petition shall be in such form as the Secretary shall prescribe and shall contain information in support of the action requested. The petition shall include any information reasonably available to the petitioner indicating that each of the criteria set forth in paragraph (3)(A) of this subsection is satisfied.

"(2) Within 15 days after receipt of any petition described in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall publish a notice in the Federal Register. The notice shall—

"(A) include the name of the material that is the subject of the petition,

"(B) include the Schedule B number of the material as set forth in the Statistical Classification of Domestic and Foreign Commodities Exported from the United States,

"(C) indicate whether the petitioner is requesting that controls or monitoring, or both, be imposed with respect to the exportation of such material, and

"(D) provide that interested persons shall have a period of 30 days beginning on the date of publication of such notice to submit to the Secretary written data, views or arguments, with or without opportunity for oral presentation, with respect to the matter involved.

At the request of the petitioner or any other entity described in paragraph (1)(A) with respect to the material that is the subject of the petition, or at the request of any entity representative of producers or exporters of such material, the Secretary shall conduct public hearings with respect to the subject of the petition, in which case the 30-day period may be extended to 45 days.

"(3)(A) Within 45 days after the end of the 30- or 45-day period described in paragraph (2), as the case may be, the Secretary shall determine whether to impose monitoring or controls, or both, on the export of the material that is the subject of the petition, in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act. In making such determination, the Secretary shall determine whether—

"(i) there has been a significant increase, in relation to a specific period of time, in exports of such material in relation to domestic supply and demand;

"(ii) there has been a significant increase in the domestic price of such material or a domestic shortage of such material relative to demand;

"(iii) exports of such material are as important as any other cause of a domestic price increase or shortage relative to demand found under clause (ii);

"(iv) a domestic price increase or shortage relative to demand found under clause (ii) has significantly adversely affected or may significantly adversely affect the national economy or any sector thereof, including a domestic industry; and

"(v) monitoring or controls, or both, are necessary in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act.

"(B) The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a detailed statement of the reasons for the Secretary's determination pursuant to subparagraph (A) of whether to impose monitoring or controls, or both, including the findings of fact in support of that determination.

"(4) Within 15 days after making a determination under paragraph (3) to impose monitoring or controls on the export of a material; the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register proposed regulations with respect to such monitoring or controls. Within 30 days after the publication of such proposed regulations, and after considering any public comments on the proposed regulations, the Secretary shall publish and implement final regulations with respect to such monitoring or controls.

"(5) For purposes of publishing notices in the Federal Register and scheduling public hearings pursuant to this subsection, the Secretary may consolidate petitions, and responses to such petitions, which involve the same or related materials.

"(6) If a petition with respect to a particular material or group of materials has been considered in accordance with all the procedures prescribed in this subsection, the Secretary may determine, in the absence of significantly changed circumstances, that any other petition with respect to the same material or group of materials which is filed within 6 months after the consideration of the prior petition has been completed does not merit complete consideration under this subsection.

"(7) The procedures and time limits set forth in this subsection with respect to a petition filed under this subsection shall take precedence over any review undertaken at the initiative of the Secretary with respect to the same subject as that of the petition.

"(8) The Secretary may impose monitoring or controls, on a temporary basis, on the export of a metallic material after a petition is filed under paragraph (1)(A) with respect to that material but before the Secretary makes a determination under paragraph (3) with respect to that material only if—

"(A) the failure to take such temporary action would result in irreparable harm to the entity filing the petition, or to the national economy or segment thereof, including a domestic industry, and

"(B) the Secretary considers such action to be necessary to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act.

"(9) The authority under this subsection shall not be construed to affect the authority of the Secretary under any other provision of this Act, except that if the Secretary determines, on the Secretary's own initiative, to impose monitoring or controls, or both, on the export of metallic materials capable of being recycled, under the authority of this section, the Secretary shall publish the reasons for such action in accordance with paragraph (3) (A) and (B) of this subsection.

"(10) Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to preclude submission on a confidential basis to the Secretary of information relevant to a decision to impose or remove monitoring or controls under the authority of this Act, or to preclude consideration of such information by the Secretary in reaching decisions required under this subsection. The provisions of this paragraph shall not be construed to affect the applicability of section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code.".

SEC. 110. SHORT SUPPLY CONTROLS.

(a) DOMESTICALLY PRODUCED CRUDE OIL.—Section 7(d) (50 U.S.C. App. 2406(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking out "unless" and all that follows through "met" and inserting in lieu thereof "subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection";

(2) in paragraph (2)(A) by striking out "makes and publishes" and inserting in lieu thereof "so recommends to the Congress after making and publishing";

(3) in paragraph (2)(B)—

(A) by striking out "reports such findings" and inserting in lieu thereof "includes such findings in his recommendation"; and

(B) by striking out "thereafter" and all that follows through the end of the sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "after receiving that recommendation, agrees to a joint resolution which approves such exports on the basis of those findings, and which is thereafter enacted into law."; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 20 of this Act, the provisions of this subsection shall expire on September 30, 1990.".

(b) REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS.—Section 7(e)(1) is amended in the first sentence by striking out "No" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In any case in which the President determines that it is necessary to impose export controls on refined petroleum products in order to carry out the policy set forth in section 3(2)(C) of this Act, the President shall notify the Congress of that determination. The President shall also notify the Congress if and when he determines that such export controls are no longer necessary. During any period in which a determination that such export controls are necessary is in effect, no".

(c) UNPROCESSED RED CEDAR.—Section 7(i) is amended—

(1) in the last sentence of paragraph (1) by inserting "harvested from State or Federal lands" after "red cedar logs";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) as paragraphs (3), (4), and (5), respectively;

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) To the maximum extent practicable, the Secretary shall utilize the multiple validated export licenses described in section 4(a)(2) of this Act in lieu of validated licenses for exports under this subsection."; and

(4) by amending paragraph (5)(A), as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection, to read as follows:

"(A) lumber of American Lumber Standards Grades of Number 3 dimension or better, or Pacific Lumber Inspection Bureau Export R-List Grades of Number 3 common or better;".

(d) AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.—Section 7(g)(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) If the President imposes export controls on any agricultural commodity in order to carry out the policy set forth in paragraph (2)(B), (2)(C), (7), or (8) of section 3 of this Act, the President shall immediately transmit a report on such action to the Congress, setting forth the reasons for the controls in detail and specifying the period of time, which may not exceed 1 year, that the controls are proposed to be in effect. If the Congress, within 60 days after the date of its receipt of the report, adopts a joint resolution pursuant to paragraph (4) approving the imposition of the export controls, then such controls shall remain in effect for the period specified in the report, or until terminated by the President, whichever occurs first. If the Congress, within 60 days after the date of its receipt of such report, fails to adopt a joint resolution approving such controls, then such controls shall cease to be effective upon the expiration of that 60-day period.

"(B) The provisions of subparagraph (A) and paragraph (4) shall not apply to export controls—

"(i) which are extended under this Act if the controls, when imposed, were approved by the Congress under subparagraph (A) and paragraph (4); or

"(ii) which are imposed with respect to a country as part of the prohibition or curtailment of all exports to that country.

"(4)(A) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'joint resolution' means only a joint resolution the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That, pursuant to section 7(g)(3) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, the President may impose export controls as specified in the report submitted to the Congress on .', with the blank space being filled with the appropriate date.

"(B) On the day on which a report is submitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate under paragraph (3), a joint resolution with respect to the export controls specified in such report shall be introduced (by request) in the House by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for himself and the ranking minority member of the Committee, or by Members of the House designated by the chairman and ranking minority member; and shall be introduced (by request) in the Senate by the majority leader of the Senate, for himself and the minority leader of the Senate, or by Members of the Senate designated by the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate. If either House is not in session on the day on which such a report is submitted, the joint resolution shall be introduced in that House, as provided in the preceding sentence, on the first day thereafter on which that House is in session.

"(C) All joint resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives shall be referred to the appropriate committee and all joint resolutions introduced in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

"(D) If the committee of either House to which a joint resolution has been referred has not reported the joint resolution at the end of 30 days after its referral, the committee shall be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution or of any other joint resolution introduced with respect to the same matter.

"(E) A joint resolution under this paragraph shall be considered in the Senate in accordance with the provisions of section 601(b)(4) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976. For the purpose of expediting the consideration and passage of joint resolutions reported or discharged pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph, it shall be in order for the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives to present for consideration a resolution of the House of Representatives providing procedures for the immediate consideration of a joint resolution under this paragraph which may be similar, if applicable, to the procedures set forth in section 601(b)(4) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976.

"(F) In the case of a joint resolution described in subparagraph (A), if, before the passage by one House of a joint resolution of that House, that House receives a resolution with respect to the same matter from the other House, then—

"(i) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no joint resolution had been received from the other House; but

"(ii) the vote on final passage shall be on the joint resolution of the other House.

"(5) In the computation of the period of 60 days referred to in paragraph (3) and the period of 30 days referred to in subparagraph (D) of paragraph (4), there shall be excluded the days on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain or because of an adjournment of the Congress sine die.".

(e) CONTRACT SANCTITY.—Section 7 is amended by striking out subsection (j) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(j) EFFECT OF CONTROLS ON EXISTING CONTRACTS.—The export restrictions contained in subsection (i) of this section and any export controls imposed under this section shall not affect any contract to harvest unprocessed western red cedar from State lands which was entered into before October 1, 1979, and the performance of which would make the red cedar available for export. Any export controls imposed under this section on any agricultural commodity (including fats, oils, and animal hides and skins) or on any forest product or fishery product, shall not affect any contract to export entered into before the date on which such controls are imposed. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'contract to export' includes, but is not limited to, an export sales agreement and an agreement to invest in an enterprise which involves the export of goods or technology.".

SEC. 111. LICENSING PROCEDURES.

(a) REDUCTION OF PROCESSING TIME.—Section 10 (50 U.S.C. App. 2409) is amended—

(1) by striking out "60" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "40";

(2) by striking out "90" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "60"; and

(3) by striking out "30" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "20".

(b) AMENDMENTS WITH REGARD TO EXPORTS TO COCOM COUNTRIES.—

(1) ACTION ON APPLICATIONS NOT REFERRED TO OTHER DEPARTMENTS OR AGENCIES.—Section 10(c) is amended by striking out "In each case" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in subsection (o), in each case".

(2) REFERRALS TO OTHER DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES.—Section 10(d) is amended—

(A) by striking out "In each case" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except in the case of exports described in subsection (o), in each case"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following: "Notwithstanding the 10-day period set forth in subsection (b), in the case of exports described in subsection (o), in each case in which the Secretary determines that it is necessary to refer an application to any other department or agency for its information and recommendations, the Secretary shall, immediately upon receipt of the properly completed application, refer the application to such department or agency for its review. Such review shall be concurrent with that of the Department of Commerce.".

(3) ACTION BY OTHER DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES.—Section 10(e) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Any department or agency to which an application is referred pursuant to subsection (d) shall submit to the Secretary the information or recommendations requested with respect to the application. The information or recommendations shall be submitted within 20 days after the department or agency receives the application or, in the case of exports described in subsection (o), before the expiration of the time periods permitted by that subsection."; and

(i) by striking out "If the head" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) Except in the case of exports described in subsection (o), if the head", and

(ii) by adding at the end the following:

"(B) In the case of exports described in subsection (o), if the head of any such department or agency notifies the Secretary, before the expiration of the 15-day period provided in subsection (o)(1), that more time is required for review by such department or agency, the Secretary shall notify the applicant, pursuant to subsection (o)(1)(C), that additional time is required to consider the application, and such department or agency shall have additional time to consider the application within the limits permitted by subsection (o)(2). If such department or agency does not submit its recommendations within the time periods permitted under subsection (o), it shall be deemed by the Secretary to have no objection to the approval of such application.".

(4) ACTION BY THE SECRETARY.—Section 10(f) is amended in paragraphs (1) and (4) by adding at the end of each such paragraph the following: "The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply in the case of exports described in subsection (o).".

(c) RIGHT OF APPLICANT TO RESPOND TO NEGATIVE RECOMMENDATIONS.—Section 10(f)(2) is amended—

(1) by inserting "in writing" after "inform the applicant"; and

(2) by striking out ", and shall accord" and all that follows through the end of the paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ". Before a final determination with respect to the application is made, the applicant shall be entitled—

"(A) to respond in writing to such questions, considerations, or recommendations within 30 days after receipt of such information from the Secretary; and

"(B) upon the filing of a written request with the Secretary within 15 days after the receipt of such information, to respond in person to the department or agency raising such questions, considerations, or recommendations.

The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply in the case of exports described in subsection (o).".

(d) RIGHTS OF APPLICANT WITH RESPECT TO PROPOSED DENIAL.—Section 10(f)(3) is amended by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In cases where the Secretary has determined that an application should be denied, the applicant shall be informed in writing, within 5 days after such determination is made, of—

"(A) the determination,

"(B) the statutory basis for the proposed denial,

"(C) the policies set forth in section 3 of this Act which would be furthered by the proposed denial,

"(D) what if any modifications in or restrictions on the goods or technology for which the license was sought would allow such export to be compatible with export controls imposed under this Act,

"(E) which officers and employees of the Department of Commerce who are familiar with the application will be made reasonably available to the applicant for considerations with regard to such modifications or restrictions, if appropriate,

"(F) to the extent consistent with the national security and foreign policy of the United States, the specific considerations which led to the determination to deny the application, and

"(G) the availability of appeal procedures. The Secretary shall allow the applicant at least 30 days to respond to the Secretary's determination before the license application is denied.".

(e) ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS.—Section 10 is amended—

(1) in the section heading by adding "; OTHER INQUIRIES" after "APPLICATIONS"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(k) CHANGES IN REQUIREMENTS FOR APPLICATIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (b)(3) of this section, in any case in which, after a license application is submitted, the Secretary changes the requirements for such a license application, the Secretary may request appropriate additional information of the applicant, but the Secretary may not return the application to the applicant without action because it fails to meet the changed requirements.

"(l) OTHER INQUIRIES.—(1) In any case in which the Secretary receives a written request asking for the proper classification of a good or technology on the control list, the Secretary shall, within 10 working days after receipt of the request, inform the person making the request of the proper classification.

"(2) In any case in which the Secretary receives a written request for information about the applicability of export license requirements under this Act to a proposed export transaction or series of transactions, the Secretary shall, within 30 days after receipt of the request, reply with that information to the person making the request.

"(m) SMALL BUSINESS ASSISTANCE.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall develop and transmit to the Congress a plan to assist small businesses in the export licensing application process under this Act. The plan shall include, among other things, arrangements for counseling small businesses on filing applications and identifying goods or technology on the control list, proposals for seminars and conferences to educate small businesses on export controls and licensing procedures, and the preparation of informational brochures.

"(n) REPORTS ON LICENSE APPLICATIONS.—(1) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this subsection, and not later than the end of each 3-month period thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate a report listing—

"(A) all applications on which action was completed during the preceding 3-month period and which required a period longer than the period permitted under subsection (c), (f)(1), or (h) of this section, as the case may be, before notification of a decision to approve or deny the application was sent to the applicant; and

"(B) in a separate section, all applications which have been in process for a period longer than the period permitted under subsection (c), (f)(1), or (h) of this section, as the case may be, and upon which final action has not been taken.

"(2) With regard to each application, each listing shall identify—

"(A) the application case number;

"(B) the value of the goods or technology to which the application relates;

"(C) the country of destination of the goods or technology;

"(D) the date on which the application was received by the Secretary;

"(E) the date on which the Secretary approved or denied the application;

"(F) the date on which the notification of approval or denial of the application was sent to the applicant; and

"(G) the total number of days which elapsed between receipt of the application, in its properly completed form, and the earlier of the last day of the 3-month period to which the report relates, or the date on which notification of approval or denial of the application was sent to the applicant.

"(3) With respect to an application which was referred to other departments or agencies, the listing shall also include—

"(A) the departments or agencies to which the application was referred;

"(B) the date or dates of such referral; and

"(C) the date or dates on which recommendations were received from those departments or agencies.

"(4) With respect to an application referred to any other department or agency which did not submit or has not submitted its recommendations on the application within the period permitted under subsection (e) of this section to submit such recommendations, the listing shall also include—

"(A) the office responsible for processing the application and the position of the officer responsible for the office; and

"(B) the period of time that elapsed before the recommendations were submitted or that has elapsed since referral of the application, as the case may be.

"(5) Each report shall also provide an introduction which contains—

"(A) a summary of the number of applications described in paragraph (1)(A) and (B) of this subsection, and the value of the goods or technology involved in the applications, grouped according to—

"(i) the number of days which elapsed before action on the applications was completed, or which has elapsed without action on the applications being completed, as follows: 61 to 75 days, 76 to 90 days, 91 to 105 days, 106 to 120 days, and more than 120 days; and

"(ii) the number of days which elapsed before action on the applications was completed, or which has elapsed without action on the applications being completed, beyond the period permitted under subsection (c), (f)(1), or (h) of this section for the processing of applications, as follows: not more than 15 days, 16 to 30 days, 31 to 45 days, 46 to 60 days, and more than 60 days; and

"(B) a summary by country of destination of the number of applications described in paragraph (1)(A) and (B) of this subsection, and the value of the goods or technology involved in the applications, on which action was not completed within 60 days.

"(o) EXPORTS TO MEMBERS OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE.—(1) Fifteen working days after the date of formal filing with the Secretary of an individual validated license application for the export of goods or technology to a country that maintains export controls on such goods or technology pursuant to the agreement of the governments participating in the group known as the Coordinating Committee, a license for the transaction specified in the application shall become valid and effective and the goods or technology are authorized for export pursuant to such license unless—

"(A) the application has been otherwise approved by the Secretary, in which case it shall be valid and effective according to the terms of the approval;

"(B) the application has been denied by the Secretary pursuant to this section and the applicant has been so informed, or the applicant has been informed, pursuant to subsection (f)(3) of this section, that the application should be denied; or

"(C) the Secretary requires additional time to consider the application and the applicant has been so informed.

"(2) In the event that the Secretary notifies an applicant pursuant to paragraph (1)(C) that more time is required to consider an individual validated license application, a license for the transaction specified in the application shall become valid and effective and the goods or technology are authorized for export pursuant to such license 30 working days after the date that such license application was formally filed with the Secretary unless—

"(A) the application has been otherwise approved by the Secretary, in which case it shall be valid and effective according to the terms of the approval; or

"(B) the application has been denied by the Secretary pursuant to this section and the applicant has been so informed, or the applicant has been informed, pursuant to subsection (f)(3) of this section, that the application should be denied.

"(3) In reviewing an individual license application subject to this subsection, the Secretary shall evaluate the information set forth in the application and the reliability of the end-user.

"(4) Nothing in this subsection shall affect the scope or availability of licenses authorizing multiple exports set forth in section 4(a)(2) of this Act.

"(5) The provisions of this subsection shall take effect 4 months after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985.".

SEC. 112. VIOLATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 11(a) (50 U.S.C. App. 2410(a)) is amended by inserting after "violates" the following: "or conspires to or attempts to violate".

(b) WILLFUL VIOLATIONS.—Section 11(b) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking out "exports anything contrary to" and inserting in lieu thereof "violates or conspires to or attempts to violate";

(B) by striking out "such exports" and inserting in lieu thereof "the exports involved";

(C) by inserting after "benefit of" the following: ", or that the destination or intended destination of the goods or technology involved is,"; and

(D) by striking out "country to which exports are restricted for national security or" and inserting in lieu thereof "controlled country or any country to which exports are controlled for";

(2) in paragraph (2) by striking out the last sentence; and

(3) by adding after paragraph (2) the following new paragraphs:

"(3) Any person who possesses any goods or technology—

"(A) with the intent to export such goods or technology in violation of an export control imposed under section 5 or 6 of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued with respect to such control, or

"(B) knowing or having reason to believe that the goods or technology would be so exported, shall, in the case of a violation of an export control imposed under section 5 (or any regulation, order, or license issued with respect to such control), be subject to the penalties set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection and shall, in the case of a violation of an export control imposed under section 6 (or any regulation, order, or license issued with respect to such control), be subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a).

"(4) Any person who takes any action with the intent to evade the provisions of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued under this Act shall be subject to the penalties set forth in subsection (a), except that in the case of an evasion of an export control imposed under section 5 or 6 of this Act (or any regulation, order, or license issued with respect to such control), such person shall be subject to the penalties set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(5) Nothing in this subsection or subsection (a) shall limit the power of the Secretary to define by regulations violations under this Act.".

(c) CIVIL PENALTIES; ADMINISTRATIVE SANCTIONS.—Section 11(c) is amended—

(1) by striking out "head" and all that follows in paragraph (1) through "thereof," and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary (and officers and employees of the Department of Commerce specifically designated by the Secretary)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(3) An exception may not be made to any order issued under this Act which revokes the authority of a United States person to export goods or technology unless the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate are first consulted concerning the exception.

"(4) The President may by regulation provide standards for establishing levels of civil penalty provided in this subsection based upon the seriousness of the violation, the culpability of the violator, and the violator's record of cooperation with the Government in disclosing the violation.".

(d) REFUNDS OF PENALTIES.—Section 11(e) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "subsection (c)" the following: ", or any amounts realized from the forfeiture of any property interest or proceeds pursuant to subsection (g),"; and

(2) by inserting after "refund any such penalty" the following: "imposed pursuant to subsection (c)".

(e) FORFEITURES; PRIOR CONVICTIONS.—Section 11 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (i); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsections:

"(g) FORFEITURE OF PROPERTY INTEREST AND PROCEEDS.—(1) Any person who is convicted under subsection (a) or (b) of a violation of an export control imposed under section 5 of this Act (or any regulation, order, or license issued with respect to such control) shall, in addition to any other penalty, forfeit to the United States—

"(A) any of that person's interest in, security of, claim against, or property or contractual rights of any kind in the goods or tangible items that were the subject of the violation;

"(B) any of that person's interest in, security of, claim against, or property or contractual rights of any kind in tangible property that was used in the export or attempt to export that was the subject of the violation; and

"(C) any of that person's property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds obtained directly or indirectly as a result of the violation.

"(2) The procedures in any forfeiture under this subsection, and the duties and authority of the courts of the United States and the Attorney General with respect to any forfeiture action under this subsection or with respect to any property that may be subject to forfeiture under this subsection, shall be governed by the provisions of section 1963 of title 18, United States Code.

"(h) PRIOR CONVICTIONS.—No person convicted of a violation of section 793, 794, or 798 of title 18, United States Code, section 4(b) of the Internal Security Act of 1950 (50 U.S.C. 783(b)), or section 38 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2778) shall be eligible, at the discretion of the Secretary, to apply for or use any export license under this Act for a period of up to 10 years from the date of the conviction. The Secretary may revoke any export license under this Act in which such person has an interest at the time of the conviction.".

(f) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 11(i), as redesignated by subsection (e) of this section, is amended by striking out "or (f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(f), (g), or (h)".

SEC. 113. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Section 12(a) (50 U.S.C. App. 2411(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately before the first sentence;

(2) by striking out "such investigations and" and inserting in lieu thereof "such investigations within the United States, and the Commissioner of Customs (and officers or employees of the United States Customs Service specifically designated by the Commissioner) may make such investigations outside of the United States, and the head of such department or agency (and such officers or employees) may";

(3) by striking out "the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application, and" and inserting in lieu thereof "a district court of the United States,";

(4) by adding at the end the following new sentence: "In addition to the authority conferred by this paragraph, the Secretary (and officers or employees of the Department of Commerce designated by the Secretary) may conduct, outside the United States, pre-license investigations and post-shipment verifications of items licensed for export, and investigations in the enforcement of section 8 of this Act."; and

(5) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the United States Customs Service is authorized, in the enforcement of this Act, to search, detain (after search), and seize goods or technology at those ports of entry or exit from the United States where officers of the Customs Service are authorized by law to conduct such searches, detentions, and seizures, and at those places outside the United States where the Customs Service, pursuant to agreements or other arrangements with other countries, is authorized to perform enforcement activities.

"(B) An officer of the United States Customs Service may do the following in carrying out enforcement authority under this Act:

"(i) Stop, search, and examine a vehicle, vessel, aircraft, or person on which or whom such officer has reasonable cause to suspect there are any goods or technology that has been, is being, or is about to be exported from the United States in violation of this Act.

"(ii) Search any package or container in which such officer has reasonable cause to suspect there are any goods or technology that has been, is being, or is about to be exported from the United States in violation of this Act.

"(iii) Detain (after search) or seize and secure for trial any goods or technology on or about such vehicle, vessel, aircraft, or person, or in such package or container, if such officer has probable cause to believe the goods or technology has been, is being, or is about to be exported from the United States in violation of this Act.

"(iv) Make arrests without warrant for any violation of this Act committed in his or her presence or view or if the officer has probable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing such a violation.

The arrest authority conferred by clause (iv) of this subparagraph is in addition to any arrest authority under other laws.

"(3)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the Secretary shall have the responsibility for the enforcement of section 8 of this Act and, in the enforcement of the other provisions of this Act, the Secretary is authorized to search, detain (after search), and seize goods or technology at those places within the United States other than those ports specified in paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection. The search, detention (after search), or seizure of goods or technology at those ports and places specified in paragraph (2)(A) may be conducted by officers or employees of the Department of Commerce designated by the Secretary with the concurrence of the Commissioner of Customs or a person designated by the Commissioner.

"(B) The Secretary may designate any employee of the Office of Export Enforcement of the Department of Commerce to do the following in carrying out enforcement authority under this Act:

"(i) Execute any warrant or other process issued by a court or officer of competent jurisdiction with respect to the enforcement of the provisions of this Act.

"(ii) Make arrests without warrant for any violation of this Act committed in his or her presence or view, or if the officer or employee has probable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing such a violation.

"(iii) Carry firearms in carrying out any activity described in clause (i) or (ii).

"(4) The authorities conferred by paragraphs (2) and (3) shall be exercised pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Attorney General concerning searches, detentions, stops, examinations, seizures, arrests, execution of warrants, or use of firearms.

"(5) All cases involving violations of this Act shall be referred to the Secretary for purposes of determining civil penalties and administrative sanctions under section 11(c) of this Act, or to the Attorney General for criminal action in accordance with this Act.

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the United States Customs Service may expend in the enforcement of export controls under this Act not more than $12,000,000 in the fiscal year 1985 and not more than $14,000,000 in the fiscal year 1986.

"(7) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985, the Secretary, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall publish in the Federal Register procedures setting forth, in accordance with this subsection, the responsibilities of the Department of Commerce and the United States Customs Service in the enforcement of this Act. In addition, the Secretary, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, may publish procedures for the sharing of information in accordance with subsection (c)(3) of this section, and procedures for the submission to the appropriate departments and agencies by private persons of information relating to the enforcement of this Act.

"(8) For purposes of this section, a reference to the enforcement of this Act or to a violation of this Act includes a reference to the enforcement or a violation of any regulation, order, or license issued under this Act.".

(b) CONFIDENTIALITY.—Section 12(c)(3) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Departments or agencies which obtain" and inserting in lieu thereof "Any department or agency which obtains";

(2) by inserting ", including information pertaining to any investigation," after "enforcement of this Act";

(3) by striking out "the department" and inserting in lieu thereof "each department"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following: "The Secretary and the Commissioner of Customs, upon request, shall exchange any licensing and enforcement information with each other which is necessary to facilitate enforcement efforts and effective license decisions. The Secretary, the Attorney General, and the Commissioner of Customs shall consult on a continuing basis with one another and with the heads of other departments and agencies which obtain information subject to this paragraph, in order to facilitate the exchange of such information.".

SEC. 114. ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE.

Section 13 (50 U.S.C. App. 2412) is amended—

(1) in the section heading by striking out "EXEMPTION FROM CERTAIN PROVISIONS RELATING TO";

(2) in subsection (a) by inserting "and subsection (c) of this section" after "11(c)(2)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(c) PROCEDURES RELATING TO CIVIL PENALTIES AND SANCTIONS.—(1) In any case in which a civil penalty or other civil sanction (other than a temporary denial order or a penalty or sanction for a violation of section 8) is sought under section 11 of this Act, the charged party is entitled to receive a formal complaint specifying the charges and, at his or her request, to contest the charges in a hearing before an administrative law judge. Subject to the provisions of this subsection, any such hearing shall be conducted in accordance with sections 556 and 557 of title 5, United States Code. With the approval of the administrative law judge, the Government may present evidence in camera in the presence of the charged party or his or her representative. After the hearing, the administrative law judge shall make findings of fact and conclusions of law in a written decision, which shall be referred to the Secretary. The Secretary shall, in a written order, affirm, modify, or vacate the decision of the administrative law judge within 30 days after receiving the decision. The order of the Secretary shall be final and is not subject to judicial review.

"(2) The proceedings described in paragraph (1) shall be concluded within a period of 1 year after the complaint is submitted, unless the administrative law judge extends such period for good cause shown.

"(d) IMPOSITION OF TEMPORARY DENIAL ORDERS.—(1) In any case in which it is necessary, in the public interest, to prevent an imminent violation of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued under this Act, the Secretary may, without a hearing, issue an order temporarily denying United States export privileges (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as a 'temporary denial order') to a person. A temporary denial order may be effective no longer than 60 days unless renewed in writing by the Secretary for additional 60-day periods in order to prevent such an imminent violation, except that a temporary denial order may be renewed only after notice and an opportunity for a hearing is provided.

"(2) A temporary denial order shall define the imminent violation and state why the temporary denial order was granted without a hearing. The person or persons subject to the issuance or renewal of a temporary denial order may file an appeal of the issuance or renewal of the temporary denial order with an administrative law judge who shall, within 10 working days after the appeal is filed, recommend that the temporary denial order be affirmed, modified, or vacated. Parties may submit briefs and other material to the judge. The recommendation of the administrative law judge shall be submitted to the Secretary who shall either accept, reject, or modify the recommendation by written order within 5 working days after receiving the recommendation. The written order of the Secretary under the preceding sentence shall be final and is not subject to judicial review. The temporary denial order shall be affirmed only if it is reasonable to believe that the order is required in the public interest to prevent an imminent violation of this Act or any regulation, order, or license issued under this Act.

"(e) APPEALS FROM LICENSE DENIALS.—A determination of the Secretary, under section 10(f) of this Act, to deny a license may be appealed by the applicant to an administrative law judge who shall have the authority to conduct proceedings to determine only whether the item sought to be exported is in fact on the control list. Such proceedings shall be conducted within 90 days after the appeal is filed. Any determination by an administrative law judge under this subsection and all materials filed before such judge in the proceedings shall be reviewed by the Secretary, who shall either affirm or vacate the determination in a written decision within 30 days after receiving the determination. The Secretary's written decision shall be final and is not subject to judicial review. Subject to the limitations provided in section 12(c) of this Act, the Secretary's decision shall be published in the Federal Register.".

SEC. 115. ANNUAL REPORT.

(a) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—Section 14(a)(15) (50 U.S.C. App. 2413(a)(15)) is amended by striking out "an analysis" and all that follows through "process, and".

(b) ADDITIONAL REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 14 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) REPORT ON EXPORTS TO CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—The Secretary shall include in each annual report a detailed report which lists every license for exports to controlled countries which was approved under this Act during the preceding fiscal year. Such report shall specify to whom the license was granted, the type of goods or technology exported, and the country receiving the goods or technology. The information required by this subsection shall be subject to the provisions of section 12(c) of this Act.

"(e) REPORT ON DOMESTIC ECONOMIC IMPACT OF EXPORTS TO CONTROLLED COUNTRIES.—The Secretary shall include in each annual report a detailed description of the extent of injury to United States industry and the extent of job displacement caused by United States exports of goods and technology to controlled countries. The annual report shall also include a full analysis of the consequences of exports of turnkey plants and manufacturing facilities to controlled countries which are used by such countries to produce goods for export to the United States or to compete with United States products in export markets.".

SEC. 116. UNDER SECRETARY OF COMMERCE FOR EXPORT ADMINISTRATION; REGULATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 15 (50 U.S.C. App. 2414) is amended to read as follows:

"ADMINISTRATIVE AND REGULATORY AUTHORITY

"SEC. 15. (a) UNDER SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.—The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Under Secretary of Commerce for Export Administration who shall carry out all functions of the Secretary under this Act which were delegated to the office of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Trade Administration before the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985, and such other functions under this Act which were delegated to such office before such date of enactment, as the Secretary may delegate. The Secretary shall designate three Assistant Secretaries of Commerce to assist the Under Secretary in carrying out such functions.

"(b) ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS.—The President and the Secretary may issue such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any such regulations issued to carry out the provisions of section 5(a), 6(a), 7(a), or 8(b) may apply to the financing, transporting, or other servicing of exports and the participation therein by any person. Any such regulations the purpose of which is to carry out the provisions of section 5, or of section 4(a) for the purpose of administering the provisions of section 5, may be issued only after the regulations are submitted for review to the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of State, and such other departments and agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate. The preceding sentence does not require the concurrence or approval of any official, department, or agency to which such regulations are submitted.

"(c) AMENDMENTS TO REGULATIONS.—If the Secretary proposes to amend regulations issued under this Act, the Secretary shall report to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives on the intent and rationale of such amendments. Such report shall evaluate the cost and burden to United States exporters of the proposed amendments in relation to any enhancement of licensing objectives. The Secretary shall consult with the technical advisory committees authorized under section 5(h) of this Act in formulating or amending regulations issued under this Act. The procedures defined by regulations in effect on January 1, 1984, with respect to sections 4 and 5 of this Act, shall remain in effect unless the Secretary determines, on the basis of substantial and reliable evidence, that specific change is necessary to enhance the prevention of diversions of exports which would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States or to reduce the licensing and paperwork burden on exporters and their distributors.".

(c) PAY FOR THE ASSISTANT SECRETARIES.—Section 5315 of such title is amended by striking out and inserting in lieu thereof

"Assistant Secretaries of Commerce (8)."

"Assistant Secretaries of Commerce (12).".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of section 15(a) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, and the amendments made by subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

(e) BUDGET ACT.—Any new spending authority (within the meaning of section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) which is provided under this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.

SEC. 117. DEFINITIONS.

Section 16 (50 U.S.C. App. 2415) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by inserting "natural or manmade substance," after "article,";

(2) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

"(4) the term 'technology' means the information and know-how (whether in tangible form, such as models, prototypes, drawings, sketches, diagrams, blueprints, or manuals, or in intangible form, such as training or technical services) that can be used to design, produce, manufacture, utilize, or reconstruct goods, including computer software and technical data, but not the goods themselves;";

(3) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (8); and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraphs:

"(5) the term 'export' means—

"(A) an actual shipment, transfer, or transmission of goods or technology out of the United States;

"(B) a transfer of goods or technology in the United States to an embassy or affiliate of a controlled country; or

"(C) a transfer to any person of goods or technology either within the United States or outside of the United States with the knowledge or intent that the goods or technology will be shipped, transferred, or transmitted to an unauthorized recipient;

"(6) the term 'controlled country' means a controlled country under section 5(b)(1) of this Act;

"(7) the term 'United States' means the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and any commonwealth, territory, dependency, or possession of the United States, and includes the outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331(a)); and".

SEC. 118. EFFECT ON OTHER ACTS.

(b) ACT NOT TO AFFECT CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1970.—Section 17 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(f) AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1970.—Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of the last sentence of section 812 of the Agricultural Act of 1970 (7 U.S.C. 612c-3).".

SEC. 119. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 18 (50 U.S.C. App. 2417) is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 18. (a) REQUIREMENT OF AUTHORIZING LEGISLATION.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, money appropriated to the Department of Commerce for expenses to carry out the purposes of this Act may be obligated or expended only if—

"(A) the appropriation thereof has been previously authorized by law enacted on or after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985; or

"(B) the amount of all such obligations and expenditures does not exceed an amount previously prescribed by law enacted on or after such date.

"(2) To the extent that legislation enacted after the making of an appropriation to carry out the purposes of this Act authorizes the obligation or expenditure thereof, the limitation contained in paragraph (1) shall have no effect.

"(3) The provisions of this subsection shall not be superseded except by a provision of law enacted after the date of the enactment of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1985 which specifically repeals, modifies, or supersedes the provisions of this subsection.

"(b) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Commerce to carry out the purposes of this Act—

"(1) $24,600,000 for the fiscal year 1985, of which $8,712,000 shall be available only for enforcement, $1,851,000 shall be available only for foreign availability assessments under subsections (f) and (h)(6) of section 5 of this Act, and $14,037,000 shall be available for all other activities under this Act;

"(2) $29,500,000 for the fiscal year 1986, of which $10,000,000 shall be available only for enforcement, $2,000,000 shall be available only for foreign availability assessments under subsections (f) and (h)(6) of section 5 of this Act, and $17,500,000 shall be available for all other activities under this Act; and

"(3) such additional amounts for each of the fiscal years 1985 and 1986 as may be necessary for increases in salary, pay, retirement, other employee benefits authorized by law, and other nondiscretionary costs.".

SEC. 120. TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.

Section 20 (50 U.S.C. App. 2419) is amended to read as follows:

"TERMINATION DATE

"SEC. 20. The authority granted by this Act terminates on September 30, 1989.".

SEC. 121. IMPORT SANCTIONS.

Chapter 4 of title II of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1861 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 233. IMPORT SANCTIONS FOR EXPORT VIOLATIONS.

"(a) Any person who violates any national security export control imposed under section 5 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2404), or any regulation, order, or license issued under that section, may be subject to such controls on the importing of goods or technology into the United States as the President may prescribe.

"(b) Except as provided in subsection (a) of this section, any person who violates any regulation issued under a multilateral agreement, formal or informal, to control exports for national security purposes, to which the United States is a party, may be subject to such controls on the importing of goods or technology into the United States as the President may prescribe, but only if—

"(1) negotiations with the government or governments, party to the multilateral agreement, with jurisdiction over the violation have been conducted and been unsuccessful in restoring compliance with the regulation involved;

"(2) the President, after the failure of such negotiations, has notified the government or governments described in paragraph (1) and the other parties to the multilateral agreement that the United States proposes to subject the person committing the violation to specific controls on the importing of goods or technology into the United States upon the expiration of 60 days from the date of such notification; and

"(3) a majority of the parties to the multilateral agreement (other than the United States), before the end of that 60-day period, have expressed to the President concurrence in the proposed import controls or have abstained from stating a position with respect to the proposed controls.".

SEC. 122. HOURS OF OFFICE OF EXPORT ADMINISTRATION.

The Secretary of Commerce shall modify the office hours of the Office of Export Administration of the Department of Commerce on at least four days of each workweek so as to accommodate communications to the Office by exporters throughout the continental United States during the normal business hours of those exporters.

SEC. 123. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT.—Section 38(e) of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2778(e)) is amended by striking out "(f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(g)".

(b) MINERAL LEASING ACT OF 1920.—Subsection (u) of section 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 185) is amended—

(1) by striking out "1969 (Act of December 30, 1969; 83 Stat. 841)" and inserting in lieu thereof "1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2401 and following)"; and

(2) by striking out "1969" each subsequent place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1979".

SEC. 124. AMENDMENT TO THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.

Section 502B(a)(2) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2304(a)(2)) is amended by inserting after "Senate" the first place it appears the following: "and the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate (when licenses are to be issued pursuant to the Export Administration Act of 1979).".

SEC. 125. EXPORT OF HORSES.

The Act of March 3, 1891 (46 U.S.C. 466a and 466b), is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 3. EXPORT OF HORSES.

"(a) RESTRICTION ON EXPORT OF HORSES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no horse may be exported by sea from the United States, or any of its territories or possessions, unless such horse is part of a consignment of horses with respect to which a waiver has been granted under subsection (b).

"(b) GRANTING OF WAIVERS.—The Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, may issue regulations providing for the granting of waivers permitting the export by sea of a specified consignment of horses, if the Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, determines that no horse in that consignment is being exported for purposes of slaughter.

"(c) PENALTIES.—

(1) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—Any person who knowingly violates this section or any regulation, order, or license issued under this section shall be fined not more than 5 times the value of the consignment of horses involved or $50,000, whichever is greater, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2) CIVIL PENALTY.—The Secretary of Commerce, after providing notice and an opportunity for an agency hearing on the record, may impose a civil penalty of not to exceed $10,000 for each violation of this section or any regulation, order, or license issued under this section, either in addition to or in lieu of any other liability or penalty which may be imposed.".

SEC. 126. ALASKAN OIL STUDY.

(a) REVIEW OF ALASKAN OIL POLICY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The President shall undertake a comprehensive review of the issues and related data concerning possible changes in the existing incentives to produce crude oil from the North Slope of Alaska (including changes in Federal and State taxation, pipeline tariffs, and Federal leasing policies) and possible changes in the existing distribution of crude oil from the North Slope of Alaska (including changes in export restrictions which would permit exports at free market levels and at levels of 50,000 barrels per day, 100,000 barrels per day, 200,000 barrels per day, and 500,000 barrels per day), as well as the appropriateness of continuing existing controls. Such review shall include, but not be limited to, a study of—

(A) the effect of such changes on the energy and national security of the United States and its allies;

(B) the role of such changes in United States foreign policymaking, including international energy policymaking;

(C) the impact of such changes on employment levels in the maritime industry, the oil industry, and other industries;

(D) the impact of such changes on the refiners and on consumers;

(E) the impact of such changes on the revenues and expenditures of the Federal Government and the government of Alaska;

(F) the effect of such changes on incentives for oil and gas exploration and development in the United States; and

(G) the effect of such changes on the overall trade deficit of the United States, and the trade deficit of the United States with respect to particular countries, including the effect of such changes on trade barriers of other countries.

(2) FINDINGS, OPTIONS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—The President shall develop, after consulting with appropriate State and Federal officials and other persons, findings, options, and recommendations regarding the production and distribution of crude oil from the North Slope of Alaska.

(b) CONSULTATION AND REPORT.—In carrying out subsection (a), the President shall consult with the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the appropriate committees of the Senate. Not later than 9 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit to each of those committees a report which contains the results of the review under subsection (a)(1), and the findings, options, and recommendations developed under subsection (a)(2).

TITLE II—EXPORT PROMOTION PROGRAMS

SEC. 201. REQUIREMENT OF PRIOR AUTHORIZATION.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, money appropriated to the Department of Commerce for expenses to carry out any export promotion program may be obligated or expended only if—

(1) the appropriation thereof has been previously authorized by law enacted on or after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) the amount of all such obligations and expenditures does not exceed an amount previously prescribed by law enacted on or after such date.

(b) EXCEPTION FOR LATER LEGISLATION AUTHORIZING OBLIGATIONS OR EXPENDITURES.—To the extent that legislation enacted after the making of an appropriation to carry out any export promotion program authorizes the obligation or expenditure thereof, the limitation contained in subsection (a) shall have no effect.

(c) PROVISIONS MUST BE SPECIFICALLY SUPERSEDED.—The provisions of this section shall not be superseded except by a provision of law enacted after the date of the enactment of this Act which specifically repeals, modifies, or supersedes the provisions of this section.

(d) EXPORT PROMOTION PROGRAM DEFINED.—For purposes of this title, the term "export promotion program" means any activity of the Department of Commerce designed to stimulate or assist United States businesses in marketing their goods and services abroad competitively with businesses from other countries, including, but not limited to—

(1) trade development (except for the trade adjustment assistance program) and dissemination of foreign marketing opportunities and other marketing information to United States producers of goods and services, including the expansion of foreign markets for United States textiles and apparel and any other United States products;

(2) the development of regional and multilateral economic policies which enhance United States trade and investment interests, and the provision of marketing services with respect to foreign countries and regions;

(3) the exhibition of United States goods in other countries; and

(4) the operations of the United States and Foreign Commercial Service, or any successor agency.

SEC. 202. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated $113,273,000 for each of the fiscal years 1985 and 1986 to the Department of Commerce to carry out export promotion programs.

SEC. 203. BARTER ARRANGEMENTS.

(a) REPORT ON STATUS OF FEDERAL BARTER PROGRAMS.—The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Energy shall, not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, submit to the Congress a report on the status of Federal programs relating to the barter or exchange of commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation for materials and products produced in foreign countries. Such report shall include details of any changes necessary in existing law to allow the Department of Agriculture and, in the case of petroleum resources, the Department of Energy, to implement fully any barter program.

(b) AUTHORITIES OF THE PRESIDENT.—The President is authorized—

(1) to barter stocks of agricultural commodities acquired by the Government for petroleum and petroleum products, and for other materials vital to the national interest, which are produced abroad, in situations in which sales would otherwise not occur; and

(2) to purchase petroleum and petroleum products, and other materials vital to the national interest, which are produced abroad and acquired by persons in the United States through barter for agricultural commodities produced in and exported from the United States through normal commercial trade channels.

(c) OTHER PROVISIONS OF LAW NOT AFFECTED.—In the case of any petroleum, petroleum products, or other materials vital to the national interest, which are acquired under subsection (b), nothing in this section shall be construed to render inapplicable the provisions of any law then in effect which apply to the storage, distribution, or use of such petroleum, petroleum products, or other materials vital to the national interest.

(d) CONVENTIONAL MARKETS NOT TO BE DISPLACED BY BARTERS.—The President shall take steps to ensure that, in making any barter described in subsection (a) or (b)(1) or any purchase authorized by subsection (b)(2), existing export markets for agricultural commodities operating on conventional business terms are safeguarded from displacement by the barter described in subsection (a), (b)(1), or (b)(2), as the case may be. In addition, the President shall ensure that any such barter is consistent with the international obligations of the United States, including the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

(e) REPORT TO THE CONGRESS.—The Secretary of Energy shall report to the Congress on the effect on energy security and on domestic energy supplies of any action taken under this section which results in the acquisition by the Government of petroleum or petroleum products. Such report shall be submitted to the Congress not later than 90 days after such acquisition.

TITLE III—NUCLEAR AGREEMENTS FOR COOPERATION

SEC. 301. AGREEMENTS FOR COOPERATION.

(a) NOTIFICATION OF AND CONSULTATION WITH THE CONGRESS; HEARINGS.—Section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2153) is amended—

(1) in subsection a. by inserting after "Assessment Statement" the following: "(A) which shall analyze the consistency of the text of the proposed agreement for cooperation with all the requirements of this Act, with specific attention to whether the proposed agreement is consistent with each of the criteria set forth in this subsection, and (B)";

(2) in subsection b. by inserting before "the President" the following: "the President has submitted text of the proposed agreement for cooperation, together with the accompanying unclassified Nuclear Proliferation Assessment Statement, to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, the President has consulted with such Committees for a period of not less than thirty days of continuous session (as defined in section 130 g. of this Act) concerning the consistency of the terms of the proposed agreement with all the requirements of this Act, and"; and

(3) in subsection d. by inserting before the sentence which begins "Any such proposed agreement" the following: "During the sixty-day period the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate shall each hold hearings on the proposed agreement for cooperation and submit a report to their respective bodies recommending whether it should be approved or disapproved.".

(b) CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW OF AGREEMENTS.—Subsection d. of section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2153(d)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "adopts a concurrent resolution" and inserting in lieu thereof "adopts, and there is enacted, a joint resolution";

(2) by striking out the period at the end of the first proviso and inserting in lieu thereof ": Provided further, That an agreement for cooperation exempted by the President pursuant to subsection a. from any requirement contained in that subsection shall not become effective unless the Congress adopts, and there is enacted, a joint resolution stating that the Congress does favor such agreement."; and

(3) by striking out "130 of this Act for the consideration of Presidential submissions" and inserting in lieu thereof "130 i. of this Act".

(c) PROCEDURES FOR CONSIDERATION OF AGREEMENTS.—

(1) TECHNICAL CHANGES.—Section 130 a. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2159(a)) is amended—

(A) in the first sentence—

(i) by striking out "123 d.,"; and

(ii) by striking out ", and in addition, in the case of a proposed agreement for cooperation arranged pursuant to subsection 91 c., 144 b., or 144 c., the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate,"; and

(B) in the proviso, by striking out "and if, in the case of a proposed agreement for cooperation arranged pursuant to subsection 91 c., 144 b., or 144 c. of this Act, the other relevant committee of that House has reported such a resolution, such committee shall be deemed discharged from further consideration of that resolution".

(2) PROCEDURES FOR CONSIDERATION OF JOINT RESOLUTIONS.—Section 130 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"i. (1) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'joint resolution' means a joint resolution, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: 'That the Congress (does or does not) favor the proposed agreement for cooperation transmitted to the Congress by the President on .', with the date of the transmission of the proposed agreement for cooperation inserted in the blank, and the affirmative or negative phrase within the parenthetical appropriately selected.

"(2) On the day on which a proposed agreement for cooperation is submitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate under section 123 d., a joint resolution with respect to such agreement for cooperation shall be introduced (by request) in the House by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for himself and the ranking minority member of the Committee, or by Members of the House designated by the chairman and ranking minority member; and shall be introduced (by request) in the Senate by the majority leader of the Senate, for himself and the minority leader of the Senate, or by Members of the Senate designated by the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate. If either House is not in session on the day on which such an agreement for cooperation is submitted, the joint resolution shall be introduced in that House, as provided in the preceding sentence, on the first day thereafter on which that House is in session.

"(3) All joint resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives shall be referred to the appropriate committee or committees, and all joint resolutions introduced in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and in addition, in the case of a proposed agreement for cooperation arranged pursuant to section 91 c., 144 b., or 144 c., the Committee on Armed Services.

"(4) If the committee of either House to which a joint resolution has been referred has not reported it at the end of 45 days after its introduction, the committee shall be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution or of any other joint resolution introduced with respect to the same matter; except that, in the case of a joint resolution which has been referred to more than one committee, if before the end of that 45-day period one such committee has reported the joint resolution, any other committee to which the joint resolution was referred shall be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution or of any other joint resolution introduced with respect to the same matter.

"(5) A joint resolution under this subsection shall be considered in the Senate in accordance with the provisions of section 601(b)(4) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976. For the purpose of expediting the consideration and passage of joint resolutions reported or discharged pursuant to the provisions of this subsection, it shall be in order for the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives to present for consideration a resolution of the House of Representatives providing procedures for the immediate consideration of a joint resolution under this subsection which may be similar, if applicable, to the procedures set forth in section 601(b)(4) of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976.

"(6) In the case of a joint resolution described in paragraph (1), if prior to the passage by one House of a joint resolution of that House, that House receives a joint resolution with respect to the same matter from the other House, then—

"(A) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no joint resolution had been received from the other House; but

"(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the joint resolution of the other House.".

(d) APPLICABILITY OF AMENDMENTS.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any agreement for cooperation which is entered into after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to reauthorize the Export Administration Act of 1979, and for other purposes.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree with the amendments of the House of Representaives and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer [Mr. MURKOWSKI] appointed Mr. GARN, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. PROXMIRE conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OMNIBUS COMMITTEE FUNDING RESOLUTION AMENDMENTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to consideration of Calendar No. 90, Senate Resolution 145, a resolution to authorize expenditures for the committees of the Senate through February 28, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 145) to authorize expenditures for the committee of the Senate through February 28, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 53

(Purpose: To provide transition funding for committee staff members)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], proposes an amendment numbered 53.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the resolution, add the following new section:

AMENDMENT TO S. RES. 354, 98TH CONGRESS

SEC. . Senate Resolution 354, 98th Congress, agreed to March 2, 1984, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"AUTHORITY FOR EMPLOYMENT OF CERTAIN PREVIOUSLY DISPLACED PERSONNEL

"SEC. 22. Notwithstanding any provision of the preceding sections of this resolution, the authority contained in such sections insofar as it pertains to the funding of, and payment for, employment of personnel, shall be extended from February 28, 1985, through July 15, 1985 in the case of an individual who is certified, by the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, to the Secretary of the Senate as being an employee who was displaced, as a committee employee, by reason of the committee reorganizations which took place at the beginning of the first session of the 99th Congress, and who otherwise meets such criteria for employment under this section as is prescribed by the Committee on Rules and Administration; except that no individual shall be paid under authority of this section for any period exceeding 60 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The amendment (No. 53) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the resolution, as amended.

The resolution (S. Res. 145), as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 145

AUTHORITY FOR EMPLOYMENT OF CERTAIN PREVIOUSLY DISPLACED PERSONNEL

"SEC. 22. Notwithstanding any provision of the preceding sections of this resolution, the authority contained in such section insofar as it pertains to the funding of, and payment for, employment of personnel. Shall be extended from February 28, 1985, through July 15, 1985, in the case of an individual who is certified, by the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, to the Secretary of the Senate as being an employee who was displaced, as a committee employee, by reason of the committee reorganizations which took place at the beginning of the first session of the Ninety-ninth Congress, and who otherwise meets such criteria for employment under this section as is prescribed by the Committee on Rules and Administration; except that no individual shall be paid under authority of this section for any period exceeding sixty days.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATHIAS). Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOUTHEAST ASIA 10 YEARS LATER

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, this week, we have passed one of those milestones that is intended to illuminate the pathway ahead by causing us to cast a long look backward. Ten years after the end of the Vietnam war, we are doing some stocktaking.

And what do we find? We find this country united in a way seldom seen in those difficult days of the war. We see a rebirth of patriotism and pride in this country. Our economy remains a most dynamic and powerful force in the world. We also see a younger generation better educated than ever before and seemingly confident, competitive, and ready to lead this Nation on into the next century.

In Vietnam, we also see a country that is celebrating—in a parade of images so avidly covered by camera crews from the major networks. One almost thinks back to the days of the Iranian hostages, when one could never be certain if the demonstrations would have really been there if the cameras had not.

In Vietnam, 10 years have given us the chance to learn a good bit more of what we were fighting against, and about. After the war, the government in the north was so fearful of its own people that they summarily killed off tens of thousands who had been active in the South Vietnamese Government. "Purges," they were called. You will recall that is not quite the way we did it after our U.S. Civil Wars. Defeated soldiers in that war could go home, to family and friends, and brothers and sisters, or they were free to move west—to Wyoming and the Great Plains—where many indeed settled and opened up the American West.

In Vietnam, the defeated—more than a million of them—were placed in concentration camps. Perhaps 10,000, maybe more, are still there: They cannot be trusted, we are told, cannot even be released as refugees. Yet 1½ million did come out as refugees. They came by boat, they walked across Cambodia, they paid enormous bribes to be allowed to "exit"—any way they could find, because they knew just what to expect from their government. Appalling, is it not? They are still fleeing, at every single chance they get. Some government!

The people of Cambodia could not be trusted either. First, under the Khmer Rouge, who we supported and supplied by the Vietnamese, between 1 and 3 million Cambodians were eliminated—out of a population of some 7 million. That is called genocide. Then the Vietnamese decided to take over that country in 1979. The Cambodians knew just what to expect, too: They took off. They fled to Thailand in the hundreds of thousands, and they are still coming. Some come largely for the food that is available from the U.N. border relief operation, because, sadly enough Cambodia can no longer feed itself.

We began in Vietnam trying to save some human beings from something that, in the long run, we could not save them from—in part because we lost the courage of our convictions. But the Vietnamese people, North and South, knew—or they soon learned—just what we were trying to save them from. For as soon as the war was over, they tried to save themselves as well—by boat, by foot, by any means available to them. We helped them greatly in that effort, by leading all of the governments and citizens of the world in resettling them and finding new homes and new lives for those who, while certainly being victims of the war, would have been even greater victims of "the peace."

It is so important to remember that—while visions of Vietnamese celebrations parade and flicker across our television screens—we have much less to be "ashamed of" than some might have us believe. The hundreds of thousands of Southeast Asian refugees have taught us that the way a compassionate and noble nation earns the allegiance of its citizens is not by "re-education," but through trust and hope and opportunity and participation in government.

Might that not be why so many have chosen to leave the land of "the victors" in the earnest hope of finding a fresh start and a new life of freedom in the land of "the losers?"

SENATOR BYRD'S AWARD

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, as we have taken a great introspective look at that conflict in Vietnam in some of the great celebrations of this week, one particularly appropriate and quite moving was the one in which the minority leader was honored by the Paralyzed Veterans of America and the Vietnam Veterans Institute and was presented with a most extraordinary oil portrait which was beautifully done. It is my pleasure to have been invited to participate in that ceremony honoring the Democratic leader. It was a very great treat and a very great privilege to do that. It was indeed one of the nicest ceremonies I have attended in my time here.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority whip yield?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, I will.

Mr. BYRD. I thank him for yielding.

I thank him very much for his exceedingly kind words with respect to the award by the Paralyzed Veterans of America and the Vietnam Veterans Institute. I also am grateful for his presence on that day. I know the representatives of those two organizations were very grateful for the presence of the distinguished majority whip and the distinguished majority leader, the distinguished President pro tempore, and other distinguished Senators, including the distinguished minority whip and my own colleague, Senator ROCKEFELLER.

Also, I would like to include in that list SONNY MONTGOMERY, a Representative in the other body, who, I believe, won the immediately previous award a year ago.

In any event, many thanks to the distinguished majority whip.

TIME REMAINING ON BUDGET RESOLUTION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wonder if the majority whip would inquire of the Chair as to how much time remains on the budget resolution before we go out?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, in accordance with that request, we would be pleased to have the time yet remaining on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority controls 8 hours and 18 minutes. The minority controls 12 hours exactly.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority whip. I also thank the Chair.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, MAY 6, 1985

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 12 NOON ON MONDAY, MAY 6, 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 12 noon on Monday, May 6, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a special order in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Following the special order, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 1 p.m. with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I also indicate to my colleagues that following the routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the budget resolution. It would be my intention that no rollcall votes on amendments would occur prior to the hour of 4 p.m. on Monday. There is always the possibility that there may be some procedural vote but no vote on substantive amendments. If we agree or conclude debate on amendments, we might be able to sequence the votes starting on those amendments at about 4 o'clock if the yeas and nays are ordered on those amendments.

I also indicate that it is a good likelihood, in view of limited schedules on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, that we would be in late in the evening on Monday.

Is that satisfactory with the distinguished minority leader?

Mr. BYRD. Yes. It is. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, MAY 6, 1985

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, after concurring with the minority leader and in accordance with the previous order, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until Monday, May 6, 1985 at 12 o'clock.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:04 p.m. recessed until Monday, May 6, 1985, at 12 noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, May 6, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Charles Mallon, permanent deacon, Holy Family Church, Mitchellville, MD, offered the following prayer:

Let the coming generation be told of the Lord. That they may proclaim to a people yet to be born, the justice He has shown.—Psalm 22:30-31.

Father we are creating a legacy of law that will impact on other peoples, other places and other times. Raise our consciousness to a level that is cognizant of future legislative issues that lie beyond our present grasp.

Accept our need for a present sense of legislative mission and continue to challenge us with the opportunity to both confront and defend the rights of others.

Empower this legislative body, both Members and staff, with the help of Your grace to grant spiritual continuity to this legacy which we bequeath to future generations of lawmakers.

We ask this through Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.J. Res. 195. Joint resolution designating May 1985 as "Older Americans Month"; and

H.J. Res. 258. Joint resolution to designate May 6, 1985, as "Dr. Jonas E. Salk Day."

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 883) entitled "An act to extend the Export Administration Act of 1979," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GARN, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. PROXMIRE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 59. Joint resolution to designate "National Science Week";

S.J. Res. 64. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning May 5, 1985, as "National Correctional Officers Week";

S.J. Res. 66. Joint resolution designating June 14, 1985, as "Baltic Freedom Day";

S.J. Res. 83. Joint resolution designating the week beginning on May 5, 1985, as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week";

S.J. Res. 87. Joint resolution to provide for the designation of July 19, 1985, as "National P.O.W./M.I.A. Recognition Day";

S.J. Res. 92. Joint resolution to designate October 1985 as "National Foster Grandparents Month";

S.J. Res. 93. Joint resolution to designate the month of May 1985 as "Better Hearing and Speech Month";

S.J. Res. 103. Joint resolution to designate the month of May 1985, as "Very Special Arts U.S.A. Month";

S.J. Res. 104. Joint resolution to proclaim October 23, 1985, as "A Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world;

S.J. Res. 118. Joint resolution to designate May 25, 1985, as "Missing Children Day"; and

S.J. Res. 128. Joint resolution to designate May 7, 1985, as "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day."

RACIST ADMINISTRATION APPOINTEE

(Mr. SYNAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, in an obscure Federal agency, is an obscure administration appointee who is quietly earning $70,000 a year as chairperson of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal. Never mind that the appointee has no professional expertise in copyright. Never mind that this appointee heads an agency that distributes tens of millions of dollars. Never mind that this agency is in such sad shape that no segment of the industry which it regulates is willing to appear before it. There is a greater issue: Marianne Hall, the person I describe, is the coauthor (as she once claimed) or the editor (as she now claims) of a book which contains the most racist, putrid, repugnant, vicious, brutal, and undisguised statements I have ever read.

Mr. Speaker, you will hear much about this book. I know of no better way of responding to it than to repeat Thomas Jefferson's original draft of the Declaration of Independence.

We hold these truths to be sacred and undeniable; that all men are created equal and independent, that from that equal creation they derive rights inherent and inalienable * * *.

It's very, very sad we've come to this.

THE REAL WINNER IN INDIANA'S EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

(Mr. CHENEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Speaker, last week this House, in the case of the Indiana Eighth Congressional District race, decided to seat Mr. MCCLOSKEY, the Democrat, over the objections of we Republicans. At the time our claim on the Republican side of the aisle was that the Democratically dominated task force counted until Mr. MCCLOSKEY was ahead by 4 votes, and then stopped counting, and left 32 votes uncounted.

I would like to report to the House, Mr. Speaker, that the Evansville Courier, a newspaper in the district affected, counted the remaining 32 ballots. They checked with the individuals who cast those absentee ballots and were able to contact 26 of those people who had, in fact, voted but whose ballots were not counted by the Democrats. The results show that of the 26, 20 voted for Mr. McIntyre, 5 voted for Mr. MCCLOSKEY, and 1 did not vote in the congressional race.

The result, Mr. Speaker, if we had counted all of the ballots, is that, in fact, Rick McIntyre, the Republican, won the race in the Eighth District in Indiana by a total of 11 votes.

"FOUNDATIONS OF SAND"

(Mrs. COLLINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, last week, it was revealed that an official of the Reagan administration participated in the publication of a book entitled "Foundations of Sand," which I and members of the black community, and indeed people throughout this Nation, find abhorrent and repulsive. Although the Chairwoman of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal—Ms. Marianne Hall—has disavowed her involvement with the book, I find it totally unconscionable that a public official—and a highly salaried one at that, who appears to harbor these kinds of attitudes and feelings, can be appointed to such a position.

I believe that the evidence which has been presented clearly shows that Ms. Hall, despite her attempts to put herself at arm's length from the racially disparaging quotes in the book, is at least in part responsible and culpable of advancing these offensive and slanderous views.

These revelations are particularly disconcerting and worrisome, since they come at a time when the people of this country and around the world are remembering the atrocities that occurred in Germany over four decades ago, atrocities that were the by-products of ignorance, hatred, and bigotry. And with the constant refusal of the South African Government to alter its policy on apartheid, there is continuing proof that racial bias and prejudice is deeply rooted and still exists.

I join with the members of the Congressional Black Caucus, those of my colleagues who have spoken out on this issue, and others in the private sector who have called for the immediate resignation of Ms. Hall. This is not a partisan issue—it is one on which we all should and can agree. Failure by administration officials to ask Ms. Hall to resign from her post would send a very damaging signal to the citizens of this country—black, white, and otherwise—about this administration's commitment to fairness and equality for all Americans, regardless of race, religious heritage, or national descent.

MOVIE STARS AS FARM EXPERTS

(Mr. KASICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that today, noted agricultural experts Jane Fonda, Cissy Spacek, and Jessica Lange have graciously consented to lend their expertise to the majority party's grasp of the farm problem. The Democrat caucus task force on agriculture has besought these care-worn maidens of the prairie for advice on agricultural policy. We realize how much our friends in the majority party want to be recognized as the party of new ideas, and calling on movie stars for testimony about farming certainly demonstrates how hard-pressed the Democrats are in coming up with fresh ideas.

Mr. Speaker, our farmers are facing serious problems. These problems need both an immediate and a long-term solution. But when I need to be informed about questions of farm policy, I at least know where to turn: To the hard-working men and women in my district whose efforts have made us the most productive agricultural economy in the world. To call on the likes of Jane Fonda to sort out our agricultural problem is simply a PR stunt, and a demeaning stunt at that. I hope my friends in the majority will not compound their mistake by seeking her advice on foreign policy issues as well.

ADMINISTRATION'S CONCEPT AS "COMMUNITY"

(Mr. SIKORSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, some in the current administration, from the President on down, are fond of quoting John Kennedy. Here is a quote they missed.

Speaking to the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1957, Kennedy said:

> Brotherhood, tolerance, enlightened relations between members of different ethnic groups—these are, after all, simply an extension of the concept upon which all free organized society is based.

For the Kennedy-philes in the administration who don't know, this concept is called community.

But some Reaganites have a definition of their own.

Clarence Pendleton doesn't like affirmative action—unless it means he's head of the Civil Rights Commission. The Assistant Secretary of Education says the handicapped have brought their plight on themselves. Ed Meese says people frequent soup lines for the food. The President says the homeless sleep on grates by choice. And now, Marianne Hall says black Americans are bound by the jungle.

Racist, disparaging comments have no place in John Kennedy's American community of 1957 or of 1985.

THE TIME IS RIPE FOR A NEW GATT ROUND

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, over the weekend, we were all disappointed to learn that France has posted a stumbling block to the efforts of the major trading countries to begin a new global trade round. On this day, the 21st anniversary of the inauguration of the Kennedy round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—The GATT—it is appropriate to reflect for a minute on the benefits of multilateral trade negotiations.

The Kennedy round, and later the Tokyo round, resulted in the substantial lowering of tariff and nontariff barriers to trade. All countries have benefited from the stabilizing and liberalizing influence of global rules on trade.

We have witnessed an eightfold increase in trade since the GATT system began. The beneficiaries of trade are consumers, labors, industries, and nations.

It has been 6 years since the last round of multilateral trade negotiations. New technologies have developed. Services have become an active sector in world trade. Shortcomings in the old rules have become evident. It is time to embark on a new round. We need to extend trade rules to new areas such as services, intellectual property, and investment.

President Mitterrand, it is time to do the responsible thing and endorse a new trade round. Both your countrymen and mine will benefit from the fruits of such an effort.

UNIFORMED SERVICES FORMER SPOUSE EQUITY ACT

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Uniformed Services Former Spouses Retirement Equity Act. Marriage is an economic partnership in which both individuals contribute to the livelihood of the family. Both partners share the personal and economic expenses required during family life. For the military spouse, however, the demands of family and frequent moves make it difficult, if not impossible, to establish a pension based on years worked with a single employer.

Those military spouses whose marriages end in divorce often find themselves without retirement benefits. Although current law allows courts to consider the military retirement pay in divorce settlements, many courts fail to recognize the contribution and sacrifices of the spouse to a military career. In addition, the Department of Defense has difficulty in interpreting some of the formulas created by the courts to divide military pay. This bill would establish a pro rata presumption to the military retirement pay for the former spouse. The division would be based on the years contributed to the military career and subject to court review. In 1980 and 1982 Congress passed laws to provide a pro rata presumption for CIA and Foreign Service spouses. This policy should be extended to military spouses.

In addition, the Uniformed Services Former Spouse Retirement Equity Act expands options available to those members and spouses who want to participate in the survivor benefit plan. I am inserting in the RECORD in the Extensions of Remarks my fact sheet that fully explains what this bill will do.

THE TWO-PARTY SYSTEM VERSUS INDIANA

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, what would Thomas Jefferson say if he were witness to the recent unpleasantness visited upon the citizens of the Eighth District of Indiana? I surmise that it may echo what he wrote to fellow patriot Henry Lee in 1823:

Men by their constitutions are naturally divided into two parties: (1) Those who fear and distrust the people, and wish to draw all powers from them into the hands of the higher classes. (2) Those who identify with the people, have confidence in them, cherish and consider them as the most honest and safe, although not the most wise depository of the public interests. In every country these two parties exist; and in every one where they are free to think, speak, and write, they will declare themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I think both parties in the House have declared themselves quite clearly on this matter.

LIMITING CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN DEFENSE PROCUREMENT

(Mr. BENNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing on behalf of myself, Mr. NICHOLS and Mrs. BOXER, a bill to limit conflicts of interest in the defense procurement process. Our bill combines the best features of my original bill and that of Mrs. BOXER and Mr. NICHOLS on this issue. It is the result of extensive testimony received at hearings chaired by myself and Mr. NICHOLS.

Our hearings revealed that when defense procurement officials "switch sides" and go to work for defense contractors, the result is often higher prices, lower quality, and decreased public confidence in our national Defense Establishment.

Our bill attacks this problem directly. It prohibits anyone with significant responsibility for a defense contract from shortly thereafter working for a firm involved in that contract.

I should stress that the official would not be barred from working with all defense contractors but only with the few companies with which he or she directly dealt, and then only for 2 years.

We are working with our colleagues in the Senate to ensure that this is the year that we finally pass a meaningful reform. We will have more extensive comments later when Senator PROXMIRE and Senator PRYOR introduce legislation similar to our bill.

Mr. Speaker, we are also working on other reforms in the fields of claims against the Government by contractors which will be the subject of different legislation.

THE FINAL COUNT ON THE EIGHTH DISTRICT OF INDIANA

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CHENEY] has already brought to the attention of the House a fact so startling that I wanted to report it again for those who may have missed it.

According to the Evansville Courier in a copyright story they contacted the voters who were not counted by the recent task force.

Mr. Speaker, the Associated Press reports, and I quote:

The 32 absentee ballots that were never counted in Indiana's 8th District Congressional race would have given Republican Rick McIntyre the winning edge according to a newspaper survey of the voters.

At least 20 of the 32 ballots not counted because the voters' signatures were not notarized or cast for McIntyre, The Evansville Courier reported in a copyright story in today's edition. The ballots would have overcome Democratic Representative Frank McCloskey's four vote margin of victory if they had been counted as demanded by Republican Members of Congress.

Of 26 people contacted by the newspaper, 20 said they voted for McIntyre, five for McCloskey, and one said she did not vote in the Congressional race. One voter died last February and five could not be reached.

Even if all six people who were not contacted voted for McCloskey the ballots still would have given McIntyre the edge.

In other words, thanks to the Evansville Courier, which finished the job the task force refused to finish, in fact had all the ballots been counted it is clear McIntyre would have won the race.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, our Declaration of Independence declares that "all men are created equal." Our Constitution calls for equality of opportunity for all in our society. This is the beauty of the American Government and the American spirit. Unfortunately, certain members of this administration don't seem to think so. Over the past several weeks and months, various Reagan administration officials have denigrated American blacks, American Jews, native Americans, Hispanic Americans, and the handicapped. The latest dose of repugnance comes in the form of a book, "Foundations of Sand," edited by Marianne Mele Hall, a Reagan administration appointee, now Chair of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal, an agency of the Federal Government. Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of this Nation should not have to pay the salaries of the those who espouse bigotry or racism. Those who have the honor and privilege of representing this great country should at least respect the principles which govern it.

It is an insult to all Americans for this administration to allow such people to continue in office. I call on the President to stand up for decency, for fairness, and for the Constitution.

ELEVATION OF NICARAGUAN BISHOP A POLITICAL ACT AS WELL AS A RELIGIOUS ACT

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, the elevation of Nicaraguan Archbishop Miguel Obando Y Bravo can be viewed as much a political act as a religious one.

In Nicaragua, the Sandinista leadership includes several Catholic priests, and the Pope has ordered them out of politics. Their refusal to relinquish their state duties has led to the suspension by the Vatican of their religious functions. Now that the Pope has named Obando Y Bravo cardinal, the tension between the church and the Sandinista regime is expected to increase. Those Catholics who oppose the Sandinista regime reportedly regard Obando Y Bravo as sympathetic to their cause.

Obando Y Bravo has continued to press for direct talks with Nicaraguan resistance leaders. He has said that "we seek peace by civilized means and with dialog—a mediation among Nicaraguans, if both sides will accept this."

Following the announcement of Reagan's peace proposal in early April, which included a call for dialog between the Sandinistas and the Nicaraguan resistance, Obando Y Bravo was asked whether the church's blueprint for peace followed the same lines as the Reagan proposal. Obando Y Bravo stressed that the Nicaraguan bishops conference "exactly a year ago made such a proposal on Easter Sunday."

CALLING FOR THE RESIGNATION OF MS. MARIANNE HALL

(Mr. HAYES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, we are all aware by now of the controversy surrounding Ms. Marianne Hall, the newly appointed Chairperson of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal. Everyday she redefines her role in the production of the book, "Foundations of Sand," a book filled with some of the most racist and offensive ideas ever admitted to by a person holding public office. She has moved from coauthor to editor to one who merely edited "verbs, nouns, and pronouns." Was "jungle freedoms" one of the nouns that she added? Or was "subsidized procreation" one of her ideas?

It is my understanding that last Thursday, Ms. Hall delivered a brief statement to some of my Republican colleagues in the House in an attempt to clear up this controversy. This is only another example of how this administration has turned the whole idea of fairness and morality into a mere political game. Instead of sending her response to those who were calling for her resignation—or better yet—to the entire House of Representatives, it was only given to Republican Members. Mr. Speaker, whether Ms. Hall knows it or not, morality is not a partisan issue. It doesn't belong to Democrats or Republicans, but to people of conscience everywhere. The same thing applies whether we are speaking of visiting the graves of stormtroopers in Bitburg, or practicing "constructive engagement" with the racist regime in Johannesburg. It's the same thing whether it is the Department of Education and aid to the disabled, or a public official like Ms. Hall, who, if she isn't a racist, doesn't mind taking the credit as coauthor of racist books.

It is clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that this administration has lost its sense of morality. It is up to this Congress to help to set it right. The first step in that direction should be the termination of Ms. Marianne Hall. In that regard, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to cosponsor and support House Resolution 155.

THE FINAL TALLY ON THE RACE IN THE EIGHTH DISTRICT IN INDIANA

(Mr. WEBER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WEBER. I thank the Speaker.

As a couple of my colleagues indicated earlier, the cloud that hangs over the gentleman's seat in the Eighth District of Indiana has become a thunderstorm by the revelation of an Associated Press survey of the 32 ballots never counted in the recount.

Mr. Speaker, I again would like to read into the RECORD the Associated Press story datelined Evansville, IN.

The 32 absentee ballots that were never counted in Indiana's 8th District congressional race would have given Republican Rick McIntyre the winning edge, according to a newspaper survey of the voters.

At least 20 of the 32 ballots not counted because the voter's signatures were not notorized—were cast for McIntyre,The Evansville Courier reported in a copyright story in today's editions. The ballots would have overcome Democratic Rep. Frank McCloskey's four-vote margin of victory if they had been counted as demanded by Republican members of Congress.

Of 26 people contacted by the newspaper, 20 said they voted for McIntyre, five for McCloskey and one said she did not vote in the congressional race. One voter died last February and five could not be reached.

Even if all six people who weren't contacted voted for McCloskey, the ballots still would have given McIntyre the edge.

McCloskey was seated Wednesday after the Democrat-controlled House voted nearly along party lines. Republicans had called for a special election.

So the verdict is in, Mr. Speaker, just as we feared: McIntyre won the election, the Democrats seated the loser.

WE CANNOT CONTINUE TO RAISE THE DEBT CEILING

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, last October, at the request of the President, this Congress raised the debt ceiling to $1,824 billion, an increase of $248 billion.

The Treasury has recently notified us that this will not be enough money to get through the fiscal year, as they had expected when they asked us to raise it last year, and they will ask us in July to raise this debt ceiling again by some unknown amount.

Mr. Speaker, I may accede to this request by the President this time, but Mr. Speaker, this is the last time. Unless there is a proposal put forward by the President and adopted by the Congress to get this borrowing, borrowing, borrowing under control. It is wrecking our domestic economy. It is decapitalizing our farms and factories, it is unemploying our people, and it is going to be a disaster for us unless it is controlled.

Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I hope to put forward a plan that would allow the President, if he disagrees with an appropriation to delete that appropriation, in whole or in part, by item or however he wishes to, from appropriations bills.

We are in a time of emergency and this, what is now happening, cannot continue to go forward.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S INSENSITIVITY TO MINORITIES

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the appointment of Marianne Hall to the Copyright Royalty Tribunal is an outrage not only to blacks, but to all minorities and all Americans who treasure this country's protection of the integrity of all people. It appears that there is a place in a public service for more that espouse racist and bigot, if not in the private sector, in public service. What is so attractive about this person's resume, that the Reagan administration had little problem with her only published work, "Foundations of Sand?" It would have been more appropriately entitled "Foundations of a Sociology of Racism: A Handbook on Racist Ideology, a Primer for Segregationists."

Mr. Speaker, this is not an isolated show of recent insensitivity by the administration. The President's Bitburg trip was most regrettable. In the Department of Labor, thousands of farmworkers are denied sanitation standards as they work and sweat in this Nation's fields. In our Department of Education, an official had dared to slight the disabled. The administration would cut free mailing privileges to the blind. The list goes on, but the patience of the American people does not. Today, Ms. Hall continues in public office without the public trust.

What is the main thesis of Ms. Hall on the problems of blacks in our society? Listen to these ringing words of wisdom:

The problems rise when you displace the jungle-freedoms-types into the Scotland-type environment which is America * * *"

And why do some blacks get welfare? Ms. Hall again is edifying:

They put blacks on welfare so that they can continue their jungle freedoms of leisure time and subsidized procreation.

Why should we have a separate education system for blacks? Ms. Hall reaches the height of wisdom:

Blacks resent attending American schools . . . (because) they consider the curriculum irrelevant, which indeed it is for them.

Finally, Ms. Hall's crystal clear racism becomes eloquent:

Their race has skipped the centuries of training which has produced in other races discipline, foresight, and tolerance of drudgery, necessary for success in the agricultural and industrial ages in the temperate zones * * *.

Ms. Hall is entitled to write and express her opinions. But she ought to be dismissed from a post in which the public expects our Constitution to be defended and our ideals upheld.

WIDE-ANGLE TELEVISION COVERAGE OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS

(Mr. BONER of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a resolution to amend the House rules to provide for the wide-angle television coverage of this Chamber's legislative proceedings.

This resolution is the natural and logical complement to recent House actions to provide wide-angle television coverage of this Chamber. As recently as last week, the House adopted a resolution to provide television coverage of the floor proceedings while Members are voting. Last year, as my colleagues recall, the Speaker initiated wide-angle television coverage of special orders.

Mr. Speaker, providing wide-angle television coverage during House debate on legislation continues the steps already taken to provide the American people with a complete, unedited and uninterrupted broadcast account of House floor proceedings. Such wide-angle coverage further insures that the American people receive an accurate portrayal of the debate during our consideration of legislation here on the House floor.

Mr. Speaker, the House has taken great strides to open the legislative process to the view and scrutiny of the American people. I urge my colleagues to join me in opening our floor debate to the fullest possible television coverage. Such an act will ensure an even more informed public.

A PATTERN OF CONSERVATIVE PARTISANSHIP IS EMERGING

(Mr. FAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, each week there seems to be another story about a Reagan appointee who is not fit for office. A pattern of conservative partisanship is emerging.

Over at the important Office of Personnel Management, Dr. Devine abused his office in such a highly political way that even members of his own party question whether he should remain in office.

At the Department of Education, another Reagan appointee stepped down because she put forward the view that the disabled among us were selfish and deserved their fate because of some unknown sin. She is gone now, but not without causing pain to those who should be helped rather than hurt by Federal appointees.

At the Department of Labor, we now have a Secretary who has the faith of the Congress. Yet it should not go unnoticed that it has taken several years for us to get a Secretary of Labor who has merited our trust, and those are years lost forever to the workers of this country.

And now the Reagan pattern has seeped down to the tiny Copyright Royalty Tribunal. Another Reagan appointment is found to be unfit for office.

We do not want to persecute anyone. However, it should be remembered that the racist views which Ms. Hall is associated with have hurt millions of people across this country for decades.

She should go, too.

The administration should treat its second term appointments with care even though there will be no election in 4 years to which it must answer. The administration must still answer each day to all of the American people—not just the hard right partisans that clamor for influence.

THE CONTINUING PROBLEM OF COMPUTER CRIME

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to bring to the attention of this body the continuing problem of computer crime which we dealt with in part during the last Congress but which needs further attention in this Congress.

The continuing need for extra protection in this area was clearly demonstrated earlier this year when a group of hackers harassed a Newsweek reporter, Richard Sandza, who had uncovered and publicized some of their shady activities. The hackers, incensed by the bad publicity, began to harass Mr. Sandza and his wife with anonymous phone calls and auto dial calls and finally started a mock trial on what is called "pirate bulletin boards" around the country. In this process they broke into the TRW computer records where they pulled out Sandza's credit card numbers, thus enabling them to make numerous false credit purchases and charge them to Mr. Sandza.

The incident merely dramatizes the need for expanded Federal computer crime protection, and I intend to pursue this matter in hearings on H.R. 1001 later this month.

H.R. 1001 would complement last year's efforts to make computer crime a Federal offense. It is aimed at white-collar criminals and hackers who would violate our privacy and carry out high technology schemes to defraud.

Computer technology has brought us a long way in the past decade. However, that technology—with all its gains—has left us with a new breed of criminals. I believe that Government and industry have a dual responsibility in this area. Industry has to develop locks to protect the intangible property in computer systems, and the Federal Government has to provide the laws to prosecute this primarily interstate process of breaking these locks and entering the systems.

THE SELECTION OF MARIANNE MELE HALL

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, the selection of Marianne Mele Hall to be a member of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal is yet another indication of the Reagan administration's insensitivity and its lack of moral leadership.

Ms. Hall is barely qualified for the position that she now holds. She does not have an expertise in copyright law.

If that were the only argument against her continuing in her position, we would not be talking about this matter today. It is an unfortunate fact that the administration all too often makes appointments which are based on philosophical litmus tests rather than on expertise.

However, Ms. Hall apparently played a significant role in the writing and editing of a book entitled, "Foundations of Sand." That book includes a totally offensive chapter regarding black Americans. It is racist rot.

Among other things, the book advocates a separate school system for black students. It also contains this insulting passage regarding black American men.

"They insist on preserving their jungle freedoms, their women, their avoidance of personal responsibility and their abhorrence of the work ethic."

In the midst of this growing controversy, Ms. Hall now claims that she merely edited "Foundations of Sand." No longer does she claim that she is a coauthor, as she originally stated in a Senate questionnaire and on the copyright application. The role that Ms. Hall played in the production of the book is not the issue. Instead, we must judge whether someone who had a part in the writing or editing of this patently prejudiced piece is suited to hold an appointive office in the U.S. Government.

I believe that in associating herself with the publication of this book, in allowing her name to be listed on the cover as a coauthor, Ms. Hall sacrificed whatever fitness she may have had to hold high office in our Government.

More than 200 years ago, Thomas Jefferson in our founding document, set forth the principle from which all of our other national tenets stem: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal."

It is a travesty that someone who has helped to advance a contrary philosophy now holds high office in the Government of our country.

From Bitburg to the nomination of Marianne Hall, the administration fails to recognize the sensitivities of others.

In this case, it is essential that Marianne Hall resign.

□ 1230

Mr. Speaker, it is contrary to the principles of this Nation and ought to be contrary to the principles of this administration.

CHILDREN'S TELEVISION PROGRAMMING

(Mr. NIELSON of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, did you know that by the time a child finishes high school he or she will have spent 10,000 to 15,000 hours in front of a television set? This is more time than in the classroom. This amazing fact makes it very clear that today, television plays a major part in the lives, attitudes, and education of our children. What is more clear is that as a society we must make sure that this valuable educational tool be used as a positive force in the lives of America's children.

Today, I am introducing legislation that, I believe, will ensure that broadcasters serve the needs and interests of children in their audiences. Under the bill, stations which fail to meet the needs and interests of children will have their licenses taken away by the FCC and given to someone who will fulfill this important obligation. Past legislative proposals have mandated a specific number of hours per week for children's programming. This has proven confusing and difficult for broadcasters. My bill makes it clear that the needs of children must be served by broadcasters and then requires the FCC to determine this on a case-by-case basis at the time of license renewal.

While I favor substantial deregulation of the broadcasting industry in order to eliminate unnecessary Government controls that have handicapped the industry's ability to serve the public, I take very seriously the industry's obligation to serve the children of this Nation. In short, I will not support any deregulatory policy that relieves TV and radio stations from their important role in our children's lives.

Children need our help. I ask my colleagues to support me in my endeavor to improve the quality of children's programming thereby giving our children a better future.

CENTRAL AMERICA: A DOSE OF REALITY

(Mr. GONZALEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, in the Reagan White House, it is the major—premise that image counts for more than reality. Translated into practice, this means that Ronald Reagan prefers to buildup and play on images, rather than to do the hard work of laying out the hard facts and doing the hard work of real leadership. Thus it is that in Central America, everything has been done to project images and perceptions, but nothing has been done to discuss actual reality.

One reality in Central America is the Organization of American States, to which we belong, which was founded upon our leadership, and which is pledged to maintain mutual peace and mutual respect among the countries of this hemisphere.

Previous administrations have found cause to intervene in other countries of this hemisphere—but in those cases the Organization of American States was consulted, and agreed with the action taken. The Reagan administration has not taken its Central American policy to the OAS; nor has it sought OAS support. Indeed, while other countries in the hemisphere seek some means of negotiation, the President rejects every opportunity and turns away from every possiblity.

Yet we are pledged in the Rio Treaty to use peaceful means and to respect sovereign states, regardless of whether we like or dislike those states. With regard to Nicaragua, we maintain an Embassy there, and have throughout the Sandinista regime. This fact constitutes diplomatic recognition. The Rio Treaty, which we signed and pledged to live by, says this, in its article 13: "Recognition implies that the State granting it accepts the personality of the new State."

President Reagan has never withdrawn recognition of the Nicaraguan Government, which must mean that he thinks it is a legitimate Government. That is reality, and since that is the case, international law clearly proscribes the clandestine war he has been undertaking against Nicaragua. It is not only against international law, but it is against our own laws.

PRESIDENT SHOULD FIRE MARIANNE HALL

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, last week we read the comments of Marianne Hall. We have been waiting for action from the White House about her. So far there has been nothing but silence.

The President's appointee as chair of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal listed herself as the coauthor of the book "Foundations of Sand," in a biographical form used during consideration of her Senate confirmation, and she now says she was responsible only for editing the book.

Mr. Speaker, she is clearly not a very good editor. But, more importantly, she lacks any understanding of the plight of the American people, black or white, and as such cannot be expected to represent their interests on matters coming before the Tribunal.

I call on the President, as he comes back to the United States, to take the lead on this issue to demonstrate at last some sensitivity in this situation and fire the Chair of the Tribunal if she is unwilling to resign voluntarily.

MARIANNE M. HALL SHOULD RESIGN

(Mr. GEPHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, today, I ask for the resignation of Marianne Mele Hall. Her association with the book, the "Foundations of Sand," disqualifies her as a representative of the U.S. Government. The book is so terrible, that I cannot bear to quote from it. It's vicious racism and once again points out the insensitivity of the Reagan administration.

Reagan went to Bitburg yesterday. He didn't realize the pain that many Americans suffered during World War II.

Reagan appointed James Watt who made the famous remark that a certain board was representative because it includes a "black, Jew, woman and a cripple."

This administration attempts to grant tax exemptions to openly segregated schools.

These actions violate my beliefs. All Americans are equal, and they deserve respect. Marianne Hall is not someone who should represent the U.S. Government.

MS. HALL AND PRESIDENTIAL RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. DYMALLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, in his second inaugural address, President Ronald Reagan implied that America now enjoyed an unprecedented opportunity to end lingering racist attitudes. Considering Mr. Reagan's unfortunate approach to civil rights and civil liberties issues, this hopeful statement has been proven worthless. The current controversy surrounding Marianne Hall, a Presidential appointee, and her book "Foundations of Sand," has been symbolic of the contradictions between the President's rhetoric and the President's position on civil rights. Ms. Hall's editorial role in "Foundations of Sand" reflects a 19th century racist's attitude toward blacks. This is hardly representative of the hopeful, new era that President Reagan insists is here.

With commitment, I join the Congressional Black Caucus in its condemnation of Hall's efforts in "Foundations of Sand." With sadness, I must decry Mr. Reagan's poor judgment in furthering racist attitudes through his appointment of Ms. Hall. The President must stand for high moral principles, and he owes an obligation to the electorate to make good his inaugural promises. Since Mr. Reagan wishes to avoid this difficulty, let us, the Congressional Black Caucus, assure the American people that their Government does not tolerate racist public officials in its ranks. Let us continue to stand together against racism, and prove to the world that the American Government must never further the cause of intolerance and bigotry. We request an apology from the President to the American people, and we ask the President to request Ms. Hall's resignation.

PRESIDENT SHOULD ASK MARIANNE HALL TO RESIGN

(Mr. WHEAT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that Marianne Hall, President Reagan's appointee as Chair of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal, has surely saddened and surprised our President by her coauthorship of a racially repugnant and scientifically distorted book. She completely disregarded the President's often espoused belief for equality and opportunity for all our people. We all join the President in being saddened but, unfortunately, not surprised. For this is the administration that gave us Ann Burford, who spent her time cleaning up not waste sites but reputations. They also gave us Paul Thayer, convicted former Under Secretary of Defense; Ed Meese, investigated for filing résumés in his checkbook; and other notable appointees like Clarence Pendleton, Jim Watt and the indicted Ray Donovan.

Mr. Speaker, the President is fond of quoting a sign on Harry Truman's desk. There was another sign on that desk that said, "Always do right. You will surprise some people and astonish the rest."

Mr. President, astonish us, ask Marianne Hall to resign.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4, rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Tuesday, May 7, 1985.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 46, UNITED STATES CODE, REGARDING CODIFICATION

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 597) to amend subtitle II of title 46, United States Code, "Shipping," making technical and conforming changes, and for other purposes.

S. 597

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subtitle II of title 46, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) In section 3305(b), strike "life-saving" and "life preserver or firehose" and insert in lieu thereof "lifesaving" and "life preserver, lifesaving device, or firehose", respectively.

(2) In section 3501—

(A) in subsection (a), strike the comma; and

(B) in subsection (c), strike "violates subsection (b) of this section" and insert in lieu thereof "carries more passengers than the number of passengers permitted by the certificate of inspection".

(3) In section 7702(a), strike "mariners' " and insert in lieu thereof "mariner's".

(4) In section 8302(b), strike "clerks" and insert in lieu thereof "clerks,".

(5) In section 10504, amend subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) Subsections (b) and (c) of this section do not apply.

"(1) a vessel engaged in coastwise commerce.

"(2) a yacht.

"(3) a fishing vessel (except a vessel taking oysters).

"(4) a whaling vessel.".

(6) In section 11101(d), strike "light" and insert in lieu thereof "lighted".

(7)(A) In the analysis of chapter 121, amend the item relating to section 12109 to read as follows:

"12109. Recreational vessel licenses.".

(B) In sections 1210(5) and 12104(2), strike "pleasure" and insert in lieu thereof "recreational".

(C) In section 12109 and the catchline for such section, strike "Pleasure" and "pleasure vessel" wherever they appear and insert in lieu thereof "Recreational" and "recreational vessel", respectively.

(D) In section 12110 (a) and (c), strike "documented pleasure" wherever it appears and insert in lieu thereof "documented recreational".

(8) In section 12114(a), strike "of documentation".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago Congress passed legislation re-writing the Coast Guard laws concerning vessel inspection, manning, and seaman protection. This legislation simply makes technical corrections to that act to clarify some of its provisions and to bring it closer into conformance with the prior law.

The amendment to section 3305(b) simply standardizes the language and spelling used in the section.

The amendment to section 3501 clarifies the application of the criminal penalty for carrying more passengers than the number allowed in the vessel's certificate of inspection.

The amendment to section 7702(a) corrects a spelling error.

The amendment to section 8302(b) corrects a punctuation error.

The amendment to section 10504(d) corrects an inadvertent application of a penalty to masters on vessels for not paying seamen within 2 days after they are discharged from a vessel in the coastwise trade. Under the previous law vessels engaged in voyages between two places in the United States, including the Great Lakes, were exempt from this penalty. This amendment brings the law back to where it was previously, effective on August 26, 1983, the date of enactment of the codification.

The amendment to section 11101(d) corrects a spelling error.

The amendments to chapter 121 simply change the use of the word "pleasure vessel" to "recreational vessel" in order to standardize the useage of the term throughout the subtitle when we mean the same type of vessel.

The amendments to Part E of the subtitle standardize the use of the terms related to certificates of registry, merchant mariner's documents, and merchant seamen's licenses throughout the part. It makes no substantive change to law.

Section 2 of this legislation corrects an error when Congress passed the same law twice last year by repealing the earlier provision but continuing the regulations under the later provision.

Section 3 of this legislation corrects the Commercial Fishing Industry Vessels Act by clarifying that the vessels under this act must comply with chapter 37 of title 46, United States Code, which regulates the transportation of liquid bulk dangerous cargoes.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this very noncontroversial bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 597, a bill to make technical and nonsubstantive changes to our shipping laws. The bill makes three changes in subtitle II of title 46 of the United States Code. First, the bill clarifies the wage penalty provisions for coastwise commerce encompassing all voyages of vessels from one place in the United States to another including voyages on the Great Lakes. Second, the bill eliminates a duplicate provision in law regarding the requirement for exposure suits on U.S. vessels. Finally, S. 597 clarifies the limited application of dangerous cargo provisions to certain fishing industry vessels.

These amendments are necessary in order to correct errors in the 1983 codification of U.S. shipping laws. The bill provides for consistency in the application and use of terms as well as proper punctuation and grammatical construction. These changes are noncontroversial, and I urge my colleagues to support and approve this legislation.

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I also rise in support of S. 597, a bill to amend subtitle II of title 46, United States Code, making technical and conforming changes to various provisions of our shipping laws.

In particular, this bill makes three primary changes. First, it clarifies the wage penalties provisions for coastwise commerce which includes the Great Lakes. Second, it repeals a duplicate provision regarding the requirement for exposure suits on U.S. vessels. Third, it clarifies the limited application of dangerous cargo provisions to certain fishing industry vessels. In addition, minor amendments are included that correct errors in the 1983 codification of the shipping laws and provides for consistency in the application and use of terms as well as proper punctuation and grammatical construction.

Mr. Speaker, by making these amendments, this bill refines the shipping laws so they more closely reflect original congressional intent and in that sense are truly technical and conforming changes. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support and approve this legislation.●

● Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 597, a bill which makes technical and conforming changes in subtitle II of title 46 of the United States Code.

Early in the 98th Congress, Public Law 98-89, codifying certain of the shipping statutes, was enacted into law. As is inevitably the case in any undertaking of that magnitude, a few internal inconsistencies and technical imperfections found their way into the legislation. This bill is designed to correct those flaws.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no opposition to the legislation, and urge the Members' adoption so that we can speedily send it to the President for his signature.●

● Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in support of S. 597, a noncontroversial bill which amends subtitle II of title 46 of the United States Code. I am submitting a section-by-section analysis of S. 597 which addresses its three main provisions: First, a clarification of wage penalty provisions for coastwise commerce; second, repealing a duplicate provision regarding requirements for exposure suits on U.S. vessels; and third, clarifying the limited application of dangerous cargo provisions to certain fishing industry vessels.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 597

Section 1 make certain technical amendments to the shipping laws in subtitle II of title 46, United States Code. The amendments correct errors in the 1983 codification of these laws and provide for consistency in the application and use of terms as well as proper punctuation and grammatical construction.

In particular, subsection (a)(5) clarifies the wage penalty provisions in the U.S. shipping laws that apply to vessels engaged in the coastwise commerce. Coastwise commerce encompasses all voyages of vessels from one place in the United States to another, including voyages on the Great Lakes. As the law currently appears, section 10504 of title 46, United States Code, requires a vessel owner or master to pay a seaman 2 days' wages for each day payment of wages is delayed without sufficient cause after the termination of a voyage. Under prior law, former 46 U.S.C. 544, vessels engaged in coastwise commerce were exempt from this requirement. However, in the codification of the shipping laws in title 46 of the United States Code (Public Law 98-89), this exemption was inadvertently omitted.

The reason the wage penalty was enacted originally was to cure abuses occurring in the merchant marine where seamen were abandoned in foreign ports without their pay. Under this provision, if a seaman was not paid, the seaman would be able to receive relief under U.S. law. However, in the original law, the policy was set that this protection was not necessary for vessels engaged in commerce close by along the coast of the United States. In addition, certain fishing vessels, whaling vessels, yachts, and vessels engaged in voyages between the United States and Canada, or between adjacent States, were also exempted from this penalty provision. This provision preserves these exemptions.

This section would simply restore this exemption so that vessels that should properly be exempt from this penalty would not have to disrupt the pay and accounting systems already in place just because of an oversight in the codification of title 46, United States Code. Currently, vessels that enjoy this exemption are paying their seamen in a timely fashion and are legitimate businesses which are not seeking to fraudulently deprive U.S. merchant seamen of their rightful benefits. In fact, many of the seamen employed on vessels engaged in coastwise commerce are subject to union agreements which contemplated a slight delay because they provide for the periodic payment of their wages. Thus, although a seaman may not be paid upon the termination of a voyage, as this penalty provision envisions, the seaman would be paid on a biweekly or monthly basis in accordance with a contract with the shipping company and would not have sufficient cause for the penalty to apply. In fact, even without this exemption, because of the established practice of paying seamen in the coastwise commerce, the negotiated union agreements, and the modern accounting systems that shipping companies employ in the United States, it is certain that a seaman paid under these circumstances would not have sufficient cause to make a claim for additional compensation because of a gap in time between when a voyage terminated and when the seaman's paycheck arrived in a timely fashion.

Thus, from a historical and legal perspective, this provision in no way diminished the protection afforded our American seamen in the past and serves to eliminate this oversight in our shipping laws.

Section 2 simply eliminates a duplicate provision in the shipping laws requiring the use of exposure suits on vessels operating in cold waters. Both section 22 of the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-557, 98 Stat. 2871), enacted October 30, 1984, and section 701 of the act of November 8, 1984 (Public Law 98-623, 98 Stat. 3413), enacted substantively identical sections 3102 of title 46, United States Code, related to exposure suits. The purpose of this section of the bill is technical and nonsubstantive in nature. It repeals the earlier section, section 22, and its amendments as of the date of enactment of the later section, section 701, and includes a savings provision so that regulations prescribed and actions taken under, and references to, section 701 and its amendments. Thus, no disruption occurs in the requirement for exposure suits by law or regulation, or is the requirement changed in any way.

Section 3 clarifies a provision in the shipping laws in section 403(a) of the Commercial Fishing Industry Vessel Act (Public Law 98-364, 98 Stat. 450) permitting the transportation of cargo to remote communities in Alaska by fishing industry vessels. It makes clear that fish processing vessels that carry flammable or combustible liquid bulk cargo are subject to the safety requirements in chapter 37 of title 46, United States Code. Section 3702(d) of that chapter subjects all fish-processing vessels carrying this type of cargo to regulation by the Coast Guard. Thus, proper storage and transfer procedures would be required for safe operation of the vessel. Section 403(a) permits the carriage of these cargoes but was not intended to circumvent the requirements of chapter 37 of title 46, United States Code. In effect, this clarification merely ensures uniform application of the law to all fish-processing vessels. This change does not alter the application of the law to the transfer of fuel or bunkers which is not regulated under chapter 37.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this bill makes strictly technical changes to the law, and I urge my colleagues to support it.●

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, there are not other speakers on our side, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 597.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise an extend their remarks on the Senate bill, S. 597.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE PANAMA CANAL ACT OF 1979 REGARDING INTEREST PAYMENTS

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 664) to amend the Panama Canal Act of 1979 with respect to the payment of interest on the investment of the United States.

H.R. 664

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1302(b) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 (22 U.S.C. 3712)(b)) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "; except that the part of the tolls and other receipts that covers interest on the investment of the United States in the Panama Canal pursuant to section 1602 and 1603 of this Act shall be deposited into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts".

(b) Section 1603(b)(2)(A) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 (22 U.S.C 3793(b)(2)(A)) is amended by striking out "Treasury" and inserting in lieu thereof "Panama Canal Commission Fund".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this Act shall apply only to tolls and other receipts of the Commission deposited in the Treasury on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY].

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak today in support of H.R. 664, a bill to amend the Panama Canal Act of 1979 with respect to the payment of interest on the investment of the United States in the Panama Canal. H.R. 664 requires that the portion of tolls and other revenues collected by the Panama Canal Commission and attributable to interest on the U.S. investment be deposited into the General Treasury of the United States. Under current law, these interest payments are deposited into the Panama Canal Commission Fund. The sponsor of the bill, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf, Mr. JACK FIELDS, introduced a similar bill in the 98th Congress which passed the House under suspension of the rules on June 25, 1984. H.R. 664 is cosponsored by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Honorable WALTER JONES, and by Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, and Mr. TAUZIN.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very important measure, in that it enabled the subcommittee to reduce the authorization for the Panama Canal Commission for fiscal year 1986 by $10 million—from $446,784,000 to $436,784,000.

Section 1302(b) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 requires that all tolls and other receipts of the Panama Canal Commission be deposited in the Panama Canal Commission Fund in the U.S. Treasury. Section 1(a) of this bill amends section 1302(b) of the act to direct that the portion of tolls and revenues that represents the interest on the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal be deposited into the General Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. This section would allow the Panama Canal Commission to account for the interest deposits at the same time that it accounts for deposits into the Panama Canal Fund.

Section 1603(b)(2)(A) of the act states that moneys deposited into the Treasury will decrease the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal. When that money is withdrawn from the Panama Canal Commission Fund and deposited into the General Treasury, the U.S. investment would be increased by that amount, thereby offsetting the decrease required in the act. Section 1(b) of Mr. FIELD's bill strikes the word "Treasury" and inserts in lieu thereof "the Panama Canal Commission Fund." This ensures that the deposit will have no impact on the level of the U.S. investment.

Section 2 of the bill simply states that its provisions will become effective when the bill is signed into law.

I would like to compliment my colleague from Texas, JACK FIELDS, for his leadership on behalf of this legislation, and I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in this bipartisan effort by passing H.R. 664.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to express my sincere and heartfelt appreciation to the new chairman of the Panama Canal/OCS Subcommittee, Mr. LOWRY, for his willingness and leadership in moving H.R. 664 in such an expeditious manner.

I would also like to thank our distinguished full committee chairman, WALTER B. JONES, and our colleagues CARROLL HUBBARD, DON YOUNG, and BILLY TAUZIN for joining with me as sponsors of this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 664 is identical to a bill I introduced last year, which was adopted without dissent by the House of Representatives on June 25, 1984.

The bill's purpose is to correct a serious flaw in the Panama Canal Act of 1979.

Mr. Speaker, the authors of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 intended that the interest payment on our investment in the canal be paid directly into the general fund of the U.S. Treasury. Unfortunately, because of language contained in sections 1302(b) and 1603(b)(2) of Public Law 96-70, that interest payment is now being paid into the Panama Canal Commission Fund instead of the general fund of the U.S. Treasury.

As a result, the Federal Government has been unable to utilize these funds to reduce the deficit, and the level of our investment in the canal has been reduced by some $53.6 million.

H.R. 664 will correct this serious problem by requiring that the interest on our investment in the canal be automatically deposited, on a monthly basis, into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. By so doing, H.R. 664 not only solves the interest problem but it ensures that there will be no further erosion in our investment base.

At a time of serious budget concerns, my colleagues will be pleased to learn that the interest payments to be deposited in the general fund will amount to some $10 million a year.

While my bill eliminates the interest problem in a prospective manner, it does not deal with the interest payments currently deposited into the Panama Canal Commission Fund. I have decided not to address this issue because of the unique cash-flow problems of the Panama Canal Commission.

These funds are needed because Public Law 96-70 prohibits the PCC from either borrowing money or making a profit, which would have to be paid to the Republic of Panama, as stipulated by the Panama Canal treaties.

Nevertheless, if an acceptable method can be devised to transfer the $53.6 million, or some portion of those funds, into the general fund of the Treasury, I would support such an effort.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, just a few words on why I feel H.R. 664 is the proper approach and solution to the Panama Canal interest problem.

While the administration would prefer that Congress solve this problem through the appropriations process, I believe H.R. 664 is the best way to accomplish that goal for several reasons. First, the procedure established in H.R. 664 is both a simple and a permanent solution to this problem. Frankly, I cannot imagine why anyone would want to come back year after year and amend the authorization and appropriation bills to ensure that the interest payment is properly deposited. With my bill, you would eliminate that needless and unnecessary requirement.

Second, by eliminating the interest payment from the annual authorization and appropriation process, we ensure that the entire amount of interest that is due will be paid to the benefit of the taxpayers and not subject to the potential whims of the legislative process.

And, finally, by enacting this legislation during the current fiscal year, we will ensure that we will not lose the benefit of up to $3 million in interest payments, which are lost under the administration's proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe this simple, straightforward proposal is long overdue, and I am extremely pleased that H.R. 664 has been scheduled for floor action today. I am confident that all of our colleagues can strongly support this legislation.

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 664, introduced by my colleague from Texas [Mr. FIELDS] solves a major part of a problem the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has been dealing with in connection with the Panama Canal for the past 3 years.

This bill directs the Panama Canal Commission to deposit the interest on the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal into the general fund of the Treasury. Currently this interest payment is deposited into the Panama Canal Commission Fund and may not be used by the General Treasury to offset the deficit. This interest payment will amount to approximately $10.2 million in revenues in fiscal year 1986, and approximately $850,000 for each month it is in effect in fiscal year 1985. In addition, the bill ends the annual decrease in the level of the principal that the interest payment is calculated on.

I would like to point out that this legislation passed the House on June 25, 1984, under suspension of the rules without a dissenting voice.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this measure.●

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no other requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 664.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 664, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted to extend their remarks and to include therein extraneous material on the subject of the special order speech today by the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

JOAN ESPOSITO RECEIVES THE 1985 DANTE AWARD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call to the attention of my colleagues the achievements of Joan Esposito, coanchor for the 5 p.m. "Eyewitness News" on WLS-TV in Chicago, who will receive the 14th Annual Dante Award of the Joint Civic Committee of Italian Americans on May 17, at a luncheon given in her honor at the Como Inn in Chicago.

Joan Esposito joined WLS-TV in December 1981 as a general assignment reporter and substitute anchor, and during 1982 and 1983 served as coanchor of the "Weekend Eyewitness News." She has maintained the highest standard of integrity in her broadcasting career, and in 1982, she received a Chicago Emmy Award for Individual Achievement for performers who appear on camera. For her contributions to broadcasting in Chicago, she richly deserves the Dante Award, because it was Dante Alighieri, in his "Divine Comedy," who said, "Men should never be timid about the truth."

The Dante Award was established by the Joint Civic Committee of Italian Americans, an umbrella organization comprised of more than 40 civic organizations in the Chicago area, to extend recognition annually to an individual in the mass media communications field who has made positive contributions to the profession of journalism. This year's JCCIA president is Charles C. Porcelli.

Joan Esposito graduated from Ohio State University with a bachelor of science degree in allied medicine and a master's degree in community health education. While pursuing her graduate degree, she worked for 3 years as a respiratory therapist, and later coordinated medical seminars for health professionals throughout the country.

In 1979, Joan Esposito began her broadcasting career at WCMH-TV, the NBC affiliate in Columbus, OH, where she hosted and produced segments for "PM Magazine." At the same time, she also worked as a news reporter and anchor for WRFD radio in Columbus. From October 1980 to July 1981, she served as anchor and general assignment reporter for KCRA-TV, the NBC affiliate in Sacramento, CA, where she anchored the "Sunrise Edition" program as well as anchored and produced the "Today Show" local network cutins.

Immediately before coming to WLS-TV, Joan Esposito served as reporter and Sunday night coanchor at WGN-TV in Chicago from July to December 1981. She is a member of the Chicago TV Academy and the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

The 14th Annual Dante Award Luncheon will be held at the Como Inn, and many political dignitaries, civic leaders, and leaders of the communications industry will be in attendance. John Drury, coanchor with Joan Esposito on the 5 p.m. WLS-TV "Eyewitness News" will serve at the master of ceremonies of the luncheon, and the invocation will be offered by the Reverend Lawrence Cozzi, C.S., administrator of Villa Scalabrini, the Italian Old Peoples Home in Melrose Park. Jerome N. Zurla, chairman of the luncheon, and Carl De Moon, chairman of the JCCIA Anti-Defamation Committee, will present the Dante Award to Ms. Esposito.

For the 10th straight year, the John Fischetti Scholarship will also be awarded at the luncheon. The scholarship was established by the Joint Civic Committee of Italian Americans to further the study of Italian American students in communications and is named after the Pulitzer Prize-winning political cartoonist.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my warmest congratulations to Joan Esposito on receiving the Dante Award, and for the strong and constructive impact she has made on our community. Her career, her character, and her splendid record of achievement prove that she is, indeed, a "friend of truth."●

EXTENSION OF FIFRA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BEDELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, today my colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, and I are introducing legislation to provide for a simple 1-year reauthorization of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act [FIFRA].

We introduce this legislation today for two reasons. First, the Committee on Agriculture must report authorization measures for fiscal year 1986 by May 15 of this year as required by the Budget Act. Introduction of this bill today will allow time to move the measure through the subcommittee and full committee by that deadline.

Second, reporting a simple reauthorization bill by May 15 will provide the Subcommittee on Department Operations, Research, and Foreign Agriculture an opportunity to consider in a responsible yet timely manner more comprehensive measures making substantive changes in FIFRA. In fact, the subcommittee has scheduled 2 full days of public hearings on such legislation for May 20 and 21.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Committee on Agriculture must act this year to address the persistent concerns which plague FIFRA. Although many of the problems with the act's implementation are complex and longstanding, I am encouraged by what I perceive as a genuine interest by parties on all sides to reach a consensus on the most troubling issues associated with the manufacture and use of pesticides.

I am hopeful that the need to resolve the major areas of differences surrounding FIFRA will result in progress on this issue within the coming weeks.

H.R. 2355

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

Section 31 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, as amended (7 U.S.C. 136y), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this subchapter for the period beginning October 1, 1985 and ending September 30, 1986, $57,067,300."●

PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES REIMBURSEMENT UNDER MEDICARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today Mr. FLIPPO and I are introducing a bill to instruct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to support five national demonstration projects to test the feasibility of Medicare reimbursement for preventive health services.

Mr. Speaker, by the year 2000, over 13 percent of the U.S. population, or about 36 million people, will be 65 years of age or older. Persons 85 years of age and older are currently the fastest growing group in the U.S. population. The existence of a large elderly population is unprecedented in human history. As late as 1900, the life expectancy in the United States was only 47 years. Because the phenomenon is so recent, our knowledge has not kept pace with the rapid growth of the elderly population. Only within the past 20 years has there been any real interest in health problems affecting the elderly. It is a new concern for us, and one of great importance.

As usual, the focus on health research and services to the elderly has centered on treatment. Very little emphasis has been given to prevention. Yet increasing evidence shows that many health problems of the elderly can be prevented. While human immortality is only a dream, the possibility of "death without disease" is real. The new human biology of aging suggests that our life span will eventually increase to an average of 85 years. Mr. Speaker, it is within our power to make all of those 85 years—or more—healthy and productive. Our citizens need not be burdened during their later years with illnesses and health problems that are largely preventable.

Unfortunately, the elderly suffer from a dual prejudice. Not only are they faced with the traditional bias toward treatment over prevention, they are also burdened with negative stereotypes that suggest that health problems are inevitable in old age. We have often heard that to grow old is to lose our health, vitality, memory, strength, learning ability, and a host of other qualities. Unfortunately, many people—including many elderly—continue to accept as true these erroneous stereotypes of aging. In terms of health, this frequently leads to a fatalistic acceptance of impairment. It has been estimated that 90 percent of the elderly do not regularly visit a doctor. A major reason cited is a sense of futility.

These negative attitudes are not supported by the evidence. In fact, there is more and more evidence that shows that preventive health programs can very effectively control or reduce health problems and costs among the elderly. Screening programs for hypertension, exercise programs, nutrition education programs and others have been successful. The projects proposed under this bill would not only demonstrate the benefits of preventive programs, but would also show the special benefits of preventive services for the elderly.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, most public health services aimed at promoting health and preventing diseases are rarely reimbursed by health insurance. Yet the cost benefits of preventive health services are well documented:

Measles immunization is estimated to be worth 10 times its cost. Immunization programs for the elderly, such as those for pneumonia and tetanus, are likewise highly cost effective.

Screening programs for hypertension, breast cancer, vision disorders and other health problems of the elderly have strong favorable cost-benefit ratios.

Despite its cost-effectiveness, prevention is the stepchild of national health policies. Only 3 percent of Federal health dollars are spent on it. Yet there is tremendous potential to make further inroads on the high costs of ill health among the elderly.

Mr. Speaker, is the cost of intervention to prevent disease and disability more acceptable to us than the cost of not intervening in preventing diseases? I think not.

Therefore, we have introduced this bill to establish a demonstration program designed to reduce disability and dependency through the provision of preventive health service to Medicare beneficiaries. The demonstration program would make a number of preventive services available to Medicare beneficiaries including health screenings, health risk appraisals, mental health intervention and stress reduction.

Services would be provided by various public health personnel such as physicians, allied health personnel and clinical psychologists.

The demonstration program would be conducted under the direction of schools of public health.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services would be required to submit a report to Congress not later than 3 years after enactment which would evaluate these costs and benefits of preventive health services, including any reduction in admissions to hospitals and long-term care facilities and reduced lengths of stay. In addition, the Secretary would be required to include recommendations in her report with respect to providing preventive health services as a Medicare benefit.

Dealing with health problems of the elderly will require a reimbursement scheme that encourages public health practitioners to provide and beneficiaries to receive services that will prevent disease and promote health and vitality. This bill can provide us information on the usefulness and effectiveness of providing preventive health service to the Medicare population.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the text of our bill be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

H.R. 2368

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEMONSTRATION OF PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE.

(a) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish a demonstration program designed to reduce disability and dependency through the provision of preventive health services to individuals entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (hereinafter in this section referred to as "medicare beneficiaries").

(b) PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES UNDER DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The preventive health services to be made available under the demonstration program shall include—

(1) health screenings,

(2) health risk appraisals,

(3) immunizations, and

(4) counseling on and instruction in—

(A) diet and nutrition,

(B) reduction of stress,

(C) exercise and exercise programs,

(D) sleep regulation,

(E) injury prevention,

(F) prevention of alcohol and drug abuse,

(G) prevention of mental health disorders,

(H) self-care, including use of medication, and

(I) reduction of smoking.

(c) CONDUCT OF PROGRAM.—The demonstration program shall—

(1) be conducted under the direction of accredited public or private nonprofit schools of public health;

(2) be conducted in no fewer than five sites, which sites shall be chosen so as to be geographically diverse and shall be readily accessible to a significant number of medicare beneficiaries;

(3) involve community outreach efforts at each site to enroll the maximum number of medicare beneficiaries in the program; and

(4) be designed—

(A) to test alternative methods of payment for preventive health services, including payment on a prepayment basis as well as payment on a fee-for-service basis,

(B) to permit a variety of appropriate health care providers to furnish preventive health services, including physicians, health educators, nurses, allied health personnel, dieticians, and clinical psychologists, and

(C) to facilitate evaluation under subsection (d).

(d) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall evaluate the demonstration project in order to determine—

(1) the short-term and long-term costs and benefits of providing preventive health services for medicare beneficiaries, including any reduction in inpatient services resulting from providing the services, and

(2) what practical financing mechanisms exist to provide payment for preventive health services under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

(e) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—(1) Not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a preliminary report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the progress made in the demonstration program, including a description of the sites at which the program is being conducted and the preventive health services being provided at the different sites.

(2) Not later than five years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a final report to those Committees on the demonstration program and shall include in the report—

(A) the evaluation described in subsection (d), and

(B) recommendations for appropriate legislative changes to incorporate payment for cost-effective preventive health service into the medicare program.

(f) FUNDING.—Expenditures made for the demonstration program shall be made from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1841 of the Social Security Act). Grants and payments under contracts may be made either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined by the Secretary, and shall be made in such installments and on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

(g) WAIVER OF MEDICARE REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall waive compliance with the such requirements of title XVIII of the Social Security Act to the extent and for the period the Secretary finds necessary for the conduct of the demonstration program.●

● Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill introduced by my colleague, Mr. STARK, to instruct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to support five national demonstration projects to test the feasibility of Medicare reimbursement for prevention services. As Mr. STARK pointed out, there are numerous examples where early intervention has saved millions of health care dollars not to mention lives. Benjamin Franklin was right, Mr. Speaker, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. We all know that health promotion and disease prevention program are cost effective. The logic behind prevention of disease is incontestable, yet, as a nation, we continue to ignore the full potential of a well conceived and funded prevention services system. Modest investments in prevention programs will not only help prevent illness, premature death, and disability, they will help slow down the rapidly escalating costs of medical care.

Why is it that we fail to see the cost-savings potential of prevention? I believe that this dilemma is best summarized by Dr. William F. Bridgers in a 1984 speech before a gathering of preventive medicine physicians when he stated:

> If you claim you can prevent something from happening at some point in the future, and then the future arrives and sure enough, people don't get whatever it was you claimed you could prevent, how do they or even you know for sure they would have gotten it even if you hadn't prevented it? Policy makers believe they're buying something tangible when they purchase therapies—a surgical procedure, a lab test or x-ray, an episode of hospital care—but they're buying nonevents when they purchase prevention, or so they might think. You and I know they're buying life—a positive purchase if ever there was one, yet we're trying to sell a negative: postponement of death; avoidance of disease.

We maintain this bill will provide the opportunity to demonstrate our national commitment to prevention of disease, death, and disability. Prevention's record is impressive but more needs to be done in this area. In order to fully explore the potential of prevention, further studies must be conducted. This is why we have introduced this legislation to begin laying the groundwork for the establishment of a preventive services reimbursement system. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.●

RESIGNATION REQUEST FOR MARIANNE HALL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, last week I joined by colleagues from the black and Hispanic caucuses in sponsoring House Resolution 155 demanding that the President immediately remove Marianne Hall whom he appointed recently to chair the Copyright and Royalty Tribunal. It is disturbing when officials in positions of public trust advocate racist ideologies which would undermine the concept of a color-blind society—the highest ideal of our democracy. The greatest progress we have made as a democracy has been the recognition of the equality of all before the law and the equality of opportunity for all citizens in pursuing their share of the benefits offered by our bountiful Nation. How, then, can Government officials entrusted in discharging their duties with the responsibility to promote these ideals at the same time identify with the inimical ideology of racism? The appointment of Ms. Hall can only demonstrate a lack of sensitivity from this administration.

Mr. Speaker, I call on the President to restore the trust of the American people in their Government. To restore the trust in their officials; officials who uphold the highest ideals for which America stands. I, therefore, call for the removal of Marianne Hall from a position of public trust for she has betrayed that trust through her association with racist ideas.●

SENATOR SAM ERVIN, JR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, as the senior member of North Carolina's congressional delegation, it is an honor for me to take a few moments to pay tribute to the late Senator Sam Ervin. With your permission, I would also like to include in the RECORD the comments of a number of Senator Ervin's former delegation colleagues.

Senator Ervin served in this body for 1 year, filling out the unexpired term of his brother, who died in office in 1945. Then, in 1954, he was appointed to fill the Senate vacancy caused by the death of Senator Clyde Hoey, and served in the Senate until his retirement in 1974.

Sam Ervin was known as one of the foremost experts of his time on the subject of the U.S. Constitution, and he received international recognition for his pivotal role in the Watergate hearings. Yet, to those of us who knew him well, he will always remain plain "Senator Sam," a man who portrayed himself as a simple country lawyer, but was so much more than that.

Sam Ervin never set out to be politician. He only agreed to serve in the House when he was promised he would not be expected to run for reelection. He wanted to return to North Carolina and practice law, and that is what he did. He was similarly hesitant about accepting appointment to the Senate in 1954, and, in fact, informed Gov. William B. Umstead that he would rather not be asked to give up his seat on the North Carolina State Supreme Court. The Governor did make that request, however, and Sam Ervin accepted that duty to serve his Governor and his State.

Sam Ervin's love was for the law, not politics. He regarded his service in the Senate not just as service to his constituents, but as service to the law.

The U.S. Constitution served as Senator Sam's compass—the tool that guided him in his daily deliberations. Since he relied on that document to chart his course, his voting record defied pigeonholing. He seemed to be a devout liberal on some matters, yet a staunch conservative on others. His positions on the issues of the day were not determined by the prevailing ideological fashion, but, rather, by the principles set forth by our Founding Fathers some 200 years ago.

To the State of North Carolina, Sam Ervin would have gone down in history as one of our most distinguished sons even without Watergate, but the episode brought him to the attention of the American public at large, as well. His appointment as chairman of the Select Committee on Presidential Activities—the Watergate Committee—was a testament to his stature within the U.S. Senate. The Senate majority leader at that time, Mike Mansfield, has said that Senator Ervin was the only Member of the Senate so respected by members of both political parties that he would automatically command the respect of all the participants.

Although those Watergate hearings were marked by Senator Ervin's humor and good will, I know they were not easy for him. Sam Ervin had great respect for the office of the Presidency—he did not wish to see that office diminished in any way. But he also believed very strongly that in this country, no man is above the law, even if that man is the President of the United States.

I had the good fortune to serve in the North Carolina congressional delegation with Senator Sam for 12 years. After his return to Morganton, NC, following his retirement, it was also my privilege to serve as his Congressman. Although we belonged to different political parties, Sam Ervin and I were friends, and, over the years, I looked to him for guidance and assistance on a number of occasions.

I feel that I am both a better public servant and a better person because of Senator Sam's example. He was a man of true compassion, he never lost his genuine affection for his home and its people, he never lost sight of the fact that our actions must be guided by the tenets of the law, and, even in times of adversity, he retained his sense of humor. As a legislator myself, I can think of no finer example to which to aspire.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand correspondence from former Representative Horace R. Kornegay, and under my unanimous-consent request, I am making that a part of the RECORD at this point, along with several other pieces of correspondence. Mr. Kornegay served in the congressional delegation with the Senator from 1961 to 1969.

I also have correspondence from former Congressman Roy Taylor and from the former dean of the delegation, L.H. Fountain.

In addition, I have statements from former Congressman Wilmer D. "Vinegar Bend" Mizell, former Congressman David Henderson, former Congressman and former Senator Alton Lennon from our delegation, and former Congressman L. Richardson Preyer. All of these men have served with the Senator during his career here and have asked me to have these remarks placed in the RECORD.

WASHINGTON, DC,
May 2, 1985.

Hon. JAMES T. BROYHILL,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM: You are to be commended for obtaining a special order for the purpose of memorializing our late and good friend, Sam J. Ervin, Jr., and I am very grateful to you for extending to me as a former congressional colleague of Senator Ervin an opportunity to express my admiration for him in the Congressional Record.

Millions of words and thousands of pages have been written about Sam Ervin, the great constitutional lawyer, the courageous senator and the humane and erudite judge. To be sure, this is the great and grand view that the public throughout the country had of the Senator, but far more meaningful to me and the way that I will always remember his is as a good personal friend and noble human being. To paraphrase a famous poet, he talked with the crowds and kept his virtue—he walked with kings and lost not the common touch. Those admirable qualities of leadership and humility have been indelibly etched in my memory from the time that I was a law student at Wake Forest University and he was a justice on the North Carolina Supreme Court. As the program chairman for the annual banquet of the Student Bar Association, I invited Justice Ervin to make the address which he readily agreed to do, and then I had the most memorable experience of introducing him as our speaker at the banquet. From that time on, down through the years, our friendship and fondness for each other flourished. We met and visited frequently through the ensuring years at Bar meetings, political meetings and during our congressional days here in Washington.

His humanism and humility were among his many great attributes that always came through to those who knew him well. A good example was his typical reaction to personal accolades. After he gained worldwide fame from the Watergate investigation, public tributes came thick and fast and in my view, they were at times a source of some embarrassment to him. One evening after one such occasion, he said to me, "Horace, I am more comfortable with the emotions in a courtroom than in a ballroom. If a defendant is conviced, he feels sad. If he is acquitted, he feels glad. But at a testimonial dinner when I see all of those familiar faces and hear all of those kind and beautiful words, I feel like a man who has suddenly come down with a severe case of mistaken identity." The sentiment which he expressed on that occasion was a true measure of his personal modesty. He was always more at home and more comfortable with his family, with his friends and with those who knew him best.

He was truly a living legend in his own time and that legend will grow as part of American history. But most precious to the legion of those who knew him best was the immutability of his friendship.

To dear Miss Margaret, his devoted wife of more than 60 years, his wonderful children and grandchildren, I extend my deepest and heartfelt sympathies at this time of great sorrow in their lives.

Most sincerely,

HORACE R. KORNEGAY.

REMARKS BY ROY A. TAYLOR

Senator Sam Ervin occupied a place in history that no one can replace. He was a powerful thinker, a humorist, a teller of stories, a rich personality. To me he represented political courage and integrity in every thought and action. He was willing to follow his convictions to the point of taking the unpopular side of issues especially if the Constitution was concerned. The Constitution has lost its best friend.

No group of House Representatives could have had a more cooperative straight forward and solid Senator to work with than those of us from North Carolina had in Senator Sam.

An editorial in the Asheville Citizen stated: "Few senators leave a lasting mark on government and the nation's law. Sam J. Ervin, Jr. was one who did.

"He stands apart from others of his time because he did not merely live in history; he shaped it. That is what people call 'greatness.' Like other figures who have achieved that select place in American life, Ervin will be remembered as much for what he believed as for what he did."

He was devoted to his family and often referred to his wife to whom he was married in 1924 as "Miss Margaret." My wife and I were happy to have been present for their 50th wedding anniversary given by close friends.

I agree with James Kilpatrick in his syndicated column titled "Remembrances of Senator Sam" where he stated, "Those of us who loved him are left poorer by his death but richer by his life. He was the last of the Founding Fathers."

My wife, Evelyn, and I wish the best for "Miss Margaret" and the other members of Senator Sam's family.

STATEMENT BY L.H. FOUNTAIN

Before Senator Sam Ervin, Jr., became a member of the U.S. Senate in June 1954 he had already made much history in his home state of North Carolina.

As a private citizen, community and church leader and public official in many areas of community, state and national life, Sen. Ervin had demonstrated a superior capacity and love for full citizenship responsibilities from the local to an international level.

He was a twice wounded World War I hero, often cited for gallantry in action on the field of battle, a recipient of many awards as a fighter in the American First Division in France—awards including the French Fourragere, the Purple Heart with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Silver Star and the Distinguished Service Cross.

Following that dreadful "war to end all wars" he returned to his hometown of Morganton, was admitted to the North Carolina Bar in 1919 and began the practice of law. He became a brilliant lawyer, later on an experienced, highly qualified and respected judge serving on a number of courts including his own Burke County Criminal Court, the North Carolina Superior Court and later as an associate justice on the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

During and between his services as a judge on various courts, he managed to find time to serve on the North Carolina State Board of Law Examiners, as Congressman from the 10th Congressional District in the 79th Congress, on various commissions, on local boards and College Boards of Trustees including the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina. What I like to think of as his first period of his private, professional and public service, in his home area and throughout North Carolina, earned his doctoral degrees from many colleges and universities and the love, admiration and respect of the people of North Carolina.

I think of Sen. Sam's second period of service as that period between June 1954 and January 3, 1975—his more than 20 years of fruitful and distinguished history-making service in the United States Senate. I think his record in the Senate is well-known, almost self-explanatory, probably climaxed by his sterling leadership as Chairman of the Senate Watergate Investigating Committee which impacted and changed the lives of countless hundreds in one way or another and brought out much of Sen. Ervin's true greatness.

His next full period of achievements has been since his retirement from the United States Senate to his beautiful home area in Burke County North Carolina where he practiced a little law, wrote a few books, daily mingled with the people he loved and actively participated in the modern day life of his home community and North Carolina—always remaining accessible to those who wanted to see him and get a few more words of wisdom from his remarkable mind.

Since others have spoken or will speak or write of Sen. Ervin's life in full detail, I'd like to repeat in substance what my wife and I said in a sympathy message to Mrs. Ervin, Senator Sam's lovely widow—"Miss Margaret"—as he used to call her.

"Notwithstanding the quality of his life and accomplishments in North Carolina before he went to the United States Senate in 1954, during my stay in the House of Representatives while Senator Ervin was in the Senate, I proudly saw him continue to grow in wisdom, knowledge and understanding reflecting great credit upon North Carolina and the Nation and establishing an image for integrity, courage, common sense and good humor that will never be forgotten."

Until the Senate Watergate Hearings and the subsequent events, including the resignation of a President of the United States, most of the people in America, even many in his home state of North Carolina, were not fully aware of the greatness of Senator Sam. And yet, when he left the Senate he departed as one of the most illustrious members ever to serve in that great body and will be remembered long after others have been forgotten.

Paraphrasing what the former Speaker of the House, John McCormack, once said about another great statesman, former President Harry Truman: "Sam Ervin lived as he believed and died as he lived a scholarly and down to earth thinker and courageous fighter to the end."

STATEMENT OF FORMER CONGRESSMAN WILMER D. "VINEGAR BEND" MIZELL

It is a privilege for me to join my former colleagues in honoring the memory of Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr. This Harvard educated "country lawyer" had a boundless love of the law. He was second to none in his knowledge of the Constitution and his diligence in upholding its principles. His legal acumen was complemented by his unwavering faith in the people. He never lost touch with his fellow North Carolinians and returned home to Morgantown frequently when he served in the Senate. Senator Sam once said that our problems in Washington were due to air conditioning. He explained that in the days before this luxury, Members of Congress escaped the heat and humidity of the capital city by going home for the summer and listening to the citizens who elected them. Those of us who served with Sam Ervin have no doubt that his integrity and service to the State of North Carolina will stand as an example for generations to come.

REMARKS OF HON. DAVID HENDERSON

I recall that when the former members of Congress honored Senator Ervin, I was one of the former members who wrote an expression of high admiration and fondness for the Senator. I know he must have appreciated those expressions, inasmuch as he referred to them in his autobiography.

It was my personal privilege and honor to attend Senator Ervin's funeral in Morganton, and that occasion was also a high tribute to the love and admiration that the people of his home community and all over the state had for Senator Sam.

As a young member of Congress I learned that Senator Sam was most interested in helping me begin my service to the people of the Third District of North Carolina, and I found that he was unfailingly helpful throughout the years we served together. Lastly, I think I most admired Senator Ervin for his unfailing and untiring efforts to understand, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of our nation.

Senator Ervin was a personal friend, but more than that, an outstanding public servant, the likes of whom North Carolina has never before produced, and probably never will again.

REMARKS OF HON. ALTON LENNON

I consider it a high honor to have been the "senior Senator" from the State of North Carolina when Sam Ervin first came to the United States Senate, and I worked closely with him during my later tenure in the House of Representatives.

Sam Ervin never forgot where he came from, and he never lost sight of the fact that in this country, we are guided by the principles found in the Constitution. His love for the law, and his search for a truer understanding of the law, knew no limits.

He was my colleague and my friend, and America is a better place because of Senator Ervin's service to this country.

L. RICHARDSON PREYER,
Greensboro, NC, May 1, 1985.

DEAR JIM: I appreciate your thoughtfulness in giving Senator Ervin's friends the opportunity to reflect on his memory.

We all are familiar with Senator Sam's distinguished political career, but what I shall remember most about him is the sense of joy in living that he and his beloved "Miss Margaret" radiated. It was always a pleasure to be in their presence and hear his laughter.

He was not, of course, just a jolly backslapper. He camouflaged a keen mind and steel will behind the humor and the "country lawyer" exterior. He was a totally secure person, whose basic values were so solid he did not have to pretend to be tough or smart and could be a complete human being enjoying life to the fullest.

He was an authentic American hero. Only America—and perhaps only Burke County, North Carolina—could have produced him.

We shall all miss him very much.

Sincerely,

RICH.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. First, Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman for yielding and also for his generous thoughtfulness in invoking and evoking the memory of this great American.

North Carolina has indeed produced great congressional leaders. I agree with the gentleman that when history is written, Sam Ervin will be one of the great, great leaders who served truly in the line of command since the first Congress. And we must remember that the House has been the scene of former Presidents after they had served as Presidents seeking membership in the House of Representatives. John Quincy Adams was one.

I think that history will show that Sam Ervin ranks right up as a coequal to these great minds because Sam Ervin had, as the gentleman very properly brought out, a keen sense of constitutional presence and responsibility.

The way I personally became acquainted with Sam Ervin, I think, should be worthy of note and stated for the RECORD. That was in connection with one of the first developments in constitutional delineation of authority between the Congress and the Presidency that first agitated, and to this day is still an imponderable question, the first administration that I served with when I was elected to the Congress, and that was the question of the Congress having mandated and ordered not once but three times the expenditure of $3 billion for the development of the RS-70 bomber. The Secretary of Defense then defied the congressional mandate and believed that that was a waste of money because, in his words, the day of the manned bomber was over and he was not about to make the expenditure. So the Congress on three successive occasions tried to force the administration to expend the funds, which it never did. That raised a sort of a constitutional imponderable. How far can the Congress go in mandating an executive to faithfully execute the laws as passed by the Congress?

But the real opportunity I had to know Senator Ervin was later when he headed the Committee on the Judiciary and the subcommittee that had jurisdiction of this very important matter, and the question of impoundment came up and, if the gentleman will recall because I think he was a Member of this body by that time, there were hearings on both sides in the Judiciary Committees of the House and the Senate. But in the Senate, Senator Ervin really performed a tremendous magisterial job, and I in the House picked up his hearings and his pronouncements on the matter and had occasion to bring them forth on the House side with respect to some of the impoundments of funds that the Congress had mandated be expended in various departments, the Presidents refusing and trying to arrogate to themselves—and I say, to themselves, because there was more than one President—line-item vetoes through the indirect means of impoundment.

So as a result of my speaking out, I was invited to address the prestigious summer lecture sessions of the University of Colorado in Boulder in 1973, on August 8. In good faith, I accepted it because that was going to be the subject matter. So I had occasion to go over and have discussions with the Senator, who was helping me to prepare what I thought was going to be a serious presentation to this august body. But when I got to Boulder, I became the target of a local group that was out to make a case on another matter then agitating the minds of the minority, which I happened to come from, and I was almost killed in the process and I never got to speak on impoundment.

I was lucky to get out, anyway, and I settled for that; but when I came back, I acquainted the Senator with that and he laughed. He said, "Well, I never thought that anybody would be killed or almost killed or wanted to be killed because he was going to prepare a presentation on impoundment."

The basis of that was the work we did in that subcommittee. Anyway, he had a tremendous sense of humor.

His biggest job and the biggest accomplishment, as the gentleman has well said, was his exemplifying that basic constitutional thing that I think has become sort of vague and almost indistinguishable, and that is the separation, the coequality and the independence of the three branches of the Government.

It was not easy and it has not been easy, but I think that we who continue to serve have this as a constant challenge, but always will have this magnificent example of a truly great mind.

Senator Ervin was a truly great judicial mind. He was, as the gentleman has said, not really looking upon himself as a politically seeking office holder.

I always respected him and I want to thank the gentleman for taking time and also allowing me to say these few words in his honor.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for those comments.

I am sure wherever he is, Senator Sam is saying, "Thank you," too.

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the State of North Carolina has produced many outstanding citizens both in the economic and political world. But few if any can approach the status of the late Senator Sam Ervin. Not only can North Carolina be justly proud of his record, but for that matter, the entire Nation. Certainly in the realm of political life, he was held in the highest possible regard. In fact, he is one of the few people who truly became a "legend" during his own lifetime. This was due to his total dedication and determination to uphold and protect our constitutional Government.

His leadership to the Nation will be sorely missed and extremely hard to replace. His family can take a great amount of solace and comfort in the image which he created during his lifetime of service in his many offices.

In closing, I doubt if Senator Sam will ever be replaced. In generations yet unborn, through the study of history, they will learn to appreciate his efforts, just as those of us who had the privilege of knowing him.●

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I deeply appreciate this opportunity arranged by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL], to pay my respects to the memory of Sam Ervin. As a judge, as a Member of this House and as a U.S. Senator, Sam Ervin was a highly respected individual.

Mr. Sam delighted in referring to himself as just an ol' country lawyer. That he was, but he was also so much more. He was a distinguished jurist who served on the North Carolina Supreme Court. He served one term in this House and was appointed to the Senate in 1954. There he made a lasting mark on the American scene.

He was perhaps the best constitutional scholar who ever served in the Congress of the United States and his knowledge of the Constitution was respected and his opinions always carried the greatest of weights.

Senator Ervin is, of course, most remembered for his unrelenting search for the truth during the Senate Watergate hearings, but even before he came to national prominence he had built a reputation for honesty and integrity in service to his Nation. As a freshman Senator he had the courage to stand up to Senator Joseph McCarthy and exhort his fellow Senators to stand up to the smear tactics of McCarthyism.

His warm humor will be missed as will his folk wisdom based on the Bible and people he had known in his native North Carolina. Sam Ervin was a giant and a hero to millions of Americans. His like will not be seen again.●

● Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, Sam Ervin was one of those grand old men of the Senate that don't seem to be around as much anymore. By that I mean he was conservative on some issues, liberal on some issues, but Constitutional, with a capital C, always. I guess, of all the things he was proudest of, in the political and legislative domain, was his reputation—earned and deserved—as a scholar and expert on the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, my first term in the House was in the 93d Congress, and that coincided with the last 2 years of Senator Ervin's tenure. I'll never forget one final battle he fought back then, and won for the people of America and for the sanctity of the political process.

Many Members probably have forgotten about it, Mr. Speaker, but when President Nixon resigned, he negotiated a deal with General Services Administrator Arthur Sampson that would have given President Nixon possession and control of the famous tapes that were instrumental in bringing about his resignation. The deal would have allowed President Nixon to destroy the tapes after 5 years, and it also provided that when Nixon died, or after 10 years of possession, all of the tapes would be destroyed.

Senator Ervin didn't like it, and he introduced legislation to give the public possession of the tapes. But a move got underway to block any change in the deal. Senator Ervin wouldn't go along. He said that the tapes ought to be available to the public, because a full study of them would document the crimes committed by high officials and the President himself in the Nixon administration, and the people had a right to know what was in them.

Mr. Speaker, Senator Ervin prevailed, and our country is better for it today, and in the future, no public official in high office should forget the lessons of Watergate, and Senator Ervin has helped ensure that the lessons won't be forgotten.

He earned his place in history in many honorable ways, but to my way of thinking, the lessons in political behavior that he ensured will continue to grow out of Watergate are his hallmark.●

● Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, today we mourn the death of a great North Carolinian and statesman, Senator Sam B. Ervin, Jr.

Sam Ervin was a World War I hero, Harvard Law School graduate, judge, and U.S. Senator. He served the 10th District of North Carolina in the U.S. House of Representatives, 1946–47, before he was appointed to the North Carolina Supreme Court. Yet he chose to refer to himself, Mr. Speaker, as "just a country lawyer from North Carolina." He considered the Constitution a sacred scripture and spent his whole life defending it.

His passion for truth, for civil liberties, the many freedoms that we at times take for granted yet he so dearly believed in, transcended all races, religions, creeds or economic status as he fought for the protection of all human beings under the law.

He was a national symbol of dignity and integrity in politics. He embodied a wisdom and wealth of knowledge, from his down home country stories to his quotations from Shakespeare, that has been unsurpassed in American politics.

He was truly a national hero who bridged both the 19th and 20th centuries as he carried our Nation through the dark hours of the Watergate affair. Through his unyielding search for truth, he helped to diffuse one of the most devasting events in American politics.

As Senator Ervin said at the Watergate hearings some 12 years ago, in words which still bear repeating:

> And I think that those who participated in this effort to nullify the laws of man and the laws of God overlooked one of the laws of God, which is set forth in the 7th verse of the 6th chapter of Galatians:
> "Be not deceived. God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Our Nation has been enriched and made stronger by all that Senator Sam was and believed in. He will be sorely missed.●

● Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, in an age that needs heroes, I am saddened by the death of one of the wisest and most courageous Americans I have ever known, former Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr., of North Carolina, whose death on April 23 marked the end of an era.

I was privileged to know Senator Ervin when I served as administrative assistant to Senator SAM NUNN during the historic days when Senator Ervin chaired the Senate select committee to investigate the Watergate scandal that rocked this Nation to its very foundations.

By any measure, Senator Ervin was a remarkable man possessed with attributes that this Nation shall not soon forget. When he was a young man, he fought as an infantryman in World War I in France. He was twice wounded in battle and twice cited for gallantry while serving as a private in the 1st Division, American Expeditionary Force. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross among other high honors for his service on the field of battle.

When he came home from the war, he went to Harvard and obtained his law degree. Thereafter, he soon established a reputation as an excellent trial lawyer. He entered politics and was elected several times to the North Carolina General Assembly, became a country judge, then a Superior Court judge, and in 1946–47 served in the Congress by appointment to fill the vacancy caused by his brother's death. He did not seek election and resumed the practice of law in his home town of Morganton. Soon, however, he was appointed to serve as justice of his State's supreme court, where he served with great distinction. I am told that when Justice Ervin wrote an opinion it usually became a textbook decision that law professors would cite as the model of judicial wisdom.

Upon the death of U.S. Senator Clyde R. Hoey in May 1954, the Governor appointed Justice Ervin to the Senate where he served until his retirement in 1974.

Although in the 1970's Senator Ervin became a household name due to his Watergate interrogations, his longtime achievements went far beyond his Watergate role. Almost from the day he came to the Senate, he gained respect and distinction as the Senate's "constitutional lawyer." Many of his greatest contributions dealt with laws that he introduced to protect individual rights under the Constitution. He believed deeply that the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were the greatest protections individuals have against governmental tyranny.

All of Senator Ervin's legislative achievements, and they are documented in the Senate records, do not tell us what made this man have such an impact upon our generation. What made Senator Ervin unique and caused even school boys and girls to revere his every word and deed?

I called this week on a friend of mine who served with the Senator as his counsel and legislative assistant for 14 years, John Giles, now Vice President with the Motion Picture Association of America here in Washington.

John answered my question with this opinion:

> Senator Ervin possessed six great qualities in a rare combination: First, absolute integrity, Second, the courage to voice and vote his honest convictions about all matters, Third, a steadfast devotion to his country and to constitutional government, Fourth, an orderly mind and a practical philosophy of government, Fifth, the character to engender trust and confidence in others to follow his leadership to achieve worthwhile goals and purposes; and Sixth, a sense of humor that made even his opponents like him.

It seems to me that the Senator was always destined to render great service to his country. One could already see a pattern in his life when he risked death and suffered severe wounds as an infantryman in France. He had answered his country's call to duty and he exhibited then the courage that we saw in him in his finest hours during the agonizing interrogations of Watergate.

The Senator had rare vote-getting ability. In his final radio broadcast to his constituents in 1974, he told why he thought this was so. He said that it was easy for him to serve the people of North Carolina, because he was born and educated for the most part in North Carolina, and on most issues he thought like most of the people of his State. In that broadcast, he said that he never solicited a single contribution for himself for office, because his friends always looked after his interests and he never had any political organization other than the people themselves. He won large majorities three times for reelection to the Senate in 1956, 1962, and 1968. Because he never had any serious political opposition, he said he could always vote his honest convictions and he was free to work for causes and purposes he felt would strengthen constitutional government and our democratic system.

One of his unfulfilled goals was to achieve a balanced budget. On many occasions, he cosponsored Senate resolutions to require a balanced Federal budget. In 1974, as chairman of the Senate Government Operations Committee he was a coauthor of the Budget Act which he believed would be the mechanism that would lead to a balanced budget. He lamented until the end that this goal had not been realized.

Senator Ervin loved poetry, and on the Senate floor he would often quote Kipling without notes at great length. One of the Senator's favorite poems by Kipling was entitled "If." This excerpt from that poem seems to sum up the Senator's character and his life:

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with Kings—nor lose the common touch . . .
Yours is the Earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a Man, my son!●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sorrow that I join in this special order to pay tribute to the late Senator Sam Ervin.

Sam Ervin was devoted to preserving the integrity of our institutions and defending the Constitution. During our great Constitutional crisis, Sam Ervin gave the American people his wisdom and his leadership, and proved to us his fundamental belief that no man is above the law. As his sense of moral outrage increased during the hearings of the Senate Select Committee to Investigate Campaign Practices—the "Watergate" Committee—the entire Nation watched and found a symbol of the kind of political leader in whom they could rightly put their trust.

Sam Ervin's warm and direct style, combined with his tremendously keen mind and knowledge of the law, earned him the respect of the American people and a rightful place in history.

His passing is a loss to us all, and I offer my deepest sympathies to his wife and children.●

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to add any additional comments on this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

THE JOB CORPS PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities, which I chair, recently held a hearing and received testimony on the Job Corps Program. At a time when youth unemployment is so high in our Nation, and at a time when the administration has called for the abolition of the Job Corps Program, it is a vindication to hear testimony which verifies the value of the Job Corps Program.

It is clear from the testimonies presented by esteemed public officials that Job Corps is indeed viable and cost-effective. Far beyond financial cost-effectiveness, Job Corps offers hope for thousands of individuals born into economic dispair and social stress. Job Corps also provides enrollees with a sense of purpose and an opportunity to be productive citizens.

One of the witnesses who testified before the Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities was the Honorable Terrel H. Bell. As you know, Dr. Bell was appointed Secretary of Education by President Reagan in 1980 and is now a professor at the University of Utah. Dr. Bell is one of America's foremost educators and remains very active in issues of primary importance to our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Terrel Bell's enlightening testimony on the Job Corps be inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD along with the results of a new Job Corps cost-effectiveness study conducted by Dr. Bruce F. Baird, a senior professor of management science at the University of Utah.

Let me again remind my colleagues that Job Corps deserves to be protected from budgetary politics because it is a uniquely cost-beneficial program. Job Corps enrollees do not have the benefit of high-priced Washington lobbyists working to secure votes on their behalf. In the face of adversity, the only hope these youth have is the demonstrated success of their own efforts. The Job Corps offers these youth their only chance to become contributing citizens in our society.

Mr. Speaker, for those who need such evidence, program statistics and cost-effectiveness studies verify the value of the Job Corps Program.

Mr. Speaker, I include the testimony above referred to, as follows:

Hon. MATTHEW MARTINEZ,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities, House of Representatives.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE: I am honored to appear before you to express my views about the proposal to phase out the Job Corps program. At the outset, I should tell you that I am a member of the Board of Directors of the Management and Training Corporation. As you know, MTC is one of several companies that operate Job Corps programs under contract with the U.S. Department of Labor.

The Jobs Corps, the Head Start Program, and the Chapter I program of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act all focus resources on populations that have traditionally had difficulty in the regular school situation. But the Job Corps has the responsibility of meeting the education and training needs of those students in our society that are absolutely the most difficult to educate. No educational endeavor in our society (outside our penal institutions) has a more difficult assignment. Many of the Jobs Corps students have had failure, frustration, abuse, and violence all working over their growing years which comprise most of their lives. To reach out to these students, motivate them, and lead them to experience the joy of success is the noblest educational endeavor.

The Job Corps centers are unique educational institutions. They are residential, high intensity, 24 hours per day schools. Through the years, these centers have learned from experience. They have learned from many trial and error endeavors. The center staffs have learned how to touch the inner souls of troubled youth and lead them into new hope and renewed attitudes.

I have watched Job Corps down through the years. During this time I have learned to respect and admire these remarkable schools. They have reached a point of proficiency that has not been equalled by any other type school. One key is the new environment away from the scenes of frustation and despair. Another is the expertise of staff that learn each year a few more technical details that can only be learned by long months of observation and day to day operation.

I am convinced that the Job Corps program is not fully understood by those who made the decision to stop funding and shut it down. This view was reinforced in my mind when it was indicated by OMB officials that the JTPA program could meet the needs of these youth. This comment is way off the mark as anyone who has even a passing acquaintance with Job Corps would know. The programs are entirely different and one will not substitute for the other.

Dr. Bruce Baird, Professor of Management Science in the College of Business of the University of Utah appraised the financial implications of shutting down the Job Corps. His report of the return to the American taxpayer for fiscal year 1984 tells a remarkable story.

Dr. Baird calculated welfare expenditure savings, tax revenues from data available on those who complete the program, and incarceration savings through applied use of data on this segment of our youth society. He used U.S. Government reports, information from the American Corrections Association, and data from Job Corps documents made available to him.

Financial benefits from Job Corps for 1984, according to the Baird study, total $839,879,543. The Job Corps budget for fiscal year 1984 was $607,300,000. This gives the American taxpayer a return on investment of 138.30 per cent. In short, the Job Corps program, according to Dr. Baird's analysis, yielded $214,539,000 in excess of the taxpayers investment. (Skeptics of the Baird study should be reminded that an earlier analysis by Mathemetica Policy Research reported a return of 145% of program costs.)

I do not have the expertise to interpret all the data used by Dr. Baird, but the Job Corps center operators will be pleased to respond with more detail should this be desired.

The financial return on the investment in Job Corps is solid argument for continuation of this remarkable program. It makes sense from a dispassionate analysis of return for money spent. But the heart warming story is of lives restored with hope, renewed confidence, and productive citizenship. It is hard to measure or assess the non-monetary benefits of Job Corps. Students who learn that they can learn—students who gain new self respect from this program touch the lives of others for the years of their lifetime. By turning from crime, violence, drugs, and welfare dependency these youth no longer drag others down but lift them up by being examples and symbols of hope. This is the real value of Job Corps. It is hard to quantify, but the moral, spiritual, and ethical reasons for Job Corps are all there for those thoughtful enough and compassionate enough to appreciate what it all means.

As I conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to express my concern for the horrendous fiscal problem faced by the Congress. Surely, every dollar in expenditure cuts that can be made is urgently needed. I know that critics of federal financial assistance to education and training programs will perceive my testimony as more special interest lobbying. My reply is that education is not an expenditure but an investment. Ignorance is expensive. Any investment that fights ignorance and develops the prime resource—human intelligence—is money allocated in the proper priority. Learning is critical to our future as a nation. We have recognized this at long last, and we are witnessing a great renaissance of American education that hopefully will endure for a number of years. Learning to our discouraged, tired, and psychologically distressed is particularly critical. Job Corps has been remarkably successful, and it merits the continued support of Congress despite the terrible fiscal pressures we face. It took years to build the knowledge, staff expertise, and practical wisdom now extant in our Job Corps centers. It would only take a couple months to scatter all of this talent and special potential if we shut down, dismiss the staff, and tell these youth to go back to the environment from whence they came.

We cannot do this at this critical time in our history, and I trust you will not let it happen.

Thank you for this opportunity to express my views about Job Corps.

T.H. BELL.

JOB CORPS PROGRAM COSTS

This analyis is an attempt to assess a reasonable but conservative estimate of the return to the American taxpayers for their investment in the Job Corps Program for Fiscal Year 1984. The investment was the Program budget for that year. Returns estimated in this study are comprised of: (1) Welfare Savings During and After the Program, (2) Tax Payments After Completion of the Program, and (3) Incarceration Savings During and After the Program. Other benefits to society are ignored.

The future stream of benefits is discounted at 10%, the approximate cost of money for the U.S. Treasury at this time. This recognizes the fact that the budget dollars are spent in 1984 in order to generate a future stream of returns in years after 1984. The reduction of the future stream by 10% each year thus allows us to compare these returns on an equal time basis with the dollars actually spent in 1984.

Sources of estimates include U.S. Government reports, the American Corrections Association, and in-house Job Corps documents.

I. WELFARE SAVINGS

A. Welfare savings during the time corps members are in the program

98,809 CM's were served during FY 1984.

The average length of stay in JC was 8.2 months.

40% of these were on welfare prior to entering the program.

During their stay in the program they were not on welfare.

The average annual welfare payment in 1984 was $1,286.

The dependents of CM's will still be on welfare during this stay in the program.

Estimated savings equals 98,809 times 8.2 divided by 12 times 0.4 times $1,286 equals $34,732,021.

B. Welfare savings for those who complete the program and find employment

60.6% of these found employment or entered the military.

15.1% entered higher education and thus may still be receiving public assistance.

40% of the CM's were on welfare prior to entering the program.

13% had an average of 1.5 dependents also on welfare.

Assume only 50% of savings are realized during the first year of employment.

Assume welfare payments will increase by an average of 5% per year.

Assume a discount rate 10% per year for savings occurring after Year 1:

CM's (58,834) x 0.606 x 0.4)	14,261
Dependents (14,261 x 0.13 x 1.5)	2,781
Total people involved	17,042

Year	People involved	Welfare payment (times 0.5)	Discount factor	Annual savings
1	17,042	$1,286	1.000	$10,958,006
2	17,042	1,350	.909	20,917,737
3	17,042	1,418	.826	19,960,749
4	17,042	1,489	.751	19,057,029
5	17,042	1,563	.683	18,192,829
6	17,042	1,641	.621	17,366,837
7	17,042	1,723	.564	16,560,938
8	17,042	1,810	.513	15,824,008
9	17,042	1,900	.467	15,121,366
10	17,042	1,995	.424	14,393,809
Total present value of welfare savings for 1st 10 yr				168,353,308

II. TAX PAYMENTS

Assume those employed will pay 20% of income for taxes (Federal, State, Local, FICA, etc.).

Number of people involved equals 58,834 times 0.606 equals 35,653.

Assume average wage in first year equals $4 per hour or $8,320 per year.

Assume only 50% of wages are earned in first year.

Assume wages will increase by 5% each year.

Assume a discount rate of 10% per year for taxes paid after Year 1:

Year	People involved	Annual income (times 0.5)	Tax rate	Discount factor	Tax payments
1	35,653	$8,320	.02	1.000	$29,663,296
2	35,653	8,736	.2	.909	56,624,265
3	35,653	9,173	.2	.826	54,027,828
4	35,653	9,631	.2	.751	51,574,780
5	35,653	10,113	.2	.683	49,252,330
6	35,653	10,619	.2	.621	47,022,021
7	35,653	11,150	.2	.564	44,841,491
8	35,653	11,707	.2	.513	42,824,180
9	35,653	12,293	.2	.467	40,935,569
10	35,653	12,907	.2	.424	39,022,693
Total represent value of taxes paid for 1st yr					455,788,453

III. INCARCERATION SAVINGS

A. Incarceration savings during the time corps members are in the program

5% of those in the program would otherwise be in prison.

The average length of stay is 8.2 months for those who did not drop out.

Number of people in JC program who would be incarcerated equals 98,809 times 0.757 times 0.05 equals 3,740.

Assume average incremental incarceration per person is $14,500 per year.

Estimated Savings equals 3,740 times $14,500 times 8.2 divided by 12 equals $37,057,166.

B. Incarceration savings after successful completion of JC Program

5% of those who successfully complete the program would end up in prison.

75.7% of CM's are employed or in military or in higher education.

58,834 CM's were "Total Terminee's" of the program in FY 1984.

Assume only 50% of savings are realized during the first year.

Assume incarceration costs are $14,500 per year and increase by 5% each year.

Assume a discount rate of 10% per year for savings after Year 1.

Those imprisoned would spend an average of 5 years in incarceration.

Number of people involved equals 58,834 times 0.757 times 0.05 equals 2,227.

Year	People involved (times 0.5)	Annual cost	Discount factor	Annual savings
1	2,227	$14,500	1.000	$16,145,750
2	2,227	15,225	.909	30,820,622
3	2,227	15,986	.826	29,406,278
4	2,227	16,785	.751	28,072,526
5	2,227	17,624	.683	26,806,826
6	2,227	13,506	.621	12,796,593
Total present value of incarceration savings				144,048,595

IV. RETURN ON TAXPAYERS' INVESTMENT IN THE JOB CORPS PROGRAM FOR FY 1984

Benefits

Welfare savings during the time corps members are in the program	$34,732,021
Welfare savings for those who complete the program and find employment	168,353,308
Total present value of taxes paid for 1st 10 yr	455,788,453
Incarceration savings during the time corps members are in program.	37,057,166
Total present value of incarceration savings after successful completion of JC Program	144,048,595
Total present value of benefits	839,979,543

Investment

Job Corps Budget FY 1984, $607,300,000.

Time adjusted return on investment equals $839,979,543 divided by $607,300,000 times 100 equals 138.3%.

SUMMARY

The direct financial benefits of the Job Corps Program exceed its cost even if very conservative estimates are utilized. The assumptions of this study are conservative because verifiable JC completion and placement numbers are used, a low incarceration cost is employed, very low wages and wage increases are assumed, the benefits of those in higher education are not included, benefits are terminated after 10 years, etc. Other benefits to society involving family planning, drug abuse, losses of victims of crime, medical care costs, etc., are not included. These would increase the return on investment. Furthermore, the benefits are reduced by discounting at 10% per year.

Thus, the computed return of 138% should be viewed as reasonable and conservative. It is also a verification of earlier study by Mathematica Policy Research which yielded an estimated 45% more than program costs.

A DISAPPOINTING ECONOMIC SUMMIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to state my deep disappointment with the conclusion of the recent economic summit that occurred in Europe. It has indeed been a failure when judged on the basis of the product or, more accurately, the lack of product.

Mr. Speaker, I share the frustration and the concern, obviously, for the visit to the Bitburg Cemetery and the entire sorry affair with respect to that episode in the President's itinerary; but beyond that, the basic reason for the economic summit is our concern with trade and with the economic vitality of the Western World. Really these concerns were not addressed. It is indeed inexcusable that this major forum, the economic summit, was so poorly utilized, considering the serious trade and economic problems we face.

Frankly, those issues with respect to trade which acutely affect the U.S. economy today were not addressed. If it is said that the U.S. economy is the strong locomotive that is pulling the engine of progress in the Western World and the total economies of the Western World, then, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that that engine is running on explosive fuel and is likely going to pull this entire train and that of our entire Western economy off that track.

Certainly the consumer led economic recovery that we have been experiencing in recent years is on a bad stretch of track. We hope that it inevitably will not be pulled off that track, but the actions that occurred this past week do not give much encouragement.

The most important problem, the overvalued dollar, was only given cosmetic lipservice rather than a real substantive push toward a gradual realignment of dollars valued more in balance with our trading partners.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the formal basis on which we must solve many of the trade imbalances and barriers that exist, was left in disarray. Not even a date or timeframe was set for the resumption of the GATT meetings. With all the important disparities that exist between the United States and our trading partners, the resolution of existing trade issues is not even set for a definite timetable. Thus the American people cannot even look forward to some forum for solving our serious trade problems.

This really leaves Congress and our national trade policy in an economic quagmire without direction and purpose. It means that we are going to have a piecemeal, patchwork type of effort and a drifting to higher and higher balance of trade deficits. Inevitably, this lack of direction will result in increased protectionism initiatives and many cumbersome polices which will attempt to force the administration to do a job which it is apparently reluctant or unwilling to do. The U.S. economy cannot continue with the $124 billion, 1984 balance-of-trade deficit. Yet in 1985 this deficit only grows at a faster pace.

Ultimately, as moves the U.S. trade imbalances, as go the U.S. dollar balances, and other sectors of our economy, so moves the world economy. We are becoming a Nation with fewer and fewer industries, fewer and fewer manufacturing concerns, and yet these issues are not receiving the priority they deserve on the agenda of the economic summit. This was a golden opportunity wasted by the Reagan administration and our trading partners.

So I must rise today to voice deep concern with the continued deindustrialization of our Nation. Our Nation must address these problems. Obviously, they were not addressed in the past week. It looks to this Member as though Congress will be forced to act on a piecemeal basis to forge a policy and in an awkward manner try to deal with these very serious trade and economic problems that our Nation and our allies must face.

MY ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, once again I rise in the vein that I have at least on six different occasions thus far this session to address what I call a petition or "my advice to the privileged orders," mostly the privileged orders in our own country, which as I have said on prior occasions include my colleagues in this body and across the rotunda over in the Senate, because indeed as Members of the Congress we are privileged in more than one way.

Even though the center of gravity and power and the real decisionmaking levels and exercise of that power are not any longer inside the dome of this great Capitol, but rather in those great plush corporate offices of banks and other magnets and panjandrums and barons of wealth, the money barons, if not robber barons, who have flagelated this country through their control, now almost obliterative, like never in the history of our country.

The fears of all of the great national leaders beginning with Thomas Jefferson in the initial stages of our nationalism in which the issue is clearly drawn then, as incidentally it has been in all countries, in all climes and times and periods; and that is where the power to determine the fiscal, the monetary, the economic level of the great mass of the people in those societies is going to be made. Where will this decision be made? Will it be in the hands of those oligarchical few all through history, the bankers, the great magnates of power, the panjandrums, as I call them?

Franklin Roosevelt called them the great malefactors of wealth, and I call them that today, too, for America has literally been sold down the river. And the Congresses, several of them now reaching over at least two and a half decades, if not three, have very blithly sauntered along and abdicated the great trust and responsibility that the Constitution has placed all along in this great body.

So often it is forgotten today. I get letters, messages, personal oral statements from colleagues, from citizens, from throughout not only my constituency but various States that clearly reveal to me that the concept of the three coequal and independent and separate branches of Government is really not one that entertains their minds. The Presidency has reached such an exalted position that there are very few Americans that do not believe that the President is omnicient, all powerful, and so we revert back to the old days in which salvation was sought and salvation was attempted to be obtained from some great leader.

In our country all of this was foreseen during the course of the debates during the Constitutional convention that finally led to the adoption of the Constitution. And the people then, at least the literate element, as the delegates emerged from the Convention Hall in Philadelphia it is reported that one shouted to Benjamin Franklin, "Ben, what do we have? Do we have a monarchy or do we have a republic?" And Ben Franklin is reported to have said, "A republic, if we can keep it."

So that is still the question: if we can keep it. With the events tumbling one over the other in quick successive fashion, it is no wonder that today in the people's minds, as well as in my colleagues' minds what happened just barely 6 months ago, 1 year ago, is ancient history. And we tend to forget the implications of these successive events.

Also, coincidental with this phenomena is the fact that there is no way that either the Members or the people in general, after all, if we are not informed, we who purport to be the Representatives of the people, how else then can the people be informed, and if they are not informed, then, as James Madison aptly said, "An uniformed people cannot be acceptable in a democracy."

In a system of government in which the basic faith is that the people in the long run are the best judges as to what is best for them, and that the people do have the wisdom, the prudence, and the self-discipline to know how to govern themselves. That we do not need.

As John Adams accused in referring to George Washington, we tend to forget because of our superficial reading of history that these were real blood and bone periods of time. There were men struggling. We had Benedict Arnolds. We had those loyal to the Crown, to old King George III. And at one point those outnumbered the Revolutionary Americans.

And as old John Adams referred to George Washington, there was great rivalry, there were epithets and remarks made by each other that I think the average American reading them today would not believe that they were true. And the big question was with that tremendous popularity and the fact that George Washington could have asked and grasped for power, he could have been elected and reelected not two times, three, four and five, he was the one that established the unwritten custom to go not beyond two. And he did have great self-discipline because he understood what the fight was all about.

But the big question, as John Adams said, was well, there is George Washington, he thinks he is selected like the ancient Hebrews used to select their kings, that is the tallest one among them. And he thinks he comes heaven-send, booted, spurred, and ready to ride on the hapless backs of mankind.

Well, this is exactly the way so many human beings, including Americans, believe to this day and have believed all through written human history. Ours is the first real experiement because, given the nature of the world today, in which it is hostile to democracy, and in which in our country we are challenged now to reaffirm our basic belief in these essential pedestals and bases of liberty, this President, Ronald Reagan, has gone a long way, a long way, and continues to do so, in challenging those basic liberties. They are not perceptible, not like in the case, say, of Richard Nixon, because President Ronald Reagan again, who believes like those who surround him, that today America can and must be ruled by image, image, not substance, not reality. But we forget, like ancient Rome, that we may think the world spins around our axis, and that we are the center of the world, and we are self contained, and we are not informed. Therefore, with a shocking reality, a dash of cold, cold water, we are going to find that the world is not revolving to our tune, much less dancing to it, that while we may here be brainwashed in this country and we may successfully consider a political group, or king, or oligarchy successful in that it can hold and retain through the images of democratic power, power that nevertheless is the essence of that participatory democracy, are lacking.

So what happens? Exactly what is happening today. The United States perceives outside of our self-perception is cast in a role that has clearly been held in violation of all of the basic precepts of international law. The fact that President Ronald Reagan and his administration refuse to accept the sovereignty or jurisdiction of the World Court, and walked out because Nicaragua filed a grievance alleging that we were violating some solemn international law, all of the basic international law that until the taking of the hostages by Iran had been almost sacrosanct. We ourselves are participating in an equal type of violation, and so Nicaragua, certainly we cannot say that Nicaragua is of comparable size to the United States where we could consider it anything but a developing country.

And the little country goes to the World Court and says, "The United States has plotted and attempted to assassinate our leaders. It has mined and bombed our harbors. It has cause to sink our shipping. We are grieved. We appeal to law to determine the fact that this is an egregious violation of international law."

So we did not like that, so we walked out of the Court, because the Court intimated, of course, that there could be no other decision but that the United States is in gross violation of law.

But all during the time, the President maintains a U.S. ambassador who is accepted by the Nicaraguan Government in Managua as a duly elected envoy to a recognized government. We in turn accept their ambassador who is here in Washington.

To the world we proclaim that we recognize that Nicaraguan regime. But also, the President has not hesitated even as late as 1 month ago to say, despite the fact that the Congress has prohibited any direct use of funds for involvement to try to destroy the Nicaraguan Government, "I will even appeal to private groups, I will appeal to private paramilitary groups to raise funds and raise mercenaries and enlist mercenaries and go see what you can do to knock over the Nicaraguan Government."

Not once has he said, "We think this is an illegitimate government, therefore we are recalling our ambassador and we are sending their ambassador home." Not once.

Now that is reality. What is the image? The image is that the President first said that the Nicaraguan, at that time Sandinista group, this was a coterie, or a handful, a junta, they call themselves south of the border, including three Catholic priests, one of them a great scholar, a great scholar, internationally established as a great scholastic mind. A couple of them so-called Marxist-Leninists. They have preached what they call their jargon of Marxism-Leninism all along. But they were not in control and are not now in control and have not been in control even though now it is 6 years that that type of regime in actual control, physical, political, social, economic, to the extent it can, because unlike Cuba, Nicaragua still has a mixed economy. It has not, as some would say, and as the President has stated, quite mistakenly, that it is just like Cuba. It is very different at this point. But I predict that we will compel another aggrandizement of Fidel Castro, another aggrandizement of the Communists by giving them credit that they themselves are so overwhelmed for being given credit for something they know they never had the influence or the power until we gave it to them, forced them into it, that it is almost laughable, except so tragic, because the President is pursuing inexorably and with his "Custer" mentality; George Armstrong Custer. "A Custer decision shall never be impeached." So we had 241 marines murdered because of Ronald Reagan's "Custer" decision mind, in spite of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Who are they? Why they are elite, they are selected, professional military leaders. Every one of them unanimously, for 14 months were saying, "Mr. President, now it is Comander in Chief because you have ordered the Marines into Beirut in double strength after the first venture. Mr. President, we think that is a mistake. Militarily you forget these men are warriors, they are not diplomats, they are not politicians. You are saying they are peacekeepers, but you are involving them in trying to shore up one faction of four in Lebanon. How can that make them peacekeepers? They could hardly be called neutral. But militarily they are indefensible."

So some of us took this same tribunal here, this same forum, and for 12 of those 14 months pled with the President, asked the President from here, of course there was no chance that we would hope individually that our voice would be listened to any more than it is now, but there was some glimmer of hope that we could talk to some—and we did—of the Members. My colleagues, distinguished members, of the Committee on Armed Services and others, who in turn did have communication with the Secretary of Defense. Why did I keep speaking out after 1 year? Because invariably, everyone would say, "Henry, you are right; the Secretary of Defense says you are right but they can't do anything." Why? Because of Gen. George Armstrong Custer's mind that Ronald Reagan obviously thinks he is playing the role of. Sometimes I don't know if the President figures he is going to play the role of John Wayne, that great John Wayne or whether it is George Armstrong Custer. He acts more like Custer. And you know what happened to him.

I say that with this the same thing is happening after this sojourn to Europe.

From this podium this voice has been the only one in this entire Congress, not now, not last year; for 15 years it has been mentioning the fact that the world has changed, that the real world had changed, that the United States was headed for some hard-nosed economic, international financial decisions; that I saw no evidence anybody was even dimly aware of in the Oval Office. And I am talking now about six different Presidents because I have been privileged to serve in this body for 24 years. So that I felt that the only thing I could do would be to speak out and on the record, not in private, not where I could come later on and say, "Well, no, I didn't say that, I said this." Even today I do not revise what I say here. It goes as the great reporters of debate put it down and it goes in that way and it stays that way, because I feel that is the way it was meant to be from the beginning; and that this forum here is the great, great privilege as I have said, ad nauseam. The only thing a Member of the House has is a voice and a vote. I consider it so important that it is, in my opinion, the prime constitutional duty of a duly elected and sworn Member of the House, faithfully perform his duties or oath faithfully and well, to faithfully and well perform our duties.

So that in 24 years, the record will show I have been present 99.9 percent of the time. That one-tenth of 1 percent was when my mother was dying, and was in a coma, and there was no power on Earth was going to keep me from being at her side, and that was the only time I missed; but God be thanked, I have been able to say that I have been here when it counted and registered my vote and spoke out.

I have not hesitated to speak out, even if it offends some, but never because of fear or favor. Not only because—not that I am good-goody, but because the people have given me independence. I have not been elected because of any special particular individual or collection of individuals, or a particular sector of the electorate; I am proud of what the people in Bexar County, because for the first 8 years, the district, the 20th District of Texas consisted of the entire county; and the 5 years I was honored to serve in the Texas State Senate, the greatest body I could ever hope to belong to and reluctantly left—for 5 years that senatorial district consisted of the entire county.

Before that, on the city council, the local legislative body, for 3 years, in which I got involved in what were considered kamikaze, political suicide.

I was just like old Judge Sam Ervin a while ago, when my colleague was eulogizing him. He said he never intended to really get into politics; and I did not either. Unlike the overwhelming majority, that was the last thing I thought I would be in as I was growing up.

What I am saying is that in this day and time, we are being tested as to whether or not we really mean it when we say we are a democratic nation. When we say that we stand for democratic participatory government, and that this is what we want other countries to have.

When we say that we are not like other nations that wish to impose their way, because the truth is not the myth, not the self-perception, but the truth is that at this point in time we are the Nazis of the Caribbean. We are the terrorists.

When we have fragments of explosive bits attempted to be used to kill off some of the Nicaraguan leaders, and fragments are stamped "For U.S. Army Use Only."

When I raised my voice and said this 2 years ago, I was criticized, ridiculed; but then last September the 18th, lo and behold, the Defense Department publicly states that yes, indeed, it transferred an unnumbered, or unnamed number of war planes and war material to the CIA.

Now I ask every one of my colleagues if he or she can tell me exactly how much money you have voted for the CIA. Up to now, nobody has been able to tell me.

How does the CIA account for it? And to whom? There have been experiences in the past where CIA or minions thereof, or perhaps rogue elephant members of the CIA certainly have acted without Presidential direction.

So with this kind of lack of accountability and with the history of the use of what they call executive action, for the elimination of certain national leaders, whether it was Diem in October of 1963 in Vietnam, or Lumumba in Africa, or the expulsion of Arbenz in Guatemala in 1954, which tragically the CIA still thinks it can use those tactics in which the United Fruit Co. of that day—now called Standard Brands—did not have to obligate the CIA to go and get them from the Defense Department, and at that time they would not have done it, because you had administrations that knew the law and obeyed it and respected it.

They got United Fruit to pay the American mercenary pilots and obtain them and pay for the planes, and they strafed the Guatemala City Capitol one time and old Colonel Arbenz quit and left, tucktailed.

We accused him of being a Communist. Now the truth of the matter is that at this point, if we think we have problems in Nicaragua and El Salvador, how many of you, my colleagues, see headlines with respect to El Salvador right now? They are in the making.

We have spent over $2 billion in the smallest country in Central America, the smallest, tiniest country, where over 55,000 have died, most of them assassinated by murder squads that a American interests have helped finance, and that the CIA has worked cheek by jowl with.

In the assassinaton of the Archbishop Romero in El Salvador, one reason they are not going to get to the bottom of it is because if we ever get to that point, the sorry truth is going to come out that the assassins were cheek by jowl with our CIA agents.

Now I know this horrifies some Americans, but that is the truth. That is the sordid truth. The reason I rise to speak is because if we think that is a present problem, wait until the real shooting starts. Wait until Guatemala really blows up. It is beginning to. It is headed that way, irreversibly.

For we have failed to recognize the reality of the real world to the south of us. Do we think that we, single-handedly, must be right; and every other nation in the Western World—Canada and every nation south of us is wrong? Not a one of them share our politics.

We are acting—this President has evoked the old gun boat diplomacy that could succeed in 1929 only because the world had not shrunk at that time.

This is another world. Even in Vietnam, people like to say that we are going like Vietnam. Yes we are, only because we have learned nothing, and because we have failed to distinguish between the reality of civil war, of a native, indigenous civil war. Not one either initiated or conducted solely through the help of external forces.

I had occasion to speak to one young, very cultured—had several degrees—and he was a revolutionary in El Salvador; very young, less than 30 years of age. His family was split up because it is a civil war there.

The thing he could not understand, when he spoke with me was, "Why do you Americans think that only the Cubans know how to conduct a revolution, or that we have to go to Cuba to get any kind of inspiration? We know what a revolution is about, and we are going to fight and die to a man, because we no longer are going to tolerate what has been tolerated."

Now anybody that will just bother to read a little bit of history, which obviously our leaders do not reflect, whether it is Secretary Shultz—and much less, President Ronald Reagan.

When he went down to South America—it will be 3 years next October—he was in one country and said he was in another.

When he got back to California, the first words he uttered were, "Gee, I didn't know they were that different."

Now, you know, we could have afforded in 1929 that kind of crass ignorance. Not in 1985. Not any longer. The President is obviously of a Custer decision mind. He is not going to change. So what he is doing is involving our country in an inexorable, irreversible, unilateral military venture. But unlike Granada, and even unlike South Vietnam, where I think our colleagues should reflect we never were challenged in the air, we always had complete domination of the air and we did not win, I say to you it will be different in Central America. And that will be the next headline. I can just see everyone jumping over themselves to vote virtually to declare war, if not so to do, because we are headed that way. How long do we expect and why should we be surprised if we are attempting to assassinate the leaders of a movement, if we are conducting war, as President Ronald Reagan has now for 2 years, the greatest military, massive buildup in that part of the world in history, we now continue to have at least 30,000 of our military in the air, on the land and on the sea surrounding Nicaragua alone. And that has been true for 2 years. How long as we continue to kill men women and children, grandfathers trying to harvest a coffee crop, through the direct aid of what the President calls, ironically and shamefully, through a perversion of words, freedom fighters. Freedom fighters? Assassins of women and children, peasants, along that frontier there?

Now, it has not always been that way. And I think that should have set an example. In 1957, President Eisenhower did not think it was below the dignity of the United States to accept and enjoin and then lead the equivalent of the so-called Contadora group of nations today. In what? In the disputation of many years between Nicaragua and Honduras.

What we have followed as a matter of diplomatic basic procedure has been to try to divide and conquer. In fact, I might point out that 4 years ago General Haig seized upon that in order to borrow some Argentinean soldiers to come to Honduras. The reason we have to use our own now is that we lost all of those mercenaries we were able to get. For instance, Haig persuaded the Argentinean generals of that day to lend them some soldiers, because that was going to be what would be used to help destabilize—that was the word they used—the Nicaraguans.

At that time it was a Sandinista group. Today, after the elections last year in November, it is the Nicaraguan Government. And let me point out that in that election, which was open, there are some Nicaraguans here now saying they were not allowed to participate. The truth is that when they attempted, if it had not been for the Nicaraguan soldiers, they would have been mobbed by the people, but they never were taken off the ballot.

Now, you had the Marxist-Leninists or the Communist Party on the ballot, then you had the various other designations, Christian Democrats, Social Democrats, and all that kind of stuff. The party that got the least votes, not even 6 percent, was the Marxist-Leninists or the Communists. This was also true in one of the elections they held in El Salvador. In El Salvador, unlike Nicaragua, the revolutionary movement consists of five different, separate groups who have coalesced in a common rebellion against the government, but actually the weakest at this point and for years the smallest has been the so-called Marxist-Leninist or Communist contingent. They are the smallest and the least effectual. However, we have introduced a Huey attack helicopter, and we have now begun to go down and gun peasant women, children, old men, old mothers indistinguishably there. They are not in the headline right now because Napoleon Duarte is playing a little cat and mouse game with the Rio forces still in El Salvador, D'Aubuisson and the 12 families that are hiding out in Miami, some of them, but they are sending the money and the mercenaries, and they hope to come back and retrieve power, like some of the ex-Somocistas in Nicaragua, like thousands of Cubans who have come seeking a haven. In fact, a little known thing, I think my colleagues would throw me out of the place if I were to advocate spending $1.2 billion to help some of the illegal aliens from Mexico. Yet this is what was done for the Cubans in Miami and in Florida. And who has ever breathed a word? The reason is that these were upper-class Republican, once they got here they turned Republican, and so everybody fell heads over heels to help them, and they were saying the right thing, they were against communism, they were against Castro and that sounded good, but nobody has ever stopped to figure out why they did not stay in Cuba and fight to death communism. No. They will let every single one of our marines die if necessary, if that is what it takes to restore them to power. I am going to ask my collleagues here and now, will you allow your sons to get eventually drafted to go die in the jungles of Nicaragua and in Central America for good old Chiquita Banana, United Fruit, Standard Brands, and the like, they are the ones that determine the so-called Latin American tactics, because I would not deem it worthy of the name policy of this administration of Ronald Reagan. The J. Peter Graces, the billionaires several times over, who now, through their conglomerates, own United Fruit, which in turn owns and runs, and has for years, Honduras. We are occupying Honduras. And even there we are beginning to have trouble, very much like we used to read about South Vietnam. I remember hundreds of my colleagues putting on khaki and going to see Vietnam. I see now weekly entourages of touring Congressmen going to El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua and, depending on who sees what or what they say or are told for 2 or 3 days that they are there, they come back.

I say that it would more profit us if we were to stay right here in the District of Columbia and demand of our President to obey the law that we have passed, to remind him that the Constitution says that only the Congress can declare war and that he ought to stop making war until the Congress sees fit to declare it, if it ever does.

And all of the harum-scarum about how the next stop will be Laredo, TX, well, let me tell my colleagues I cannot see those folks being that dumb. If they ever got that far, they would come through Matamoros, not Laredo. But that is ridiculous. Certainly Mexico is not shaking in its boots. In fact, in Mexico the biggest fear is the CIA, where it has been busily trying to "destabilize" the present Mexican President's regime, because he, like the other so-called Latin American leaders, does not goose-step to our policies. Why should they? We have violated every one of the three solemn agreements we entered into, some of them on which we took the leadership, the Rio Pact, the Punta del Este Understanding, the OAS Treaty, every one of them this President has thumbed his nose, as he has the War Powers Limitation Act of this Congress.

But it is my advice to the privileged orders that we must not only look to but we ought to welcome and we ought to join some of the revolutionary changes south of us, because we are either going to be on the side of the people, those huddling millions of masses that for the last 15 years for the first time have more than 65 million more than we have, we are either going to be for them or we are going to be for the tyrants and the oppressors and the exploiters that for 300 years have done that and in the last century we ourselves have imposed them, like Somoza and his malodorous, tyrannical, abominable group that finally was so corrupt it collapsed out of its own rottenness, even though we did everything we could to still keep it bolstered up.

We installed them in with the Marines' help and their position the last time of 9 years of the country, and even then because there is an inevitability to history. This is what I address to the privileged orders that we, inured to privilege, must recall that outside of the shores of this great and glorious Republic, and those areas governed by our laws and institutions, we are a single beacon light. More than anything else, where it is the south of us or north or east or west, the world would seek American moral leadership.

They do not want star wars; in fact, we have been completely derogatory. South of us, under the leadership of Mexico, a solemn treaty was entered into to forever ban nuclear weapons in that area. We have not respected that; we have invaded their waters with nuclear devices on our ships. We have not paid any mind to our respect, much less to the sovereignty and the independence of these countries if the government is not the kind that we think ought to be there, or that our special interests, who as I say and repeat, rule the roost in this administration think they are a threat to their vested interests.

I say that it is time that the Congress reassert its proper role and remind the President that he has grievously violated the law.

Let me go back to what I started out with on the trip to Europe. This voice has been the only one for 15 years almost, and especially since 1979, to mention the ECU or the European Currency Unit, and the EMS, the European Monetary System. Now, this was the real issue this last week, but you do not see it reported anywhere here. Was there any American paper that reported that the Finance Ministers, who were the ones there in the background to all these leaders standing there in front, looking as if they had just cracked a joke, I do not know at whose expense, but it looked as if that is what they were doing, but nobody saw those figures behind that really were flexing out what it was they were telling the United States.

Now, nowhere did the American press report that on April the 13th and 14th, last month, the Finance Ministers of these six basic nations, or West European nations, as they call them, met in Palermo, Italy, in order to flex out the European Currency Unit as a substitute or competitor to the dollars as the exchange, as the medium, world recognized.

Why? Because as I have been saying since 1976, when the administration then of President Nixon and then Gerald Ford, with the same Secretary of the Treasury, Bill Simon, there blithefully talked about private ownership of gold. I was trying to stem the tide and say, "All right, if you want to do that, you still have got to build some protective clauses in this repealer to protect America from the same thing that happened after World War I."

Nope; I was brushed aside by the then chairman of the Banking Committee, who certainly was not Republican, and above all, by the then Secretary of the Treasury.

Since then I have been speaking out, but it was not until later that that reality became a reality, and that is that those countries, particularly West Germany, now have more gold reserve than the United States. They have more gold.

Bill Simon thought it was great to even sell it in January and February and March 1976. That is fine. If the world had been as he thought or had been told it was. The real world, yesterday's headline was a little bit more realistic. Now, oh, the trip to the cemetery, and the fact that the President realized he was again on thin ice, therefore, he had to announce the embargo.

The same headline was overshadowed by another in one paper's front page story in which it said: "The United States and the Soviets were once again meeting to try to see if they could resume international air flights."

Everybody has forgotten that the President declared sort of an embargo after the deal there in Poland with the Solidarity cause in which he suspended air flights to Soviet Russia. My colleagues, if you want to know the disaster of the so-called K 007, there is where it started, because since then, with that suspension, all of these delicate air routes have become raw nerves. If we think that has been a source of trouble, and I hope and pray that our leaders will be wise enough to say, well, let us have an understanding so that we can soften some of this tension which was created when the President unilaterally stopped air flights to Russia and the reciprocal flights to the United States from Russia, of commercial airliners.

Let me tell you where we are every day on a razor-thin edge, and that is over the Berlin corridor. There again, through lack of understanding and because of our confrontational attitude, this President has cultivated a war psychosis toward Russia and it is dangerous. The shooting of a soldier in East Germany is one more symptom. But we have got to look at it from the standpoint of the awesomeness of our actions outside of our boundaries, looked at from that perspective, not ours.

Just like south of the border there is no way I can tell you, my colleagues, what an awesome power America symbolizes. There is no way I can convey to you; I cannot convey to you. When these corporate interests become indistinguishable with America, I just cannot convey to you what is means, and the fact that there has been so much forbearance on that side.

The corridors into Berlin are so narrow that it should not be difficult for anybody to realize that a catastrophe is in the making. Ten miles. In the air, that is not much, given the right combination of events. I say that the tension is further incremented when there is disarray in what we call our allies, brought about by the very policies that have brought about the tension to begin with, vis-a-vis Russia.

I do not know why in the world we think that we can isolate ourselves from public opinion in the world. We cannot; we have got to realize that whether it is to our liking or not. When I used to say this in the 60's, I was almost looked upon as a traitor, except for the fact that I was not going around shouting: "Hey, hey, LJB, how many babies have you killed today?" The President was a friend and a neighbor, but still I was looked upon with suspicion for two or three reasons: One, I was the author of what I call the "Ernest Gruening Resolution" in the House. We got 72 cosponsors that said, like I am saying now: "Mr. President, pull out the troops south of the border, and let us go through the OAS or some other group that the United States can take the leadership of." We still have a little residual leverage, but not if we continue the way we are in which we say to the Devil with that; we do not even try it.

I did in the sixties; not in 1967 or 1968, but in 1965, in the beginning of 1965. I said, "Mr. President, pull the troops out of Southeast Asia, and let us go through the U.N. like we did in Korea at least.

I was looked upon almost like, "Hey, who are you for, Ho Chi Minh?" Just like today, "Who are you for; you want these Communists' next stop to be Laredo, TX?"

That, I say to you, my colleagues, is sheer insanity. It is the custom mentality, and you know what happened there. I say that I want my brothers who served and have served, and I, I want my children and grandchildren who will inexorably, and some of them are relatives that are serving presently, if they are going to be in a fight to win it, because of its righteousness, because of its leaders knowing full well that they could elicit freely and voluntarily the will to support, the will to fight from the people without divisiveness and with a clearly stated purpose, as I have said.

If the trumpet sounds uncertain, who then shall hear the call to the struggle? It must be clear. It must be coherent, and I say to you it is not. Just look at the successive actions you have participated in in less than 1 year's time. A year ago you were about to begin a so-called discussion on the War Powers Act which never became that. It turned out to be a question of whether you were loyal to the President or not. That is ridiculous. That is not worthy of the first branch of Government, co-equal, independent, and separate, and it is not now.

I heard some comments last week when the Nicaraguan president or leader or whatever he is went to Central Europe; he went to Romania, and he went to Bulgaria and he went to the Communist side, and he went to Russia, and cheek by jowl, just like Nixon did, just like this President will, just like the other American Presidents did. In fact, President Nixon not only toasted and drank vodka cheek by jowl, but he also gave the leader Brezhnev a big Cadillac, bulletproof and all, and I never saw any congressional authority for that, but the President did. If any normal American had done that, he would have been brought up by the FBI and the CIA and everybody else.

This is how crazy the whole thing has been. This is what makes it unclear, incoherent, and I say, my colleagues, that in that case the Congress cannot escape its responsibility any more than it did in the 1960's. I am pleading that in that case, maybe the European case, it is too late because after the meeting of the finance officers the decision was made, Delors, the French leader of the European Community, clearly stated a month ago that now they were going to flesh out, they were going to put some muscle and bone and sinew in the economic or European currency unit. This they would place in what they call a basket, technically the international people call it as the basis of the European Community's accounting unit. The currencies will be placed in a reserve currency in what they call a European Community financial or international currency basket, a common unit. For what purpose? To replace the dollar.

In both cases, I am reminded of Barbara Tuchman's recently published book, "The March of Folly." She undertook to answer the question why, since the war in Troy in ancient Greek times to Vietnam, has it been the case, and she went through all the series of national leaders, in full knowledge of the facts and in total disregard went in what she called a phenomenon noticeable throughout history, regardless of place or period, is the pursuit by government of policies contrary to their own interests.

"Mankind, it seems, makes a poor performance of government than of almost any other human activity." Could a Commander in Chief, headstrong, willful, ignore his own Joint Chiefs of Staff, solidly united, not one deviating voice among them for 14 months, leading to the tragedy of 241 great Marine fighters dying, murdered in their sleep? How can that be condoned and forgotten? But it was, because in less than 36 hours the President ordered the invasion of Grenada. That took the attention away, just like last week the trip to the cemetery in Germany. It was beginning to reach that hot point in which, "Oh, look, Mr. President, change your mind." And he said, "I will not be made to appear to be caving in."

I remember Lyndon Johnson, "I will not tuck tail and run away." Well, I used to say it is fine if that was their tail, but it happened to be the lives, as it ended up 50,000 Americans, and a great drainage of the Treasury. When I would say, you know, I think we will end up in doing more good if we get those $35 billion, get them in $1 or $5 bills, load up our transports, from the C-130's to the C5A's, and just bomb Vietnam, pull out all our troops and bomb them with dollar bills. We will be far better off in the long run than what is going on. But you could not, any more than you can today, bring about reality, just a little dose, a modicum of reality of what that real world was. You could not tell anybody in or out of this Chamber, in or out of the Oval Office, that that was not a solid Communist monolith.

I think if our leaders and all of the coterie of advisers, the best and the brightest, as somebody said, and the youngest, had had a real perception of the real world that we would have lost 50,000 American lives, young, the flower of our youth. Who gave a hoot when I brought out in August 1965 that at that point the men that were likely to be seeing action and dying or being maimed or wounded, over 45 percent, about 47 percent, were draftees and about 80 percent or so of those were the poorest of the poor, white, brown, black, blue.

Why? I pointed out on this floor in 1967, I said, "My colleagues, never in history, even the Roman Legions would never impress a slave into their army. Why do you think the French fighting in what they called Indochina never could use a conscript or a draftee? The British at the height of their empire never sent a little Englishman and impressed him to go serve in India.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 2068

By Mr. VENTO:

—Strike Section 126 and insert the following:

SEC. 126. ESTABLISHMENT OF A TRAVEL ADVISORY ON GUADALAJARA, MEXICO

(a) VIOLENCE AGAINST AMERICANS.—The Congress—

(1) deplores the brutal murder of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar, and the abduction and disappearance of numerous other Americans, including John Clay Walker, Alberto Radelat, Dennis Carlson, Rose Carlson, Benjamin Mascrenas, and Patricia Mascrenas; and

(2) finds that the violence perpetrated by drug traffickers in Mexico constitute a danger to the safety of United States citizens living and traveling in the vicinity of Guadalajara, Mexico.

(b) TRAVEL ADVISORY.—The Congress, therefore, directs the Secretary of State to issue a travel advisory warning United States citizens of the current dangers of traveling in the vicinity of Guadalajara, Mexico. Such travel advisory shall remain in effect until the commencement of a criminal prosecution for the abduction or murder of any of the aforementioned United States citizens.

SENATE—Monday, May 6, 1985

(Legislative day of Monday, April 15, 1985)

The Senate met at 12 noon, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

*Praise the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely * * *. He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds * * . Great is our Lord, and of great power: His understanding is infinite.—Psalm 147:1,3,5.

Loving Father, on this beautiful day we thank You for the profusion of green, the fresh warm air, the songs of the birds, and the privilege of being alive. Help us never to take for granted these common benefits. We thank You for the respite of the weekend and the opportunity for serving You and the people this week. As we struggle with the budget deficit may our struggle be for justice rather than power, for Nation rather than party, for the needy rather than the privileged, for Your will rather than our agendas. In the name of Him whose love is unconditional and just. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order the leaders each have 10 minutes, followed by a special order in favor of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], and then routine morning business not to extend beyond 1 o'clock, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Following morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the budget resolution. There will be no rollcall votes on any matter of substance prior to 4 p.m. There could be some procedural or attendence rollcalls. It is the intention of the majority leader to try to sequence any votes prior to 4 p.m. to commence at 4 p.m., if in fact we have reached that stage, and I hope we will conduct business until 8 or 9 o'clock this evening.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry at this time: How much time remains on the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader has 8 hours; the minority leader has 12 hours.

Mr. DOLE. Twenty hours is a great deal of time on the resolution. It occurs to me that there are many Members on each side who really do not want to come forth with their amendments; they do not think the timing is right or whatever. I do not know the plans of the distinguished minority leader, but we have had a vote on a Republican plan. We would like to vote on a Democratic plan. I know there are a number that are being worked on, the Hollings plan, the Chiles plan, and maybe the minority leader himself will have a plan, so there are a number of amendments, a number of plans but there does not seem to be anyone rushing to the floor to offer any of those major plans or major amendments. So it is my hope that we could find some amendments today, spend some time on them and eat away at the time on the resolution. I do think there will be some rollcall votes today, so I alert Members to that possibility.

On Tuesday, we would hope to convene and start on the budget resolution fairly early because we have caucuses tomorrow and we do not expect to be in late. It is my hope that sometime after 4 o'clock, we could work out a time agreement.

As I understand, there is a matter of some emergency dealing with saccharin which needs to be dealt with, and there is an agreeement in process between the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], and the chairman of the committee, Senator HATCH. Maybe we could dispose of that. We will check on it later.

Wednesday, we again hope to convene early, and I understand Wednesday will not be a late evening. On Tuesday we have a problem on this side, on Wednesday there is a problem on the Democratic side so we want to accommodate both sides.

We hope Thursday could be "D Day," decision day, on the budget. There has been some indication that perhaps it may be better to wait for the President to return on Friday before we complete action on the budget resolution. There has been no judgment made on that. That might affect whether or not we were in session on Friday. But we certainly can use all the time by Thursday. If we get 5 or 6 hours today, 4 or 5 tomorrow, and 4 or 5 the next day, we are down to 4 hours on Thursday. So hopefully we can chop away at the time until Senators feel they should offer their amendments.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD). Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized, the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

THE BUDGET RESOLUTION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the outlining of the program by the distinguished majority leader. It seems to me we ought to be able to wrap up action on this resolution by no later than Thursday. I share with him the feeling that we should make every effort to do that. It would seem to me, with 20 hours remaining, that could be done without too much difficulty, although time does not count against rollcalls and quorums placed immediately before votes. But certainly on this side there will be no effort to delay and I will be talking with the majority leader from time to time.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, may I yield briefly to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader and I thank the Chair.

SENATOR SAM J. ERVIN, JR.—A GIANT HAS FALLEN

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, though almost 2 weeks have passed since the first report came that Sam Ervin had passed away, I yet find myself unable to accept it. "Senator Sam," as he was so affectionately and respectfully known by millions, was remarkable in every way. It is impossible to imagine that he is really gone.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

There was never anything pompous about Senator Sam. I knew him long before Gov. William B. Umstead appointed him to the Senate in 1954 to succeed the distinguished and colorful Senator Clyde R. Hoey. It was a case of a giant succeeding a giant, and I suppose I assumed that Senator Ervin would always be around to counsel and advise me, to help me sort out the significant constitutional issues that arise from time to time.

But on April 23, the sad news came: Sam Ervin had died. I came immediately to this Senate floor to announce the sad news to my colleagues. The media reported that my voice was "occasionally quavering" as I observed that this remarkable American had died, and that a courageous giant had fallen. The truth is, Mr. President, nothing I have ever said on this floor was more difficult for me.

On Friday, April 26, I was in the throng attending the funeral services at Senator Ervin's beloved church in his beloved hometown. The First Presbyterian Church in Morganton, NC, overflowed with mourners. Billy Graham was there. I sat between Howard Baker and STROM THURMOND. Senator HOLLINGS was there. North Carolina's Gov. Jim Martin and his wife, Dottie, were there. Countless hundreds of others came silently and sorrowfully.

Mr. President, there was no partisanship that afternoon. People of all political and philosophical persuasions were there. The physical departure of Senator Sam had created a unity not merely of grief but of love and respect and admiration for a remarkable patriot.

For my part, memories of a hundred different episodes raced through my mind as the services proceeded, as the hymns were sung, as the Scripture was read, and as we prayed together. I could see Senator Sam in my imagination—not in that casket, but as a Senator and as a member of the North Carolina Supreme Court. And as a friend. I replayed in my mind the countless telephone conversations since he went home to Morganton in 1974. He was always patient, always interested, always helpful, always cheerful.

Mr. President, I can hear his chuckle now.

There is so much more that I could say, but I have the feeling that Senator Sam is sitting up there, saying: "Now, Jesse, don't go on too long." So I will not. But, Mr. President, I am sure that everyone in this Senate joins in sending our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Ervin, whom we know as "Miss Margaret," and to his three children and his grandchildren.

Mr. President, I believe it appropriate to place in the RECORD a sampling of the news stories and editorials appearing at the time of Senator Ervin's death. What I will offer will be only samples of the thousands of articles, editorials and broadcast commentaries.

I shall begin with a tribute written by the distinguished Albert Coates of Chapel Hill, who was among Senator Ervin's closest friends. Dr. Coates founded the North Carolina Institute of Government.

Dr. Coates' tribute was published in the Dunn, NC, Daily Record and a number of other newspapers. I ask unanimous consent that this tribute be printed in the RECORD, followed by other editorials and articles which I now submit.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Dunn [N.C.] Daily Record, Apr. 26, 1985]

SENATOR SAM ERVIN: A TRIBUTE

Sam Ervin was in the class of 1917 of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and I was in the class of 1918, in a student body of 800 that grew to 1,000, where everybody knew everybody else.

Under Sam Ervin's picture in the UNC Yackety-Yack his senior year, the editors wrote this description of him as he appeared to his fellow students: "Everything he meets responds, and at once a sympathetic friendship ensues. Like Midas, he has that magic touch which makes everyone he meets his friend; and consequently he is liked by all." This judgment, passed on him by his fellow students in 1917, was approved by his fellow citizens in steadily widening areas in later years, by calling him time after time away from his private practice of the law to represent them in public positions of trust and confidence: as member of the General Assembly of North Carolina from his county, as judge of his county recorder's court, as judge of the superior court of his judicial district, as Congressman in 1946, as justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and as United States Senator.

If I had to pick what, to my way of thinking, is the finest hour of his life, I would pick the hour on the 18th day of July in 1917 in the battle of Soissons in World War I when the 28th Infantry was halted by machine gun fire from an emplacement one hundred yards ahead. Most of the officers of the company had been killed. At this point twenty-two-year-old Sam Ervin called for volunteers to charge the blazing machine gun. Four men responded. Here is an affidavit of one of those men: "One man was mortally wounded. Another was killed. Ervin was knocked down by a shell fragment in front of the gun. The two remaining reached the machine gun, killed its crew, seized the gun . . . . We went back to Ervin and bandaged his wounds to stop the flow of blood and wanted to carry him back to safety, but he refused to be assisted and told us to go back and join the other soldiers . . . . Though wounded so severely he was unable to walk, he refused to go to the rear, but crawled back and organized an advance automatic rifle post where he remained on duty until all danger of a hostile counter attack was over." This performance won the Distinguished Service Cross for "extraordinary heroism in action" and for "exceptional initiative, courage, and leadership which were an inspiration to his comrades."

If I had to pick out what, to my way of thinking, is the finest pattern of activities in his life it would be in standing up to be counted for the way of life outlined in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

He stood up to be counted on the floor of the North Carolina General Assembly in protest against a bill to curb freedom to teach the theory of evolution in the public schools, saying that the only thing good to be said about it was that it went as far as a legislature could go to absolve the monkey from responsibility for the action for the human race.

He stood up to be counted on the floor of the United States Senate in support of a Senate resolution to censure Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin for hiding behind a senator's immunity from prosecution while he smeared the reputations and characters of American citizens with unsubstantiated charges and intimidating tactics—a history-making speech which was the beginning of the end of "the McCarthy era" in American life.

He stood up to be counted on the floor of the United States Senate for twenty years thereafter in protest against such measures as:

A bill permitting police to break into a person's house by day or night "without knocking."

A bill denying the right to bail to persons whom the policy "suspected" would commit crimes while out on bail.

Post office regulations permitting the opening of sealed letters "suspected" of containing narcotics, lottery tickets, or pornographic pictures.

Bureaucratic regulations permitting sophisticated surveillance techniques and the use of the computer and data banks in ways violating a person's right to privacy.

Government employment agency regulations permitting probing questions about religion, family, and sexual matters, or calling for the disclosure of personal finances and creditors of employees and their relatives, and other matters having nothing to do with their jobs.

Activities of military agencies in "collecting files on private citizens" and spying on American citizens in public and private assemblies.

If I had to pick out what, to my way of thinking, is the finest accolade of a lifetime it would be the tribute of the Majority Leader of the United States Senate on the 8th day of February 1973 in picking him to head the most important Senate committee of this generation—the Senate Select Committee on the Watergate Affair—giving as his reason: "We are looking for a good, fair, impartial investigation, and Sam Ervin is the only man we could have picked on either side of the aisle who would have the respect of the Senate as a whole."

The statement was rooted in a twenty-year record of day-to-day work by Sam Ervin with his fellow senators who knew him well in committee and on the floor. They had found that he knew his business, loved it, and tended to it. That he moved in his own orbit—full of common sense and mother wit. That he was all of a piece—not a lot of planks nailed together, but a growing tree with the sap rising through it. That he would vote and act from forces welling up in the man himself and not from any outside influence or external pressure. In short, the United States Senate was recognizing the career of a man who was "born of the sun," has kept on walking toward the sun, and at every step along the way has "left the vivid air signed with his honor."

If I had to pick out one sentence from all his sayings characteristic of Sam Ervin throughout the comings and goings of his life, it would be a sentence which he didn't have to think up—it came to him from the certitude of his own being while he was talking to his homefolks in Morganton on returning from World War I. He had been reported as "missing in action" on the western front, and his neighbors were telling him they were so glad he had been found. "I was never lost," he told them. "I knew where I was all the time." And so it has been from that day to this.

Now that I have called your attention to the underpinning of Sam Ervin's career, let me call your attention to the underpinning of Sam Ervin. This underpinning appeared on his horizon in the person of Margaret Bell in the summer of 1916, and shortly thereafter Sam began going crazy. Margaret started going crazy too—crazy enough to wait for him while he was fighting World War I and while he was going through law school, and keep on waiting until he was making a living for two. She married him on the 18th day of June, 1924, and moved off the horizon and into the heart and center of his life—where she has stayed for 56 years and two days, yesterday and today.

You may recall the mythical story of Ariadne who fell in love with Theseus as he was starting into the labyrinth of the Minotaur and gave him a ball of thread to fasten to the inside of the door to the Minotaur's Cave and unwind as he walked into the twisting paths of the mysterious labyrinth. Margaret Bell gave Ariadne's thread to Sam Ervin when they met and fell in love. It has been unwinding ever since as he has found his way through the ins and outs, and ups and downs, and run-arounds of daily living, but it still remains unbroken and has strengthened through the years. That is why Sam Ervin can say at the celebration of his 56th wedding anniversary: "I was never lost. I knew where I was all the time."

Those of you who know of his devotion to the Bill of Rights "don't know nothing" until you know of his devotion to "Miss Margaret." If she should ever come into conflict with the Bill of Rights in Sam Ervin's mind, God help the Bill of Rights!

HELMS CALLS ERVIN COURAGEOUS GIANT

Sam Ervin was a "giant" whose humor and country charm will be missed, friends and colleagues said after learning of the former U.S. senator's death Tuesday.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., interrupted Senate debate on aid to Nicaragua on Tuesday to announce Ervin's death.

In a voice occasionally quavering, Helms praised Ervin as "a remarkable American . . . a courageous giant."

"I've never known a more remarkable American than Sam Ervin," Helms said. "The two years that I was privileged to serve in the Senate as his junior colleague will always rank as a major blessing of my life. . . . A courageous giant has fallen, but America is far better because of his life, his dedication and his unfailing fidelity to principles that deserve to survive."

Helms said later in the Senate recorders' office, where he went to check the transcript of his remarks, that he had been "kind of choked up" on the floor.

Other reactions:

Former Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and cochairman with Ervin of the Watergate Committee: "Sen. Sam Ervin was a unique and special member of the Senate of the United States and his service to his country was unique and special as well. I had a great respect for Sam Ervin and a special understanding of his abiding respect for the U.S. Constitution. . . . His stewardship of the Senate Watergate Committee had established his place in history."

U.S. District Judge John Sirica, who presided over trials involving the Watergate cover-up: "I was very fond of him and admired his patriotism, his dedication to his work and above all, his courage. He was a great American who made a tremendous contribution to all of us. He will be sorely missed."

Gov. Jim Martin: "We must . . . remember the great contribution this man made. . . . He was . . . a protector of citizens' rights and an outstanding native son of North Carolina."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan: "Sen. Sam Ervin cared about North Carolina and its people. . . . As a country lawyer, a trial judge, a N.C. Supreme Court justice and United States senator, he grew to become a giant among those in public service. No one cared more about our constitutional rights than Sam Ervin. He made all of us proud with his perceptive questioning and his strong leadership during the Watergate hearings."

George Autry, chief counsel to Ervin's Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights from 1961-67: "I think he was truly the last of the founding fathers in a sense, our best and constant reminder of America's theoretical underpinning.

Rufus Edmisten, former N.C. attorney general and deputy chief counsel of Ervin's Watergate committee: "In Watergate, what he did . . . was bring it close to the average American. He made the Constitution understandable and he brought to the American public that no person is above the law, even the president. . . . The man should be compared to the Washingtons and Jeffersons because his time in the U.S. Senate was one where he stood up for personal freedoms just like they did."

EX-SENATOR SAM ERVIN DIES AT 88

(By Ken Eudy)

Former U.S. Sen. Sam Ervin Jr., whose devotion to the Constitution helped drive an American president from office, died Tuesday of respiratory failure at Bowman Gray Medical Center in Winston-Salem.

Ervin, who was 88, sprang to the American consciousness in 1973 when he was appointed chairman of the Senate Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, known as the Watergate Committee.

During committee hearings televised live nationwide, Ervin became known as "Senator Sam." Eyebrows aflutter, Jowls quivering and tongue stammering in a syrupy Southern drawl, Ervin liked to call himself "just a good ol' country lawyer." But Ervin was a North Carolina-borne, Harvard-educated lawyer who quoted Shakespeare, the Bible and the Constitution with ease. He was recognized as the Senate's greatest constitutional authority of his generation.

The same understanding of the Constitution that led Democrat Ervin to oppose Republican President Richard Nixon during Watergate compelled him to oppose civil rights legislation, the Equal Rights Amendment and school busing to achieve integration.

Ervin's Watergate hearings set the stage for Nixon's resignation in August 1974, four months before Ervin ended a 20-year Senate career and retired to his home in Morganton.

Ervin died about 4:15 p.m., said Roger Rollman, a hospital spokesman. "The cause of death was attributed by his doctors to respiratory failure which developed during the day," Rollman said. "The kidney failure for which Mr. Ervin was admitted to the center was a significant contributing factor in the death."

Ervin was moved to Bowman Gray on Monday after suffering acute renal failure and doctors determined he needed more specialized treatment than was available at Grace Hospital in Morganton, said Mary McBryde, his secretary.

Ervin had been a patient at Grace Hospital for more than three weeks prior to his move to Winston-Salem. He suffered from a variety of aliments during that time, and at one point was plagued by a high fever.

Evrin's fame came late in his political career. Most of his Senate tenure was spent in the shadow of other Southern Democrats such as Richard Russell of Georgia, Harry Bryd Sr. of Virginia and John Stennis of Mississippi. Later, other younger southern senators such as Russell Long of Louisiana and Herman Talmadge of Georgia eclipsed Ervin in senatorial influence.

In fact, Ervin never chaired a major committee until 1972, when he was named chairman of the Select Governmental Operations Committee.

Little major legislation bears his name. And one year, Ervin was on the losing side of Senate votes more often than any other Democratic senator.

Like other Southern senators, Ervin opposed almost every civil rights bill. Civil rights legislation, Ervin wrote in his 1984 autobiography, "is in essence thought-control legislation."

"I opposed civil rights bills presented to the Senate during my service because I entertained the abiding convictions that some of them were unnecessary, some of them tyrannical and some of them were unconstitutional," he wrote.

When the Senate passed the Equal Rights Amendment in 1972, Ervin told his colleagues on the Senate floor, "It is almost impossible to conceive the state of legal chaos which will ensue if this amendment is ratified by the states. It will invalidate thousands of laws which make legal distinctions between men and women, many of which are based upon . . . a recognition of the fact that God did create two sexes."

Ervin's primary national identify—as a obstructionist of civil rights legislation—changed in early 1973, when he was appointed chairman of the committee to investigate the Watergate break-in.

Ervin's respect for the Constitution, which led to his Watergate assignment, came from his lawyer father, Sam Ervin, Sr., and his mother, Laura Theresa Powe.

His parents, said Ervin, imbued him with what he once called a "Scotch-Irish Presbyterian conscience."

"A Scotch-Irish Presbyterian conscience will not keep one from sinning, but it will keep him from enjoying his sin. Moreover, it commands him to do what it tells him is right, and smites him unmercifully if he does not obey.

"Consequently, the victim of a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian conscience has the trait that his supporters praise as firmness and his adversaries condemn as obstinacy."

One of 10 brothers and sisters, Ervin graduated in 1917 from UNC, where he was senior class president.

After graduation, Ervin enlisted in the Army and was twice wounded in World War I. Ervin won the Silver Star and the Distinguished Service Cross, and twice was commended for bravery.

When he returned to North Carolina in 1919, he passed the state bar examination before enrolling in Harvard Law School.

A year after graduating from Harvard, Ervin was elected to the first of three terms in the N.C. House.

While in the House, that Scotch-Irish Presbyterian conscience led Ervin to fight the anti-Darwinism that was sweeping the South in 1925.

The N.C. House was debating a bill that would forbid the teaching of evolution in public schools. Ervin, ia 29-year-old House member, argued against the bill, saying, "I don't see but one good feature in this thing, and that is that it will gratify the monkeys to know they are absolved from all responsibility for the conduct of the human race."

The N.C. House killed the anti-Darwinism bill.

From 1935 until 1937, Ervin served as a Burke County criminal court judge, and from 1937 until 1943, Ervin was a superior court judge.

Ervin served one year in the U.S. House in 1946 upon the suicide of his younger brother, Joe Ervin, who suffered from a bone disease.

In 1948, Ervin was appointed an associate justice of the N.C. Supreme Court. He might have ended his public career as its chief justice but for the 1954 death of U.S. Sen. Clyde Hoey.

Gov. William Umstead, a college friend of Ervin, appointed him to fill the seat, and Ervin was sworn in by then-Vice President Richard Nixon. He was elected on his own later that year, and often was returned to the Senate without opposition.

Early in Ervin's Senate career, he again opposed a popular political cause: McCarthyism.

Vice President Nixon appointed Ervin in 1954 to a committee to determine whether Sen. Joe McCarthy had engaged in conduct unbecoming a senator in his attempt to uncover communists in the federal government.

During the hearings, McCarthy attacked Ervin and two other committee Democrats as "unwitting handmaidens" of the communists.

Ervin took to the Senate floor to respond. "The issue before the American people is simply this: Does the Senate of the United States have enough manhood to stand up to Sen. McCarthy? . . . The honor of the Senate is in our keeping. I pray that senators will not soil it by permitting Sen. McCarthy to go unwhipped of senatorial justice."

Two weeks later, the Senate censured McCarthy.

In the intervening years, Ervin became known as the Senate's expert on the Constitution, but he rarely made the national spotlight.

That changed in 1973, when Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., picked Ervin to head a committee to investigate the Watergate break-in because, as a former judge, Ervin had more judicial experience than any senator. Also, Mansfield said, Ervin was the least partisan Senate Democrat and at 76 harbored no presidential ambitions.

"Sen. Ervin was the only man we could have picked on either side of the aisle who'd have had the respect of the Senate as a whole," Mansfield said then.

During those hearings, which opened May 17, 1973, former White House counsel John Dean revealed that Nixon had been told of the Watergate burglary days after it occurred and that Nixon had participated in the cover-up. White House aide Alexander Butterfield disclosed the existence of a White House taping system with which Nixon taped private conversations.

The Watergate Committee heard a parade of witnesses describe what came to be known as "dirty tricks"—tactics designed to help Nixon win reelection in 1972 and punish his political enemies.

While Ervin's committee hearings didn't establish that Nixon had prior knowledge of the Watergate break-in, the daily televised hearings focused public attention on alleged misdeeds of the Nixon administration. Eventually the Supreme Court ordered Nixon to surrender tapes that implicated him in the Watergate cover-up.

Ervin defended the committee from charges by Republicans that he had created the constitutional crisis forcing Nixon from office. "As a general rule, people are the authors of their own misfortunes. And President Nixon is the sole author of his own misfortune in this case," Ervin said. "He had too much thirst for political power and not enough scruples about how political power's obtained."

Ervin chose to retire in 1974 rather than seek reelection. He had been active in the years since his retirement, however, practicing law in Morganton and writing three books: "The Whole Truth: The Watergate Conspiracy," "Humor of a Country Lawyer" and "Preserving the Constitution: The Autobiography of Senator Sam Ervin."

Ervin had become such a national celebrity," American Express used him in a television commerical promoting its credit card.

Ervin is survived by wife, Margaret; a son, U.S. Appeal Court Judge Sam Ervin III of Morganton; and two daughters, Margaret Hansler of Pennington, N.J., and Laura Smith of Morganton.

SENATOR SAM SAYS . . .

Sam Ervin was blunt, opinionated and often witty. A sample of his observations:

On women's rights: Oh, how these militants who advocate equal rights for women must hate sex, to judge from their efforts in seeking to abolish it.

On opposing the ERA: I'm trying to save women from their fool friends and from themselves.

On the Nixon administration: An organization which wants a place in history has no need of a shredder.

On Watergate: I think that the Watergate tragedy is the greatest tragedy this country has ever suffered. I used to think that the Civil War was our country's greatest tragedy, but I do remember that there were some redeeming features in the Civil War in that there was some spirit of sacrifice and heroism displayed on both sides. I see no redeeming features in Watergate.

On his conscience: I am possessor of a great affliction, a Scotch-Irish conscience, which will not permit me to follow after a great multitude to do what I conceive to be evil.

On Nixon's memoirs: I'd have to say that insofar as the president discusses the things I know the best that he certainly did obey Mark Twain's injunction, "The truth is very precious, use it sparingly."

On the Constitution: The Constitution is the wisest instrument of government the Earth has ever known.

On aging, at age 79: I think this effort which society has made in the last generation to wrap those people like myself that they consider to be aged in cellophane and put them into useless things is rather disastrous.

On retirement: I never really planned retirement. I figured I'd rust out before I wore out.

On his favorite TV shows: I like 'Gunsmoke' because the good guys always win. They don't always win in the Senate.

On his appearance in an American Express commercial: You know, the government takes 53½ percent of every dollar I make. I knew the government needed the money. So I figured I'd make some more from the commercial so I could pay my income tax.

In 1954, after a Supreme Court struck down segregation: It is a tragedy that the highest court of the land should be composed of men apparently desirous of recreating our system of government in their own image.

MEMORIAL TO A COURTLY TRIBUNE

(By Keith C. Burris)

I did not know him, either personally or as a fellow North Carolinian. I met him in the way that several million other Americans did, through the strange and often false medium of television. There was little false about him, and he was an unlikely figure for the tube. Watergate, the national drama of more than a decade ago, was his moment. I was a college freshman in Ohio. Sam Ervin was the voice of the democratic emotion; of decency, of wit, of liberty and law, in the summer of our disillusion.

Cynicism was not only "in" then, but also real to America's young. Nothing worked; it was all a charade. Didn't Chicago prove that? Hadn't Nixon as much as said it? Vietnam. Kent State. And now a bunch of campaign junkies and thugs were going to trash the Constitution. Out of that muck came a virtuous man—not a presidential candidate, a "great" man, a man on a white horse or even a populistic poser out to flatter us about our innate goodness. Out of this came a man who would speak plain truth and uphold the law. It made a difference.

I watched a couple of Ervin's ex-colleagues meeting the press at the church the day they buried him. Howard Baker and Ernest Hollings, two men I admire—and the more for their being there—were asked about Sen. Ervin's memorable and special qualities. "Was there any one trait or instance", ran the camera question, "that you would like to share with us?" "No," said Baker looking perplexed and sad, "No one thing. I thought about it . . . He was just a man of complete inegrity and great kindness." "Nothing like that." said Hollings, ducking into his car. "He was the Constitution's best friend, and we shall miss him."

Where did he come from? we all asked in 1973. How come we never saw him on "Meet the Press," or "Face the Nation"? He'd been quietly doing his job as he saw it for 20 years. Watergate and time transformed him from Senator Claghorn to beloved statesman. The thing about a statesman isn't that he makes no mistakes. This sort of man is usually wrong, as dramatically as he is right. Churchill for example. The thing about a statesman is that he is his own man; he's not indebted, or packaged. This is one of the ways in which Ervin was the last of the American fathers.

The other is that Ervin kept the American faith. Defending the integrity of the Senate against Joseph R. McCarthy, standing when liberals would not against invasions of privacy like the "No Knock," and violations of due process like preventive detention. He was a devout student of the St. James, scolding the president for trying to violate the separation doctrine of church and state, the hawk, who stood up to the Army when he found it was spying on private citizens. Ervin would not sacrifice the holy writ of liberty for any other real or imaginary good. He wrote that if a man lacks the freedom to act foolishly he has no real freedom at all. How many contemporary conservatives, I wonder, would defend a bootlegger?

Ervin was a conservative. Which egomaniacal figure who today graces the public stage would entitle his autobiography "Preserving the Constitution"? And though Sam Ervin's career can be seen as a measure of the changing style of politics (a man who drives around the countryside in an old car stopping to swap stories, quote the Bible and Shakespeare, and lecture a bit on the Founders, would not generally be said to be headed for the Senate today; a man with PACs and television crews in tow would), that career can also be seen as a mark of the changing nature of American conservatism.

Consider the old and true preserving conservative, as against the new reactionary ones. The old defended liberty under law; the new, hard-heartedness. The old defended the individual against intrusions by the state; the new says the individual must go it alone. The old said, "Get government off the backs of the citizens." The new asks for greater power for the FBI and IRS. The old affirmed "forbear and persevere," the new, "condemn and charge ahead."

I went to Morganton from Winston-Salem to pay respects and follow the story to its end. Morganton is a lovely town, and that day the streets were lined with American flags and many of the shops were closed. The sidewalks were full of local people walking up the hill to the First Presbyterian Church, and there must have been 2,000 cars parked around the place, many of which were large Buicks and Lincolns with official state tags. Interstate 40 had been wide open and it was a beautiful day, but the politicans were traveling in packs at speeds of 80 miles per hour or more. The windows were up; the cold air blasting.

There was an atmosphere of Watergate and that old extravagant unreality, for the TV cameras were running into one another and we who were overflow worshippers participated in a church hall via three TV monitors. The service was a good and pure one. No political speeches or eulogies, just the Creed, the Biblical readings and the hymns: "A Might Fortress," "Now Thank We All Our God," "O God Our Help In Ages Past," "For All The Saints."

After the service, I became aware that many people were lingering on the front lawn in hopes of spying a celebrity or two. And maybe some of the celebrities were waiting to be recognized. It didn't seem irreverent, just political. A lady next to me said, "Gawd that fella looks like Billy Graham." And Billy walked by us looking tall, and righteous and exceedingly well tanned. Later on in Morganton, I toured a Biblical book store in which Graham's most, recent book was on sale, marked down from $11.95 to $5.50.

Mary McCarthy, in her book about Watergate, "The Mask Of State," tells of a conversation with Ervin early on in the hearings. What if you get to the truth, she wanted to know, and nothing happens? Suppose the Constitution can be subverted; what if the system doesn't work? "I refuse to entertain the notion," was Ervin's response. McCarthy said that, to Sam Ervin, America was an old house that, with paint, soap, water and elbow grease, could be put back into shape. The foundations were still good; she just hadn't had the care she should've.

When they say that a man was the "conscience of the Senate," or his party, they usually mean "We didn't listen to him, because we couldn't live up to his standards." But as I read the books by and about him and listen to the encomiums by those who knew him, I am convinced that Sam Ervin really was different, less a politician than a tribune, which my dictionary defines as a "protector or champion of the people."

To which we can only add the words of W.H. Auden:

"For every day they die
Among us, those who were doing us some good
And knew it was never enough but Hoped to improve a little by living."

ERVIN'S HOMESPUN WIT, BUSHY EYEBROWS CAPTIVATED AMERICA DURING WATERGATE

(By Michael Putzel)

WASHINGTON.—He liked to refer to himself as a simple "old country lawyer," but that was just his cover. Sam J. Ervin Jr. was a devout student of the Constitution and a wily politician who rose to meet the extraordinary pressures of an extraordinary moment in American history.

By avoiding partisan squabbles and fighting his battles in private, Ervin managed to steer his benignly named Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities—better known, of course, as the Watergate Committee—to the heart of the cover-up conspiracy that cost Richard M. Nixon his presidency.

Ervin's seniority, scholarship and his background as a homespun Southern politican captivated a national television audience for months and gave him a stature the Nixon White House could not tear down.

Under the heat of the klieg lights in the packed Senate Caucus Room during the long summer of 1973, Ervin snared his witnesses and charmed his audiences with his dancing, bushy eyebrows and ready wit. He could scold like a judge, which he once had been, and disarm his adversaries by quoting from the Bible or Shakespeare for from his beloved Constitution.

When the president's men tried to pretend they had been preoccupied with other, presumably more important matters of state during the Watergate cover-up, or when the lower-level participants sought to portray themselves only as loyal soliders, Ervin's simple observations cut through the smoke.

Early on, when a scheduler at the Committee to Re-elect the President testified he had covered up his role as a messenger who passed on $60,000 in tainted campaign funds, Ervin explained why the witness should have been loyal to the truth instead of his superiors.

"You give the appearance of a man who was brought up in a good home," the chairman said.

"Thank you, sir," the witness replied.

"And you were undoubtedly taught that it is an obligation of a citizen to testify truthfully when he is called on to testify under oath before a grand jury or a petit jury," the former judge led him on.

As the witness sat helpless before him, the old country lawyer finished him off.

"It was a wise man named William Shakespeare who wrote a play called Henry IV," Ervin recalled. "And in that he has one of his characters, Cardinal Woolsey, say—after Cardinal Woolsey instead of serving his church had served his king and was cast out in his old age by the king—and he said, 'Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not in mine age left me naked to mine enemies.'"

But mindful that his stature depended at least in part on his self-effacing image, Ervin never took a bow.

"Please cut the applause," he told his audience when it appreciated him too much or too long.

What the public didn't see—ever—was Ervin's handling of his own fractious, sometimes frightened committee, which at his insistence and in the tradition of the old Senate held all its procedural meetings in closed-door executive session.

The Republicans, including the ambitious Tennessean, Howard H. Baker Jr., were torn between their loyalty to the party's president and their public roles as inquisitors. Ervin heard them fight for Nixon in private, but with a Democratic majority and the allegiance of the junior GOP member, renegade Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., the chairman controlled the public fight to bring witnesses before the committee and break Nixon's claim that the White House was beyond the Senate's reach.

For Ervin, whose chairmanship of a Judiciary subcommittee on the separation of powers made him an expert, it was not just a power struggle between two branches of government. Nor was it simply a criminal case in which one political band had burglarized another.

As he opened the hearings, Ervin explained why they were so important to him and to the nation.

"If the many allegations made to this date are true, then the burglars who broke into the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee at the Watergate were in effect breaking into the home of every citizen of the United States," the chairman said.

"And if these allegations prove to be true, what they were seeking to steal was not the jewels, money or other precious property of American citizens, but something much more valuable—their most precious heritage: the right to vote in a free election."

In the rough-and-tumble months that followed, Ervin never let the nation forget those stakes. In the end, he lost his fight for the critical Watergate tapes whose existence his committee uncovered. And Nixon fell not to Ervin's committee but in the face of impeachment after an investigation by the House Judiciary Committee and the Watergate special prosecutor.

But it was Ervin's committee that exposed the depth of the scandal that finally brought down the president and sent so many of his men to prison.

U.S. SENATOR SAM ERVIN—VIRTUE, BRILLIANCE MADE HIM A POLITICAL GIANT

Tar Heels will remember former U.S. Sen. Sam Ervin, who died Tuesday at age 88, as more than a folk hero. He was real—a political giant who kept his seat in the Senate with sheer honesty, a brilliant mind, a fine wit, common sense and unflaggling commitment to the Constitution.

He may have been North Carolina's last senator to spurn the madness of a television campaign. His style was to spend little money, to ignore the opponent, to hammer away at attacks on principle and to curry no favors among the power-brokers.

He was a public servant who set high standards for himself and for others in government. He believed all were cut from the same cloth—including the president—and that the law and the Constitution stood in judgment of man's political avarice.

His career was highlighted by Watergate but not bounded by it. The Sam Ervin who presided over the Senate committee that forced President Nixon's resignation was not a creature of his times. Rather, it was a time for a Sen. Sam to raise his brows in furor at arrogance in government, to defend majestically the Constitution, to reassert the principles that had been so crassly abused.

He caused the liberals to convolute. Was this, they asked the same Sam Ervin who had opposed school busing and the Voting Rights Act? Was this they asked, the same Sam Ervin who spoke so obstinately for individual rights with an indisputably Southern political accent? Yet they would forgive his past to honor his role in resurrecting from the trash heap the constitutional dream that had faded in the memory of Americans and had been trampled in the practices of the Nixon administration.

Likewise, his own kin, the people of North Carolina, could cherish their Sen. Sam even when they disagreed with him. They knew him to be deeply religious, committed to the tenets of his Presbyterian tradition, yet he could stand so firmly—and argue so persuasively—against the practice of prayer in school. Sen. Sam proved one didn't have to be a heathen to tolerate the religion or nonreligion of others.

Sen. Sam was persuasive to the voters and to the nation because he was sure in his logic, true to his and this nation's history, coherent in his arguments and full of love for his state, his family, his Burke County roots, this nation, his church and his duty.

He retired in 1974, an undefeated champion of good government through his service in the Legislature, as a Superior Court judge, as a N.C. Supreme Court justice and as a U.S. senator for 20 years.

When Sen. Sam retired, columnist George Will said, "So now, as he takes leave of us, let us praise this rare man whose fame, though great, does not match his great virtues, a man every bit as fine as his nation affectionately thinks he is."

Those words are even truer today.

SAM J. ERVIN, JR.

"A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is absolutely necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty."

The foundation for the public service of Sam J. Ervin Jr. is summed up in that phrase from the North Carolina Constitution. He based his career, as lawyer, judge and legislator, on the conviction that citizens must know, and jealously guard, political rights asserted by the nation's Founding Fathers. His own devotion to, and defense of, those rights helped save the nation.

From the Burke County courthouse to the halls of Congress, Ervin in his lifetime spoke clearly and firmly for individual liberty and the rule of law. Death at 88 stills his voice, but leaves undimmed the bright legacy of his words to inspire and challenge coming generations.

The hallmarks of Ervin's half century as an elected official were unshakable integrity, undaunted courage, and unfailing good humor. He never feared a fight, or showed rancor in victory or defeat. Homespun plain, hickory tough, he reflected the Scotch-Irish heritage his ancestors brought to North Carolina.

To those qualities was added an absolute commitment to, and unmatched knowledge of, the U.S. Constitution and the values embedded in it. He held it in equal esteem as a political document with the King James Bible in the religious realm and Shakespeare in literature. He could quote as readily, and with relish, from all three sources.

It was as though history prepared him for the nation's need. The dark time of Watergate, with its abuse of presidential power and flouting of individual rights, proved his finest hour. Ervin was well into his 70s, a veteran of 20 years in the Senate, when the scandal broke. Up to that point, while a figure of state and regional leadership. Ervin was little known nationally. That soon changed.

Televised hearings of the committee chaired by Ervin made him a celebrity. Viewers were fascinated by his acrobatic eyebrows shooting up in righteous indignation, down in relentless interrogation, and by his engaging mix of country wit and constitutional wisdom. If Ervin seemed to enjoy media stardom, it at no time distracted him from the serious business at hand. His firm hand and cool temper guided the committee through the investigation to the inevitable conclusion of President Nixon's resignation. It is perhaps no exaggeration to say that Ervin, as much as any one individual, steered the nation safely through the crisis.

Watergate was by no means the only instance of Ervin's defense of constitutional guarantees. As a young state legislator, he argued successfully against restraints on teaching evolution in the public schools. He stood up to Sen. Joseph McCarthy in the witch-hunt days of the early 1950s. In many other ways, he sought to protect individual rights against encroaching government power.

Many who lauded him for those efforts decried his adamant oppostion to civil rights legislation and the Equal Rights Amendment. He saw nothing reprehensible about it. The Constitution, he reminded, gives equal rights to all and special rights to none.

It is not necessary, of course, to praise all phases of Ervin's political career in order to appreciate the great contribution of his public service. In many ways, he was a man of his times, shaped by customs and politics of the 19th century. Some of his ideas may have seemed regional and narrow. Yet, steeped in the 18th century political philosophy of equal rights under law, he turned out to be the essential man for the nation's 20th century crisis.

"Preserving the Constitution" was the title Ervin gave to the autobiography published last year. He wrote the book, he said in the preface, "in the hope that something I may have done or said may prompt others to fight as I have fought for the preservation of the Constitution and the freedoms it enshrines."

Appreciation for Sam Ervin's life of public service will be best expressed in the fulfillment of that hope.

[From the Charlotte News, Apr. 25, 1985]

JUST "AN OL' COUNTRY LAWYER"

Journalist Bob Woodward wrote about finding Sam Ervin "behind a heavy wooden desk in the center of his office, a rumpled, hulking figure with a huge ham of a face. He looked as if he would be more comfortable in a front-porch rocker. . . . Great heaps of paper were strewn chaotically across the desk. He leaned back and began speaking, head jerking, jowls jiggling, bushy eyebrows twittering. . . ."

For a time during a very real crisis in American history, this man with the jiggling jowls and bushy eyebrows was America's conscience. His wisdom and his gentle country humor were an antidote to the immorality, corruption and utter cynicism revealed daily by a parade of White House witnesses. Granted unusually broad subpoena powers rarely given by the U.S. Senate, Sam Ervin passionately pursued the truth and helped America see it.

Born a Morganton lawyer's son and himself a judge in North Carolina for some years before appointment to the Senate, Sam Ervin knew the truth was sometimes hard to find—and to accept. In 1973, Americans were unaccustomed to the thought that their president would forsake honesty, reject the law. It was Sam Ervin who helped them see the importance of a serious inquiry ". . . if we are to determine whether the president is above the law and whether the president is immune from all the duties and responsibilities in matters of this kind which devolve upon all the other mortals who dwell in this land."

Sam Ervin will forever be linked to that Watergate era. His related efforts to protect America's democratic government against the onslaught of Richard Nixon's "imperial presidency" will instruct constitutional experts for a generation. And his outspokenness on behalf of individual rights will be quoted in textbooks for generations. But Sam Ervin is not so easily defined.

Arthur Schlesinger was to note that "the great constitutional champion of civil liberties had also been the great constitutional opponent of civil rights." Sen. Ervin considered the Equal Rights Amendment superfluous and its backers as needing to be "save(d) from their fool friends and themselves." In an era of support for "affirmative action" on behalf of women, minorities and other groups, Sam Ervin stubbornly replied, "We will not fool ourselves when we steal freedom from one man to confer it on another."

Many citizens found his support of civil liberties but his opposition to civil-rights legislation contradictory. Sen. Ervin did not: "One condition of freedom is as much absence of regimentation of the individual as possible. The stronger the government is, the less freedom the individual has." History will judge.

Sen. Ervin took an interest in other subjects during his 20-year Senate career. He worked on speedy-trial legislation and the rights of American Indians; he helped revise the uniform code of military justice; he was instrumental in challenging draconian information-gathering practices initiated in the early 1970s. One can see in all these subjects Sen. Ervin's interest in maintaining America's promise to its people that their individual rights were paramount, and would be respected.

His Senate service in Washington, as important as it was, only capped a long career of public service to North Carolina. He served in the legislature and on the criminal court bench in Burke County. He spent five years as a state superior court judge, a year in the U.S. House and six years on the N.C. Supreme Court. Throughout, Sen. Ervin remained close to his Burke County neighbors. After his retirement in 1974 when he again took up full-time residence in Morganton, he was said to know "everybody in town by their first name. He was like a good, kindly uncle who lived down the street."

Long before illness claimed him Tuesday at the age of 88, Americans had come to respect Sam Ervin's robust vigor, his unimpeachable character, his stalwart loyalty to the truth as he saw it. Those who worked with him understood that behind the folksy persona was a true scholar steeped in history, the Bible and the ever-relevant writings of William Shakespeare.

He was, as he was fond of saying, just a country lawyer. But at a critical time in America's history, Sam Ervin was reassurance of the basic goodness of the American people and of the soundness of the American system of government. His presence on center stage during the Watergate drama gave Americans confidence that their government would indeed continue to be a system of law and not of one man's whims, that it would be responsive; and that it would demand of all citizens the respect for law that Sen. Ervin's life epitomized.

[From the Asheville Citizen, Apr. 25, 1985]

ERVIN SYMBOLIZES THE LAW AT ITS BEST

Few senators leave a lasting mark on government and the nation's law. Sam J. Ervin Jr. was one who did.

He stands apart from others of his time because he did not merely live history; he shaped it. That is what people call "greatness." Like other figures who have achieved that select place in American life, Ervin will be remembered as much for what he believed as for what he did.

Many people in government see the Constitution as a delegation of power, as a license to govern. When it does not allow them to govern in the way they wish, they try to evade it, amend it or even subvert it. But the Constitution is more than a delegation of power. It also is a restraint upon power.

This is how Ervin saw the Constitution and the law. Throughout his career, he fought to preserve the restraints that protect individuals from government power. He was a true conservative.

As a freshman senator, Ervin joined those who stood against Sen. Joseph McCarthy and his insidious brand of patriotism that abused liberties and destroyed lives.

When the turmoil of the 1960s brought a loud demand for so-called "law-and-order" legislation, Ervin was one of the few conservatives who recognized the danger to constitutional principles. He refused to be swept up in calls for authoritarian measures to restore order.

Instead, he used his credibility as a conservative and as the Senate's "foremost constitutionalist" to rally opposition to warrantless searches, government surveillance of dissident groups, detention without bail, limits on the right of assembly, wiretapping and other excesses that were proposed.

Ervin distinguished himself on the constitutional issues. When the Supreme Court outlawed organized prayer in public schools, he was one of the few conservatives who fought legislation to overturn the rulings. He took the same position here as he took on tuition tax credits and other forms of government support for church schools. Ervin saw the separation of government power and private religion as a wall that must not be breached.

Ervin did have his blind spots. Civil rights legislation was one of them. He opposed most such laws, again on constitutional grounds. To Ervin, laws prohibiting discrimination in housing, employment and private accommodations were an encroachment by government on personal liberty. He said civil rights laws were a bogus concept, because they reduced freedom for some while enlarging freedom for others. Nearly every law does that of course.

Evrin's occasional failings could be overlooked—and they were, during the Watergate hearings. His chairmanship of the Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities was not Ervin's most important contribution as a senator, but certainly it was one of his finest moments.

In the Watergate conspiracy, abuse of power on an uprecedented scale was pitted against the safeguards of our governmental system. The system prevailed.

Throughout long months of televised hearings, a shocked nation watched as Ervin and his committee, step by step, exposed the extent and depth of the coverup. The committee became a symbol of the law and constitutional system at work. By his manner and his thoroughness, Ervin was a rock of assurance. Through him, Americans gained a new appreciation of the Constitution and its fundamental protections. We saw, as we had never seen before, that the United States is indeed "a nation of laws, not of men."

Ervin loved the law of the Constitution, but he also recognized that law alone cannot guarantee good government. "Americans have come to feel too much-confidence in the constitutional protections they inherited," he said. "They tend to forget that governments are run by mortals and that no system, no matter how carefully devised, can protect fully against abuse."

Ervin returned to that theme in his final statement as chairman of the Watergate committee. The committee had made more than 50 recommendations for legislation to prevent a similar scandal. Many of the recommendations were enacted into law the following year. But Ervin warned that law alone is not the answer. In addition, we must elect to office persons of resolute character and moral integrity.

Throughout his life of service, Ervin embodied those very traits.

SAM ERVIN—A LIFE DEVOTED TO PRINCIPLE

By the time of his death Tuesday at age 88, Sam J. Ervin Jr. was no longer simply a political figure. He had become a mythic figure, a man cherished by his fellow citizens not just for what he had done but for what he had come to represent.

In an age of chaos, Sam Ervin was not confused. His thinking was firmly rooted in the lessons of the Bible, the Constitution and the history of Western civilization. From those sources he had derived principles that guided his actions. He had the courage to follow those principles, unaffected by personal ambition and oblivious to the prodding of political factions.

A FUNDAMENTALIST

Sen. Ervin was a constitutional fundamentalist, in the way many Christians are biblical fundamentalists. He believed the Constitution was the one true guide for American government, and as an elected official he judged every proposed action by his interpretation of that document.

He was rarely in doubt, but by no means infallible. To govern is to choose between competing values; often the choice is difficult. During one of the momentous struggles of his time, the struggle of black Americans for the full rights of citizenship, Sen. Ervin argued passionately that Congress would be violating the Constitution's limits on federal power if it enacted civil rights legislation designed to strike directly at white supremacy in the South. Had it not been for Watergate, Sen. Ervin might have been remembered as simply one more Southern politician who had employed his impressive talents in an ultimately futile defense of an immoral system.

That judgment of him would have been wrong. Sen. Ervin was not devoted to segregation, he was devoted to the Constitution as he read it. In the case of civil rights legislation, that distinction may have made little difference. Over the long span of his life and public career, however, it made all the difference in the world.

PRINCIPLES PERSONIFIED

The attention focused on him during his conduct of the Watergate hearings enabled his fundamental values to come through. It became clear that Sam Ervin was a man who loved his country and cherished its historic devotion to the rule of law. In a wondrous fusing of man and moment, he came to personify the nation's enduring principles, in contrast to the morally hollow men of the Nixon White House.

Sam Ervin was serious about his purpose, but he took himself lightly, His style of speaking was at best meandering. On his journey to a rhetorical point, he often led listeners through historical analogy, courthouse humor and several detours into Bartlett's Familiar Quotations. But, the point was always there, for a powerful intellect and a wealth of experience lay behind his sometimes bumbling manner.

A PLACE IN HISTORY

It is fitting that Sam Ervin has earned an enduring place in his nation's history, for the study of history was his passion.

From that study, he understood that throughout the centuries of perpetual change some things remained the same, and that among those things were the need for principles to live by and for men and women of courage and intelligence to defend those principles against the passions of the day. Sam Ervin was such a man.

RESPONSE TO MITTERRAND—EXPAND U.S. FARM EXPORTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, based on preliminary reports, the administration's efforts to obtain agreement from our major Western trading partners on initiation of a new round of negotiations under the general agreement on tariffs and trade [GATT] early in 1986 have foundered on French President Mitterrand's unwillingness—and I do not quarrel with his reasoning—to enter into trade talks in early 1986. This development will only increase difficulties in resisting pressures for trade protection in the Congress, across the United States, and around the world.

President Mitterrand focused his refusal to accept a starting date for a new GATT round on insistence that the agenda exclude the operations of the European Community's [EC] common agricultural policy [CAP]. This blanket exemption would include the EC's use of export restitutions, or subsidy payments, to dump its surplus farm production on the world market as well as protection of the internal EC market through variable tariffs on imports.

It is evident from President Mitterrand's remarks in Bonn that a negotiated resolution of the export subsidy issue will not be possible either this year or in the near future. The United States must face the fact that world trade in agricultural products will continue to reflect a large and possibly expanded role of Government intervention and subsidized trade practices. Further delay will only worsen our export outlook and compound the extreme difficulties facing our farmers, ranchers, food processors, and merchandisers.

The urgent need to become competitive will require Congress to act swiftly in writing the 1985 farm bill to allow U.S. farm prices to reach international levels. I intend to support adjustments in price support loan levels that will restore our competitive position, while protecting basic farm income.

At the same time, we cannot expect U.S. producers to accept a sustained period of lower farm prices without the clear assurance that the Federal Government will do its part in offsetting the anticompetitive effects of foreign subsidies and other trade practices. For this reason, I am recommending that President Reagan and Agriculture Secretary John Block initiate a Bonus Incentive Commodity Export Program [BICEP] to demonstrate U.S. resolve to compete under prevailing conditions in world agricultural trade. They have been spending about $30 to $40 billion in agricultural subsidies in the European Community, and it is a severe problem for the various member countries.

Under the BICEP Program, surplus Government-owned commodities would be offered as bonuses to companies which contract to sell specified quantities of U.S. agricultural products overseas. The Commodity Credit Corporation [CCC] currently holds about $6 billion in inventories, and the total is expected to reach $8.3 billion in fiscal year 1986. These commodities have been bought and paid for under the farm price support programs of the last few years, and will cost $360 million in storage in fiscal year 1986 alone. Their use under the BICEP Program would reduce future budget outlays as well as leveraging increased exports. I ask unanimous consent that a table detailing current and projected CCC inventories and their storage and handling costs be reprinted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Source: CCC Fiscal year 1986 President's Budget.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think this BICEP Program might be something we could discuss on a bipartisan basis, to help us put together a farm program and perhaps even resolve some of the questions we are facing now, as we try to put together a budget package.

In my view, the President could establish an independent committee, including agricultural representatives, to administer the BICEP Program. I will be discussing possible provisions with administration officials and other Members of Congress this week. Hopefully we can get agreement on the BICEP approach and on complementary action in the 1985 farm bill in the course of the current budget and deficit reduction discussions.

Action by the United States to restore its competitive position in agricultural trade should not be interpreted as retaliatory in nature. We are simply acknowledging what President Mitterrand so clearly identified in Bonn as an economic fact of life—that farm trade is not, and will not for the foreseeable future, be subject to reasonable restraints under GATT. Until these basic conditions can be changed, the United States must—and will—play by the same rules and do whatever is required to protect the economic interests of our farmers and the agriculture industry.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

WHAT'S GOING ON HERE ON CIVIL RIGHTS?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, what is going on here? Has the administration flipped its wig? Is it rowing with one oar? All the 28 years this Senator has served in this body, Democratic and Republican administrations have not only favored civil rights, they have pushed its implementation. In fact, as far back as Franklin D. Roosevelt, Presidents have consistently fought for greater opportunity for blacks as well as whites. Go down the list—Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and Carter. Under each of those Presidents our Government recognized there was an ugly racist prejudice that too many Americans felt. But no administration ever played to it, until now. Here we have an administration that not only fails to push civil rights. But it is pushing its big nose into the business of municipalities that are trying to correct one of the few truly shameful blots on this great country of ours: The failure to provide true equality of opportunity for our black citizens and for women. Frankly, this Senator can hardly believe what the administration is trying to do in Indianapolis. The Department of Justice, under a prior administration, sued the city for its failure to afford minorities equal opportunity in competition for public jobs. The city and the Justice Department agreed to resolve the suit by establishing an affirmative action program that has resulted, to the city's great credit in hiring some black firefighters and black policemen and some female police officers. The Attorney General and the President of the United States should be taking their hats off to Indianapolis. But what are they doing? The Attorney General is going to court to stop this affirmative action that is overcoming generations of obvious and blatant prejudice that had kept women and blacks from the opportunity to work for city agencies which their taxes support, and that, ironically, was initiated at the request of the Justice Department.

Mr. President, this is not Madison, WI, or Berkeley, CA, or New York City. This is Indianapolis, the home of the Pulliam papers, among the most conservative in America, the city gave this body that fine conservative Republican, U.S. Senator DICK LUGAR who was their mayor. If there is a more conservative big city in the country than Indianapolis, what is it? The President has spoken in ringing terms about the desirability of equal opportunity for all citizens, regardless of race or sex or any other distinction. That is good rhetoric, welcome rehetoric. But who can believe it, when we see what the administration is doing in Indianapolis.

And that is not all, Mr. President, the State of Ohio has established a voting registration program to make registration and voting as convenient to as many Ohio citizens as possible. The program has paid off. In the last election, Ohio enjoyed record voter participation. Incidentally, President Reagan carried the State decisively. But administration is now acting through the Department of Justice to stop the vigorous Ohio voter registration program. Now, Mr. President, for years observers have criticized American democracy for the pitiful feebleness of our voter participation. It has been the shame of our country. In Ohio, the State has put its officials to work to overcome this. They have succeeded spectacularly. Now the administration is going to court to spend your tax dollars and mine to stop it. Why? Why? Is there fear that, if all American citizens vote, in the long run the votes of those who have been less likely to vote in past elections: the poor, the less privileged, the minorities, will begin to have more influence? Mr. President, this Senator has thought about this ridiculous contradiction of a Federal Government going to court to stop a State from increasing voter participation, and I cannot come to any other conclusion except that this administration does not want the citizens who have been nonvoters in the past to vote. They do not want a fuller, truer democracy. If there is another answer, what is it?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Sunday, May 5, 1985, New York Times, entitled "Affirmative Retreat," be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFFIRMATIVE RETREAT

Not content with agitating against affirmative action, the Reagan Administration has sued Indianapolis for honoring commitments to desegregate its police and fire departments. The action fits a design to dismantle Federal civil rights enforcement long before the nation has overcome past discrimination.

The Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, William Bradford Reynolds, contends that the Constitution and Federal law prohibit using numerical goals in employment. He says there can be no such remedy, no matter how blatent the past bias and no matter how mild the impact on white male job seekers favored in the past.

Mr. Reynolds is once again misreading the law. He is diverting precious resources from unfinished civil rights business and threatening to burden the courts with retrial of settled cases.

Fortunately, every court that has heard his theories has ruled against them. Indianapolis and other cities that have long since made their peace with fair hiring requirements want no more interference with orderly desegregation. Congress should call off this new assault of the law.

When the Justice Department, under different management, sued Indianapolis in 1978, only 11 percent of its police officers and 8 percent of its firefighters were black. Under a consent decree the city agreed to enroll blacks in a quarter of its training classes and to appoint one woman police officer for every four new hires. Blacks now hold 14 and 13 percent of the police and fire positions—gains that city officials hope to enlarge if left alone.

Mr. Reynolds has now sent intimidating letters to 56 governmental employers, warning that the Supreme Court's decision in a Memphis case last year outlaws numerical targets, whether voluntary, court-ordered or negotiated in consent decrees. He refers to a ruling that Memphis, in making budget-induced layoffs, could not ignore the seniority rights of white firefighters in order to retain more recently hired blacks.

But in the case of layoffs, not hiring and promotions, and it ran afoul of an explicit protection of seniority systems that organized labor demanded for supporting the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Mr. Reynolds may want the affirmative action ruled unlawful, but the Court has not done so.

For these and similar attacks on civil rights, Mr. Reynolds is slated for promotion to Associate Attorney General. The Senate need not acquiesce. Congress can also withhold appropriations for Mr. Reynolds's brand of litigation. The path to a color-blind society is forward through accommodation, not back through the turmoil of the past.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that a letter to the New York Times written on April 23 of this year and printed in the Times on May 5, by Sherrod Brown, the Ohio Secretary of State, also be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OHIO GETS BIG RETURN ON REGISTRATION DRIVE

TO THE EDITOR: As Ohio's chief election officer, I applaud "Get Out the Vote, Now," (editorial, April 5) and its condemnation of the Reagan Administration's harassment of voter-registration programs in Ohio, New York and Texas.

While it can be a delicate matter to use public employees to register voters in states like New York, where registrants state a party preference, under Ohio law, prospective voters cannot select a political party when registering. And no one—including the Administration—has produced any evidence that our program in state offices has ever been used in a partisan manner. The same is true for New York and Texas. The Administration seems most concerned that so many new voters are being registered.

Ohio's program brought record registration in 1983 and 1984, and voter turnout hit record levels both years. I intend to continue these efforts in 1985 and beyond because I believe that good government comes from participation in the electoral process by as many people as possible. Someday we may even have a President who agrees.

SHERROD BROWN,
Ohio Secretary of State,
Columbus, OH, April 23, 1985.

HOW THE DEFENSE DEPARTMENT STOLE NUCLEAR WINTER

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, what has happened to the international concern about nuclear winter? The silence about nuclear winter is thundering. We treat this subject the way we would treat a bad case of halitosis by our mother-in-law. We know it. We shudder when we think about it. But no one discusses what we should do about it. It is shocking that we do not. But we do not. Why not? What could be more serious than a finding by the preeminent scientific body in the United States that if this country goes to war with the weapons we are building at a cost of many billions of dollars a year that war would create the clear possibility of a nuclear winter. We have discussed nuclear winter so little. Let me repeat what it would mean. Such a nuclear winter could plunge the Earth into many weeks of darkness and lower normal temperatures by as much as 45 degrees. A drop in temperatures that was even a small fraction of this would wipe out the Earth's wheat crop, result in the death of most plants and animals and create a level of international starvation that could conceivably end life on this planet. Do you ask who says so?

Well, Mr. President, this was not the finding of a group of fanatic peaceniks. It was the product of a study by this country's most prestigious scientific body: the National Academy of Science. Who funded the study and who supports the findings? Answer: the Defense Department of our Government. I repeat. In a study commissioned and supported by the Defense Department the National Academy of Science has found that a nuclear war that used up just half the nuclear weapons capacity of the United States and the Soviet Union would result in the clear possibility that the world would suffer a nuclear winter.

That finding was made available to Congress and the country many months ago. What has been the reaction? Have executive agencies in our Government gone to work to determine what we could do about such a very possible catastrophe? There has been a small amount of activity on the executive side coordinated by the Defense Department. But the nuclear winter studies are weak. And, Mr. President, they are going nowhere. Why do I say that? I say that, Mr. President, because the administration's party line on nuclear winter has been laid down by Richard Perle, the eminence gris of Defense Department policy.

That party line is that nuclear winter has no policy significance. What does that mean? That means that the agencies can go ahead and play with the idea of nuclear winter. They can talk about it. But since the administration has made it clear that nuclear winter is to have no policy significance, the agencies can do nothing about it. This is outrageous. Here is the most significant threat to the survival of mankind in this nuclear age. We know that there is a clear possibility that a nuclear war could kick off a total environmental disaster that could ravish the entire human population of the Earth, and our Government has decided that that grim fact shall be deemed to have no policy significance. In other words, we will do nothing about it.

Mr. President, the administration has made a disastrous mistake in this cavalier handling of nuclear winter. This is a mistake that could have devastating worldwide consequences. But in all honesty, this Senator marvels at the success the Defense Department has achieved in banishing this terrible threat from public consciousness.

A few years ago a number of leading scientists who had studied the effects of dust storms on other planets hypothesized the possibility that a nuclear war would kick up into the atmosphere such an immense amount of soot and smoke from hundreds of burning cities that the rays of the Sun would be obscured with a consequent devastating darkness and drop in temperature. The scientists were from a number of countries. They were highly respected experts. The Defense Department has several options. They could argue with the scientists. They could vigorously dispute and try to discredit their findings. If they had chosen that option the nuclear winter threat would have been kept alive. The dispute could have eventually crystallized a public opinion that would accept nuclear winter for the threat it is. The public might have insisted that elected officials act on it. The Defense Department could have followed another option. They could have ignored the nuclear winter findings. But that strategy ran the risk of provoking more and more scientific inquiry and a gradual widespread acceptance of a scientific theory that had strong and prestigious expert support. So what did the Defense Department do? Well, they selected another strategy. It has worked like a charm for them. They accepted the nuclear winter argument. They commissioned the Nation's top scientific organization to study it.

When the National Academy study commissioned by the Defense Department found nuclear winter was a clear possibility, they authorized further study. Then the Defense Department passed the word: "Nuclear winter shall have no policy significance." Did it work? Did it? It was the coup of the year. Think of it. Here we have the most devastating threat to human existence. We have a threatening environmental disaster that could be the product of a nuclear war. For months there has been virtually nothing said about it on the floor of the House of Representatives or Senate. There have been practically no congressional hearings or investigations since the Joint Economic Committee held a hearing in July 1984. Studies in the administration are creeping along, and I mean creeping as you might expect when the word is passed that nuclear winter will have no policy significance.

Most surprising of all somehow foreign countries throughout the world that would not be involved in nuclear war except as observers and bystanders have issued no audible complaints although they would be devastated by a nuclear winter and suffer intense starvation as a consequence. Just consider the appalling injustice to innocent countries in Europe, Asia, North and South America, and Africa. Here they are going along, minding their own business. They behave as good international citizens. They have no designs on other countries. They cooperate in trying to build a better world through trade and perhaps with foreign assistance. Then a war erupts between the United States and the Soviet Union.

These other countries don't have the slightest part in the difference between the two great superpowers. They attack no one. No one attacks them. No warhead falls in their country. But suddenly a darkness descends on Norway, and Canada, on Mexico and Japan, on Australia and Nigeria and on every other nation on Earth. The darkness persists for many weeks. It is accompanied and followed by a disastrous drop in temperatures. Crops fail. At first animals die. Within a short time there is no food. Entire populations in countries thousands of miles away from the hostilities starve to death.

Does anyone say that scenario cannot happen? Some do. But the American Academy of Science—our most competent scientists tell us that is precisely what could happen in a nuclear winter. So why isn't there a resounding international protest? To read the papers these days, to watch television, to listen to the radio, to listen to the speeches in our Congress or in world parliaments one would get the impression that no such terrible fate awaits the world if we stumble into a nuclear war. Well, Mr. President, it does.

JOHN NORTON MOORE ON THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, recently each Member of the Senate received a letter from John Norton Moore who is the president of the Conflict Analysis Center. In his letter, Professor Moore outlines several of the most compelling arguments for the immediate ratification of the Genocide Convention.

Professor Moore points out that the United States has severely damaged its credibility as a leading spokesman for human rights by not ratifying the treaty. Totalitarian regimes use our continuing refusal to ratify the treaty as a propaganda device to distract public attention from their own human rights violations. The Soviet Union, in particular, has found the U.S. failure to sign the treaty to be an extremely useful weapon in their anti-American propaganda campaigns. In his letter, Dr. Moore urges this body to ratify the Genocide Convention in order to remove such a powerful weapon from the hands of our enemies.

Professor Moore also offers hope for stopping contemporary attempts at genocide. He correctly states that U.S. ratification of the treaty would focus international attention on contemporary perpetrators of the crime. In addition, should our country become a party to the treaty, the United States would be able to take perpetrator nations to the World Court for their attempts at genocide. For example, if the United States ratifies the treaty, our Government could sue the Iranian Government in the World Court for its attempt to eliminate the Bahais. Until we can take that step, our attempts to stop this wholesale destruction of an innocent people will, most likely, be futile.

Finally, Professor Moore makes an important point about the jurisdiction of the World Court. Some people who oppose the Genocide Convention do so because they fear that the United States will be taken to the World Court on trumped up charges of genocide. However, Dr. Moore explains that other nations can already sue the United States in the World Court for genocide under article 56 of the United Nations charter. Professor Moore further states:

Ratification (of the Genocide Convention) will clarify for the United States the definition of genocide, and it will enable us more easily to rebut false charges with respect to actions of the democracies and their allies and to counter grotesque disinformation by those who would mask their own human rights abuses and debase the real meaning of genocide.

I urge all of my colleagues to read John Moore's letter and the pamphlet which accompanies it before deciding how to vote on this important treaty.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Moore's letter to me be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONFLICT ANALYSIS CENTER,
Washington, DC, April 15, 1985.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: Enclosed is a copy of the Conflict Analysis Center's pamphlet on United States accession to the Genocide Convention, updated through the close of the 98th Congress. I hope you will find this material helpful as you reach your decision about Senate advice and consent to this fundamental human rights document.

Following a sketch of the treaty's purpose and a table of contents, the pamphlet opens with President Reagan's strong statement of support for United States ratification. Next is an introduction, presenting the treaty's background and importance. The remainder of the pamphlet consists of basic questions and answers; the text of the Convention; the one declaration and three understandings first recommended in 1971 by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and endorsed by President Reagan in September 1984; Senate Resolution 478 on expeditious action in the 99th Congress; the list of ratifying nations; and statements from a variety of public leaders on the nature and significance of the Convention. Finally, we include information on the Conflict Analysis Center and our development of this pamphlet as an educational contribution to informed discussion of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

Let me close on a personal note. It is in the clearest moral foreign policy, and national security interest of the United States to ratify this treat without delay. Specifically:

Ratification will restore United States leadership in the continuing effort to end the horror of genocide. United States accession is "a statement of conscience" for a free democratic peoples whose government is founded on the conviction that all men are created equal. To quote William F. Buckley: "We should identify ourselves as approving the proposition that genocide is a violation of international law." The Convention is, at minimum, an important symbolic statement against genocide.

Ratification will remove a propaganda theme available to totalitarian regimes in response to United States pressure to improve human rights. The Soviet Union has sought during the Helsinki talks and elsewhere to deflect attention from its own human rights abuses by asking why the United States has never ratified the Genocide Convention. As Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick has said: "I believe that the Senate's ratification of the Convention will enhance the standing of the United States in the United Nations and other international organizations. The Soviets and others hostile to the United States have long focused on the United States' failure to ratify the Convention as a part of their anti-American propaganda. It is contrary to our national interest to provide fuel to this campaign."

Ratification will help the United States to direct international attention even more clearly on to contemporary totalitarian genocide, as in the Khmer Rouge attack on the Cham in Cambodia. In the view of Ambassador Max Kampelman: "It would be extremely helpful to the United States internationally were we to ratify the Genocide Convention. It is ludicrous to provide the Soviet Union with a club with which to attack us, particularly since we abide by the Convention's provisions even without ratification, while the Soviets, who have ratified it, come close to violating its provisions."

Finally, we should clearly understand—as the Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States explains—that genocide already is a crime under customary international law and under Article 56 of the United Nations Charter. Both, of course, are binding on the United States. Indeed, under United States acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice, a propaganda case of "genocide" now could be filed against the United States in the World Court much as Nicaragua has filed an upside down case against us on Central America. Ratification, which under the proposed declaration will not occur until the Congress and the President have enacted the implementing legislation required by Article V of the Convention, will clarify for the United States the definition of genocide, and it will enable us more easily to rebut false charges with respect to actions of the democracies and their allies and to counter grotesque disinformation by those who would mask their own human rights abuses and debase the real meaning of genocide.

Sincerely,

JOHN NORTON MOORE.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 1 p.m. with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

DR. JOSEF MENGELE—DRUG TRAFFICKER

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, there is a very large debt we still owe, and it is one that we must continue to work our most diligently to repay.

I refer to the impossible task of compensating the victims of the Holocaust. Revelations of the unspeakable horror of that event continue to manifest themselves. The most recent of these is that Dr. Josef Mengele, the Nazi physician who tortured and murdered thousands at Auschwitz, has been trafficking in illicit narcotics for over a decade and a half.

During a recent Senate inquiry initiated by my colleagues, Senators D'AMATO and SPECTER, it was revealed in declassified CIA documents that Dr. Mengele had been suspected since 1971 of being heavily involved in illegal narcotics trafficking in Paraguay.

According to these reports, while enjoying the protection of that nation's government, Dr. Mengele had been supporting himself by international drug trafficking. Then, in 1979, the CIA's special assistant for coordination of foreign narcotics information asked Federal drug control officials for information on drug trafficking by Dr. Mengele. The CIA indicated in this request that the business owned by Dr. Mengele's family, a German farm machinery manufacturing company with offices in South America, "could serve as a mechanism to move or launder large sums of money, as well as to cover the movement of illicit narcotics."

Mr. President, the documents revealed, as well, that no record of this inquiry, on the part of any Federal drug control agency, exists.

Mr. President, I join my colleagues in asking relevant Federal agencies to commence immediately an active investigation of these charges. As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, and the Senate drug enforcement caucus, I am all too familiar with the results of successful drug trafficking operations. Individuals who traffic in drugs think nothing of murdering children, assassinating law enforcement officials, and destabilizating entire societies. I think we need no further proof of the inhumanity of this man, a proven trafficker of death and destruction in ways too numerous to mention. I think it is necessary that whatever effort is needed be made to bring this unspeakable criminal to justice. We must ensure that this is done not only for the victims of the Holocaust and their survivors all over the world, but also for the sake of the innocent potential victims of the drugs that are brought to our shores, our children.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend my colleagues, Senators SPECTER and D'AMATO, for their efforts in this regard, and to offer them my assistance in this worthy attempt to see justice done.

ROBERT FUJIMOTO: HAWAII'S SMALL BUSINESSMAN OF THE YEAR

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, the vitality of small business is perhaps the best gauge of our Nation's economic health, accounting as it does for 60 percent of all private sector employment and 90 percent of all newly created jobs in recent years. I bring this cogent fact to the attention of my colleagues because this week has been proclaimed "Small Business Week," and we may better know why we pause to salute those bold and able entrepreneurs responsible for the creation of jobs, income, and innovation so essential to a robust national, State, and local economy. It is significant, Mr. President, that this observance should come at a time when the Congress is prepared to act on whether or not the institutional advocate for small business within the executive branch of the Federal Government, the Small Business Administration [SBA], should be shut down.

However, this issue is not the reason for my rising to address this body. Rather, I rise to recognize the 50 Small Business Persons of the Year, representing all 50 States of the Union, who will be honored at a reception this evening in the Russell Senate Office Building Caucus Room. Representing the Aloha State will be the small businessman of the year, Mr. Robert M. Fujimoto, president of HPM Building Supply of Hilo on the big island of Hawaii. His is a family enterprise which has thrived for four generations, surviving two natural disasters which would have destroyed a less resolute clan.

In 1921, Kametaro Fujimoto, Robert's grandfather, opened the business in Hilo, where he sawed and planed rough timbers, imported from the mainland, into finished dimensions for sale to building contractors. His son, Barney, took over in 1929, and added construction supplies, such as paint, plumbing, and hardware. The company dropped its lumber operations when a tsunami—a huge tidal wave—wiped out the lumber mill in 1946. Robert Fujimoto assumed management leadership from his father, Barney, in 1954, when he was appointed executive vice president and general manager.

The company had just relocated to larger quarters when a second tsunami struck in 1960, destroying the new facility and carrying the entire inventory out to sea. With community support, and Federal assistance, the Fujimoto family and their employees rebuilt their business from scratch once more. A key factor in their ability to recover from this devastating blow was a $650,000 disaster assistance loan from the SBA. In 1968 Bobby, as he is popularly known, was able to refinance this loan, under the SBA's guaranteed loan program, and to generate the resources with which to expand. He established a corrugated metal roll-forming facility, reintroduced lumber, and added a truss manufacturing plant, plus a facility to pressure-treat lumber against the ravages of tropical termites, and a prehung door assembly operation as well as a computerized accounting system.

Without a helping hand from the Federal Government to pick himself up after mother nature's knock-out blow, however, Bobby Fujimoto would not be in business today. We maximized the assistance he received, because last year his total sales exceeded $18 million and he shared his success with 112 employees, all of whom participate in the company's stock ownership plan which he instituted in 1977. His reputation for business resourcefulness caught the attention of executives at C. Brewer & Co., oldest of Hawaii's so-called big five corporate giants in Honolulu; they sought out Bobby's counsel and elected him to their board of directors.

Despite the demands of his business, Bobby Fujimoto has given freely and generously of his time to his community, and, indeed, to his State, by way of community service. He has won awards for his dedication to scouting and has been a leader in United Way campaigns. He has served as a member of the Hawaii State Board of Lands and Natural Resources and has chaired the University of Hawaii's Board of Regents.

Today his son, Michael, has relieved him of day-to-day responsibilities for this fourth-generation family enterprise, which has withstood two tsunamis and many turns of the business and construction cycle down through the years.

Mr. President, I began these remarks by saying that my reason in rising to address my colleagues was not to speak to the issue of the SBA's continuance but to salute a constituent small businessman who has gained national recognition, because he has survived and prospered against great odds. In telling his story, however, I submit that I have made a compelling case for SBA's own survival. And with the vitality of people like Robert Fujimoto who makes the most of a little timely help from Uncle Sam, the Nation's economy will continue to persevere.

EULOGY TO MILTON EISENHOWER: WISE COUNSELOR

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, with the death of Dr. Milton Eisenhower at the age of 85, one of the wisest voices in American public life has been stilled. He was a man of vast administrative experience in the fields of agriculture and education, a scholar of Latin-American relations and the American Presidency, and one whose counsel was sought by every occupant of the White House from Calvin Coolidge to Richard Nixon. While his older brother's prominence as a military leader, college president, and our Nation's Commander in Chief was compressed within two decades, Milton Eisenhower's own illustrious career spanned over six decades.

His obituaries recount his many and varied missions for Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, his brother Ike, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson, and Richard M. Nixon. Earlier he had been a ranking agricultural official to Presidents Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover. Yet this astute counselor to Presidents remained very much his own man and became one of the most discerning commentators on the Oval Office and critic of its occupants.

By strange coincidence, Milton Eisenhower died last Thursday, the same day on which I introduced legislation to implement the recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians and spoke of the necessity to right this unprecedented injustice and blot on our Nation's past. Milton Eisenhower was President Roosevelt's choice to head the War Relocation Authority set up to carry out the dictates of the infamous Executive Order 9066, a position he held for only 90 days before resigning. In his memoirs he faulted President Roosevelt for succumbing to wartime hysteria in issuing that order which, he said, subjected to evacuees to "indignities of historic proportions" and "need not have happened."

He was not alone in this opinion at the time. Attorney General Francis Biddle counseled against it, FBI Chief Hoover believed it was unwarranted, War Secretary Henry Stimson and his assistant, John J. McCloy, had their reservations, but Dr. Eisenhower alone acted on his principles and convictions.

This is part of the Milton Eisenhower story my colleagues may not all be familiar with, Mr. President, and it is well that they should.

When the civil turmoil of the sixties was at its height and lawlessness seemed out of control it was to Milton Eisenhower that Lyndon Johnson turned to head a study of the causes of violence in our country, an assignment he carried out with great wisdom and conviction. In part, I would submit, that conviction sprang from his wartime experience with the Japanese-American relocation effort when he witnessed how our most cherished ideals which bind Americans into a great society can be abandoned in the heat of public passions and prejudices.

Dr. Eisenhower made a life-long study of United States-Latin American relations and his 1963 book on the subject was a best seller. From this vantage point, this lifelong Republican was an outspoken critic of the current administration's Central American policies, pointing out that its military initiatives were only serving to drive our neighbors closer to Cuba and the Soviet Union. He was also outspoken in his opposition to the administration's earlier Draconian cures for inflation.

In paying tribute to the memory of Milton Eisenhower, Mr. President, it may be well for us to recall his longtime opposition to Federal deficits and the pernicious effects of incurring them. He likened the practice of engaging in deficit financing to the practice of taking sleeping pills in order to gain slumber. One or two tablets can be tolerated, perhaps more, but take enough of them and you are dead. I would remind my friends on the other side of the party aisle that the last President to take Dr. Eisenhower's advice on this score was his brother.

To honor posthumously a great American and citizen of the world, I suggest we strive to do better.

Mr. CRANSTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to express my thanks to our colleague from Hawaii for calling to the attention of Senators the record of Milton Eisenhower's resignation as Director of the War Relocation Board after only 90 days following his appointment by President Roosevelt.

The relocation of Americans on account of race and nationality is a stain on our honor and it is one we must not forget.

I knew Milton Eisenhower in those days. Along with him, I opposed the relocation of Japanese Americans in the first place. It was a matter of honor with Milton Eisenhower who resigned his post after he learned what it was all about. I had the greatest respect for him and I thank my colleague for drawing attention to that little bit of very significant American history.

THEODORE H. WHITE

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on my way to the floor just now I mentioned to a colleague that today is Theodore H. White's 70th birthday, and that I proposed to call this to the attention of the Senate. My friend was seized by the idea. Could Teddy White be 70? But of course. He had read "Fire in the Ashes" when he himself was barely out of high school. He had read everything since. One majestic chronicle after another. His father had done so as well. It was a bond they had together. The son who went into American politics; the father who, in a sense, followed him there, sharing his experiences through those volumes. "You know," he said, "most of us around here have been in those meetings, some of them, those rooms, those people. But millions of Americans have never been, never could be, until Teddy White asked them to come along. Told how Lyndon Johnson looked at the end of the strategy session; what Sam Rayburn said under his voice, what Clark Clifford had meant to say; what Wal Rostow had decided was best left unsaid. When Bobby Kennedy heard."

In the long life of the American Republic there has been no such oeuvre. He has not only written our history, he has become part of it. Much as Macaulay looms larger in our minds today than all those Whigs he wrote about, I cannot doubt that Americans of the next century will have a greater sense of Theodore H. White than of the Presidencies, even perhaps the Presidents whose brief authority he has captured with a rigor of mind and love of country that is without equal, and happily with a still questing restlessness that promises not merely more, but more and better, for the best of Teddy White is yet to be.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

At 12:43 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled joint resolutions:

H.J. Res. 195. Joint resolution designating May 1985 as "Older Americans Month"; and

H.J. Res. 258. Joint resolution to designate May 6, 1985, as "Dr. Jonas E. Salk Day".

The enrolled joint resolutions were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-1042. A communication from the Secretary of Energy transmitting, pursuant to law, the Annual Report on Use of Alcohol in Fuels; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1043. A communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, pursuant to law, the Annual Report on Research and Demonstration Projects in Alternative Coal Mining Technologies; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1044. A communication from the Secretary of Energy transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on biomass energy and alcohol fuels programs; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1045. A communication from the Chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on abnormal occurrences at licensed nuclear facilities in the third quarter of 1984; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC-1046. A communication from the Under Secretary of Labor transmitting, pursuant to law, a proposed plan for assisting workers adversely affected by imports of steel products; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1047. A communication from the President of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on his intention to designate 32 countries as least-developed beneficiary developing countries for purposes of the Generalized System of Preference Program; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1048. A communication from the Executive Secretary of the Foreign-Trade Zones Board transmitting, pursuant to law, the 44th Annual Report of the Board; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1049. A communication from the Acting Archivist of the U.S. transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to permit the Archivist to use funds generated by the recovery of silver from the destruction or processing of film to support the processing of archival records; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1050. A communication from the Administrator of the Veterans Administration transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a computer matching program between State Licensing Records and certain VA Records; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1051. A communication from the Solicitor of the Commission on Civil Rights transmitting, pursuant to law, the Commission's Government in the Sunshine Act report; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1052. A communication from the Under Secretary of Labor transmitting, pursuant to law, the Department's Freedom of Information Act report; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1053. A communication from the Executive Director of the U.S. Naval Sea Cadet Corps transmitting, pursuant to law, the Corps 1984 annual audit report; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1054. A communication from the Chief Justice of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1055. A communication from the Chief Justice of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1056. A communication from the Chief Justice of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1057. A communication from the Deputy Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts transmitting, pursuant to law, a report advising that no uniform percentage adjustment needs to be made at this time in the dollar amounts relating to bankruptcy proceedings; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-190. A joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Virginia; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry:

"HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 294

"Whereas, the food stamp program is completely funded by the Federal government, but it is administered by the various states which have no control over the regulations; and

"Whereas, eligibility for food stamps is based on income and financial assets, and a family of four with income of less than $12,870 might qualify for some assistance, but the rules are complex; and

"Whereas, 412,000 Virginians receive an average grant of $41 per month which averages out to approximately 45¢ to 47¢ per person per meal; and

"Whereas, the stamps cannot be used for alcohol, tobacco, ready-to-eat hot food, pet food, or medicines, and this list of exemptions also includes basic necessities such as soap and detergent; and

"Whereas, hunger alone is a devastating problem to many who have little to eat, but a larger blow to the human spirit can occur due to deprivation of basic hygiene; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates, the Senate concurring, That the General Assembly of Virginia does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to consider the allowance of items of hygiene such as soap and detergent to be purchased with food stamps by recipients; and, be it

"Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House of Delegates, prepare a copy of this resolution to be sent to the Congressional Delegation from Virginia, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to apprise them of the sense of the General Assembly of Virginia."

POM-191. A concurrent resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Appropriations.

"RESOLUTION

"Whereas, the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, known as Amtrak, serves the citizens of this Commonwealth; and

"Whereas, our citizens' use of Amtrak has increased continuously since 1971 to the point where 4,500,000 persons used Amtrak in 1984 to arrive in and depart from points in our Commonwealth, involving the use of 51 trains; and

"Whereas, Amtrak directly employes 3,242 citizens of this Commonwealth, with annualized earnings of approximately $85,800,000 per year; and

"Whereas, through the purchase of supplies, equipment and other services in this Commonwealth during 1984, Amtrak expended $76,500,000; and

"Whereas, Amtrak has continually improved the quality of its service and its financial position by recovering 60% of its revenue from the fare-box, which is a 12% increase over the past four years; and

"Whereas, the number of passengers carried has increased to the point where Amtrak transported 22,000,000 people in 1984 and is expected to increase that amount by 2% to 3% in 1985; and

"Whereas, the budget presented to the Congress of the United States by the President would, if enacted, deprive Amtrak of the Federal funding required for its continued existence; and

"Whereas, the effective elimination of Amtrak would result in serious adverse economic consequences to this Commonwealth and its citizens in terms of loss and investment, loss of income to equipment and supplies contractors with Amtrak, loss of rail passenger service, loss of jobs and a concomitant strain on the Railroad Retirement System by the loss of many contributors to that system; therefore be it

"Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring), That the General Assembly memorialize the Congress of the United States to permit the continuation of Amtrak to serve this Commonwealth as it has in the past; and

"Be it further resolved, That the Congress of the United States is memorialize to provide sufficient funding through appropriation of those amounts of money necessary to keep Amtrak, in fiscal year 1986, in at least as sound a position operationally and financially as it has been in fiscal year 1985; and

"Be it further resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers of each house of Congress, to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania and to the Honorable Elizabeth Dole, Secretary of Transportation, United States Department of Transportation, 400 Seventh Street, SW, Washington, DC, 20590."

POM-192. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Arizona; to Committee on Foreign Relations.

"SENATE RESOLUTION 1001

"Whereas, the Arizona State Senate is justly proud of its long and unyielding commitment to the civil liberties of freedom loving and oppressed people everywhere; and

"Whereas, it has been brought to the attention of the Arizona State Senate that the civil liberties of Greek Orthodox Christians living in Turkey have been repeatedly threatened and denied; and

"Whereas, the military junta headed by General Evren in Ankara has decreed that Turkish citizens of Greek descent cannot buy or sell real estate, thus creating the expectation that their homes and businesses will be confiscated; and

"Whereas, Turkish officials recently visited the worldwide center of Orthodox Christianity known as Ecumenical Patriarchate and registered and declared all sacred items within the Center as the national property of Turkey; and

ology on the island of Halki to the status of a modest high school with a Turkish principal; and

"Whereas, Turkish law requires a permit for any repair work to Christian churches, schools, businesses or homes if the cost of such repair exceeds an equivalent of two American dollars and such permits are systemically denied to Greek Orthodox residents of the country; and

"Whereas, there are continuous efforts to seize the income-producing properties willed by Greek Orthodox people to the famous hospital in Balukli, Istanbul, which treats all members of the community regardless of religion or nationality; and

"Whereas, at least three hundred Greek Orthodox families were forced to flee Turkey last year because of these and other oppressive conditions; and

"Whereas, the ethnically Greek population of Turkey has declined from one-half million at the turn of the century to fewer than five thousand of whom nearly ninety-two per cent are age sixty-five or older; and

"Whereas, these facts strongly suggest a Turkish policy of active persecution of those of Greek descent. Therefore "Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Arizona:

"1. That the Members of the Arizona State Senate respectively request that the United States Government investigate these charges and, if substantiated, petition the Government of Turkey to institute policies to protect the civil liberties of Orthodox Christians.

"2. That the Secretary of State of the State of Arizona transmit copies of this Resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Member of the Arizona Congressional Delegation."

"SENATE RESOLUTION No. 189

"Whereas, the State of Hawaii presently depends on imported oil for more than 90 per cent of its energy requirements, at a cost of over $1 billion a year, representing nearly 10 per cent of the gross state product; and

"Whereas, Hawaii's consumers who own energy conservation devices saved $27 million on their utility bills in 1983 alone, displacing 365,000 barrels of oil; and

"Whereas, the majority of those claiming tax credits in the State report adjusted gross incomes of between $20,000 and $40,000, and from 1983 to 1985, the proportion of low-income claimants, or those with adjusted gross incomes under $20,000, grew from 12 per cent to 22 per cent; and

"Whereas, 329,500 dwelling units in Hawaii do not yet benefit from the installation of a solar water heating system or energy conservation device, representing approximately 84 per cent of the residential housing market; and

"Whereas, federal energy tax incentives stimulate Hawaii's emerging solar industry and create jobs, achieve positive environmental impacts by utilizing the energy available at the site, accelerate new technological development, increase the security and reliability of our energy supply, counterbalance long-standing subsidies to conventional fuel sources and energy costs, and provide our citizens with the opportunity to increase their own energy independence; and

"Whereas, the energy tax credits have been an effective economic incentive to encourage individuals and businesses to invest in energy efficiency and renewable energy technologies; and

"Whereas, Hawaii's overwhelming complement of renewable energy resources makes possible the widespread utilization of solar energy for water heating, electricity production, and heat processing; and

"Whereas, the best interests of the people and the State of Hawaii are served by preserving the energy tax credits, which, studies have shown, directly contribute to the growth of the solar industry in those states which also have enacted energy tax incentives; and

"Whereas, the State of Hawaii supports a balanced United States energy policy; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Thirteenth Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Sesssion of 1985, that this body vigorously supports extension of the federal energy tax credits, now due to expire on December 31, 1985, until December 31, 1990, and urges the United States Congress to take timely action this year to ensure their continuation; and

"Be it further resolved, that certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Secretary of Energy, and Hawaii's congressional delegation."

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. DANFORTH, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

Douglas A. Riggs, of Alaska, to be General Counsel of the Department of Commerce.

(The above nomination was reported from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation with the recommendation that it be confirmed, subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. GORTON:

S. 1072. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to increase individual and party participation, to provide for the adjustment of contribution limits, and to allow candidates to control expenditures made on their behalf; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 1073. A bill to amend the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 for the purpose of improving the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. MATSUNAGA:

S. 1074. A bill to direct the Attorney General to study the problems of indigent, elderly immigrants who wish to return to their home countries but cannot afford to pay the transportation costs to do so; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 1075. A bill to authorize and direct the General Accounting Office to audit the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Advisory Council, the Federal Open Market Committee, and Federal Reserve banks and their branches; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. LEVIN:

S. 1076. A bill for the relief of Denise Glenn; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 1077. A bill to amend the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2051 et seq.) to provide authorization of appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. KASTEN (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. PACKWOOD, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 1078. A bill to amend the Federal Trade Commission Act to provide authorizations of appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. GOLDWATER (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 1079. A bill to provide authorization of appropriations for activities of the National Telecommunications and Information Administration; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. PACKWOOD:

S. 1080. A bill to amend the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 to authorize additional appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. DODD, Mr. EAST, Mr. EXON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. HATCH, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. NUNN, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. THURMOND and Mr. ZORINSKY):

S.J. Res. 131. Joint resolution to designate the week of June 2, 1985, through June 8, 1985, as "Future Problem Solving Program Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DANFORTH:

S.J. Res. 132. Joint resolution designating October 1985, as "National Head Injury Awareness Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GORTON:

S. 1072. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to increase individual and party participation, to provide for the adjustment of contribution limits, and to allow candidates to control expenditures made on their behalf; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

FEDERAL ELECTION REFORM ACT

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, the major problem with a republican form of government, as James Madison suggested in Federalist Paper No. 10, is in controlling the tendency to faction without restricting the liberty of interest groups. By proposing certain structural political restraints, Madison sought to avoid the problem of interest groups coalescing to implement bad laws and influence Government in a manner which was not in the general interest. Although Madison argued that greater citizen participation would increase the number of competing viewpoints and therefore would best represent the public's interest, he could not have foreseen the monumental growth in the number of interest groups and their political influence, nor the resulting increase in their importance as a source of funding for Federal election campaigns.

The legislation I am introducing today attempts to help reestablish the balance in the political process, in the manner that Madison initially envisioned, by amending the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. These proposals are similar to a measure I introduced 2 years ago, S. 732.

A lingering and widespread public perception exists that the proliferation of political action committees has skewed the political process so that special interests unduly influence Federal elections. The result of this perception is that PACs are vilified, the electoral process is demeaned, and unfounded accusations are cast upon the relationship between PACs and candidates whose campaigns are supported by PACs.

To the extent that a political action committee raises the political awareness of its members, and encourages them to contribute to candidates in a direct manner—as opposed to indirect or independent expenditures—the political action committee system is a good and vital development in our political process. Through PACs, more people than ever before are participating in political activities.

The PAC system becomes troublesome, however, when it overshadows the participation of individuals and political party organizations. An editorial in last week's Washington Post alluded to this imbalance by pointing out that although overall campaign expenditures decreased in 1984 elections, the percentage of PAC contributions in Federal campaigns continued to rise rapidly. Under the current system, individuals generally give money to a PAC's general fund, whose contributions are often controlled by the organization's Federal lobbyists. The level of participation is too frequently nominal and amounts only to the writing of a check or to allowing a payroll deduction. The members have little control over which candidates ultimately receive their contributions.

When encouraging and coordinating member participation in the political process, PACs are at their finest. But by building central warchests to allow lobbyists to assert direct political influence through large campaign contributions, PACs raise questions about the responsiveness of our political system. We must focus on developing the positive role of PACs, and attempt to minimize the negative.

The legislation I propose today assumes not that the political finance system is corrupt or out of control, but that it needs some overdue adjustments. My intent is to encourage a balance among the three sources of campaign funds—individuals, political parties, and PACs—while respecting the first amendment's constitutional guarantee of free speech.

First, my proposal seeks to strengthen the relative ability of individuals to participate in the electoral process. Second, the legislation is designed to increase significantly the role of political parties in financing elections. Third, I am proposing a method for certain candidates to gain control over independent expenditures that are actually indirect campaign contributions. These expenditures often initiate negative campaigns that effectively remove the control of a campaign's agenda from a candidate. Finally, my legislation contains a proposal which would reduce the existing advantage the law provides to wealthy candidates for Congress.

My first proposal for increasing individual participation in campaigns is to encourage PACs to act more frequently as a conduit for contributions to candidates specified by the PACs members.

The law currently allows PACs to act as conduits for contributions that their members have earmarked for specific candidates. Most PACs, however, do not inform their members of this option, preferring to allow the PAC directors to decide where the contributors' funds will best be used. This legislation would simply require PACs, in each written and verbal solicitation, to inform their members of their earmarking option. Rather than dilute the ability of PACs to form a cohesive and influential group, this proposal would allow PACs to increase their capacity to serve as the focal point of members' political activities.

A few PACs already allow for directed contributions. My provision would ensure that PACs fully encourage active citizen participation in the electoral process. Because political action committee members may elect to forego the right of directing their contributions, a large proportion of a PACs funds could probably still be controlled by the directors of each PAC.

The second major change proposed by this legislation would increase significantly—by tripling the current contribution limits—the authority of political parties to contribute to the campaign efforts of their candidates. This would strengthen the party system, a cornerstone of campaign contributions, in order for the system to regain its appropriate influence in the electoral process.

There has been a great deal of discussion about the perceived decline of American political parties. Although many advocates of reform insist that PACs have caused the party system to go awry, the imbalance is rooted in other causes and PACs have filled the void created by the decline of party organizations. These factors include the development of new campaign technologies that allow candidates to bypass the party organization in gaining access to a more diverse electorate. The perception is also caused, in part, by election laws that have emphasized the fundraising role of candidates at the expense of political parties.

Political party contributions are, perhaps, the least biased source of funds available in political fundraising. Nearly every candidate becomes identified with a political party by entering a race for elected office and each party represents a broad spectrum of interests on every issue. Therefore, a party contribution is sure to be the best source of campaign financing—with the least likelihood that the contribution will have an undue effect on a legislator's approach to a particular issue.

The last two concerns I have addressed in my legislation relate to the problems arising from the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley against Valeo and more recently, from the FEC against NCPAC ruling. The Supreme Court struck down certain portions of the original law while leaving other parts intact. The result of this approach by the Court is a regulatory scheme for campaign finance that is riddled with loopholes and inequities. For example, although independent expenditures and the spending by wealthy candidates on their own behalf have burgeoned under the law, other more palatable methods of political participation—such as individual contributions to candidates—have remained subject to strict limits.

I am concerned with the profound and disturbing effect of independent expenditures on the electoral process. Although Federal campaign laws were designed to equalize the political system by ensuring that all candidates operated under the same set of rules, so-called independent expenditures have undermined this concept to destroy the basic concept of fairness in our political campaign system. Unfortunately, independent expenditures have been used predominantly for negative, rather than for positive campaign purposes.

Attempts to address the problem of independent expenditures have collided with the Supreme Court's doctrine outlined in the Buckley and the FFC cases. While I understand that the Justices were protecting fundamental first amendment rights, I do not believe that they intended to encourage the distorted form of political activity that has resulted. The right to free speech and the regulation of unauthorized campaign activities are not mutually exclusive.

My proposal would allow the potential beneficiary of that independent campaign to incorporate the independent PAC into his or her campaign. By unilaterally declaring to the FEC that all expenditures after the primary on his or her behalf or against his or her opponent by an identified independent source are part of the campaign, the independent committee or individual would be subject to the limitations of the present law.

The burden of demonstrating independence from the campaign would then be switched to the independent contributor. If the individual/committee was able to demonstrate adequately to the FEC its independence from the candidate's campaign, it could continue its unrestricted expenditures.

This provision would not rely on specific penalties to enforce the law. Rather, it is based upon the premise that if a candidate refuses to bring those contributions within the ambit of this own campaign, he would be expressing tacit approval for the committee's activities and would be accountable to the news media and the voting public. The proposal also includes a method for implementing the law when there are more than two major candidates in the race.

By acknowledging that many of these independent expenditures and indeed not independent, this proposal would make general elections campaigns more fair, more directed and more positive.

My final proposal for reform targets the current unfair advantage of personal wealth in elections. Although personal wealth has always been an asset in political campaigns, it has become more of an advantage since the establishment of strict limitations on other sources of campaign contributions. The existing law has thus served to enhance the prospects of candidates who use their own resources to augment their campaigns, while opponents must spend valuable campaign time fundraising in order to stay competitive.

The Supreme Court has ruled that the first amendment protects the right of an individual to spend as much of his own money on his own campaign as he desires. My bill does not attempt to limit that right in any respect. Instead, I have attempted to make personal spending less effective and therefore less likely to occur. My proposal states that when a candidate spends more than a certain amount of his own money on his or her own campaign, the limitations on contributions to the opposing candidate would be tripled.

In most House elections, this proviso would allow a candidate to spend up to $50,000 from his or her personal fortune without any impact. After passing that amount, however, an opponent could accept three times the current limit in contributions from individuals, PACs and his or her party. In Senate races, and in House races in a State with one congressional district, the candidate would be able to spend up to $100,000 before the tripling mechanism would be triggered.

Because the existing imbalance in the sources of campaign finance detracts from the political process, the current law is in dire need of reform.

By restoring the symmetry of the campaign finance system, I am convinced my legislation will result in an improved environment for the conduct of elections.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1072

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Reform Act of 1985"

INDEXING INDIVIDUAL AND MULTICANDIDATE COMMITTEE CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

SEC. 2. Section 315(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(c)) is amended in paragraph (1) by striking out all following "established by" through "and subsection (d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (a), (b) and (d)".

INCREASING PARTY CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 315(d)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)(3)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)(i) by striking out "2" and inserting in lieu thereof "6";

(2) in subparagraph (A)(ii) by striking out "$20,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$60,000"; and

(3) in subparagraph (B) by striking out "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000".

(b) Section 315(h) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(h)) is amended by striking out "$17,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$52,500".

CONDITIONS FOR ADJUSTING CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

SEC. 4. Section 315(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9)(A) The limitations provided in paragraphs (1)(A) and (2)(A) of this subsection shall be trebled in amount with respect to persons or multicandidate committees making contributions to any candidate and his authorized committees in an election—

"(i) for the office of Senator in which a candidate for such office makes contributions to his campaign from his personal funds in excess of:

"(I) $50,000 in a State with one or two congressional district; or

"(II) $100,000 in a State with three or more congressional districts; or

"(ii) for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress, the candidate makes contributions to his own campaign from his personal funds in excess of $50,000;

"(B) the increase in contribution limitations described in subparagraph (A) shall not apply to persons or multicandidate committees making contributions to any candidate and his authorized committees where such candidate has made contributions to his campaign from his personal funds in excess of the amounts described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A);

"(C) each candidate for the office of Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress, shall notify the Commission and each other candidate for the same office within five days after he makes a contribution to his own campaign which makes his total contribution to his own campaign from his personal funds in excess of the amounts described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A);

"(D) the reporting requirement described in subparagraph (C) shall also be in effect when debts are incurred, by the candidate or his authorized committees, the repayment of which the candidate has reason to believe will require the candidate to make contributions to his campaign in excess of the amounts described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A);

"(E) the increases in contribution limitations described in subparagraph (A) shall be in effect immediately when any candidate in such election first notifies the Commission, either as part of the reports of his authorized committees as required by sections 304(b)(2)(B) and 304(b)(2)(G) or pursuant to subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, that he had made or has incurred a debt which may require him to make a contribution to his campaign which makes his total contribution to his campaign from his personal funds in excess of the amounts described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A); and

"(F) if a candidate fails to file a timely declaration pursuant to this paragraph, the increase in contribution limitations described in subparagraph (A) shall take effect immediately upon the determination by the Commission that such candidate has so failed to file a timely declaration.".

DIRECTED CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 315(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(10) A multicandidate political committee in receipt of a contribution which includes a written request by the contributor that some portion of that contribution be continued to a specified candidate, or candidates, for Federal office must either—

"(A) act as a conduit for the directed portion of the contribution; or

"(B) return the entire contribution.

"(11) Individuals contributing to a multicandidate political committee on an installment basis, either directly or through such individuals' employer under a payroll deduction plan, may require that up to 75 per centum of the total such individual has contributed since the last general election to that multicandidate political committee be contributed to a specified candidate, or candidates, for Federal office of such individuals' choosing, except that—

"(A) at least forty-five days prior to the election in which the directed contribution is to be made the individual must notify in writing the multicandidate political committee of the following:

"(i) to what candidate, or candidates, for Federal office the contribution is to be made; and

"(ii) in what amount the contribution is to be made;

"(B) the directed contribution for which the multicandidate political committee is a conduit shall be considered a contribution by the individual to the candidate for the purposes of paragraph (1)(A).".

(b) Section 316(b) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441b(b)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(8) Any solicitation for voluntary contributions allowed under this section must be accompanied by a written disclosure of the prospective contributor's right to direct some portion of such contribution to a specified candidate, or candidates, as provided for in paragraphs (10) and (11) of section 315(a).".

ALLOWING GENERAL ELECTION CANDIDATES TO CONTROL THEIR CAMPAIGN

SEC. 6. Section 315(a)(7)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(7)(B)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating clause (ii) as clause (iii); and

(2) by inserting the following new clause after clause (i):

"(ii) independent expenditures made in a general or special election for Congress in support of a clearly identified candidate or in opposition to a clearly identified opponent of that candidate will—

"(I) in an election in which there are no more than two campaigns of candidates and at least one of such candidates has expended more than $40,000 at the time any one such candidate has filed with the Commission, in a manner and form to be determined by the Commission, a declaration that all expenditures in support of such candidate or in opposition to a clearly identified opponent of such candidate have the appearance and effect of being in coordination with his campaign, be considered a contribution made to his campaign; or

"(II) in an election in which there are more than two campaigns of candidates and at least one of such candidates has expended more than $40,000, when at least all but one of such candidates have filed with the Commission, in a manner and form to be determined by the Commission, a declaration that all expenditures in that election in support of or in opposition to a clearly identified candidate would have the appearance of being coordinated with at least one of the campaigns involved, be contributions subject to the limitations expressed in subparagraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) multiplied by the number of such candidates;".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 7. The amendments made by this Act shall be effective with respect to elections for Federal office held more than ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 2—INDEXING INDIVIDUAL AND MULTICANDIDATE COMMITTEE CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

Provides for periodic adjustments in contribution limits to offset the effects of inflation.

SECTION 3—INCREASING PARTY CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

The current 2 cents per voter or $10,000, whichever is greater, is increased to the greater of 6 cents per voter or $30,000 for House races in states with more than one district.

The current 2 cents per voter or $20,000, whichever is greater, is increased to the greater of 6 cents per voter or $60,000 for Senate races and for statewide House races.

For Senate races the current $17,500 limit for additional contributions from the national party is increased to $52,500.

The intent of this section is to increase the impact of the national parties in congressional elections and to reduce campaign reliance on PAC funding.

SECTION 4—CONDITIONS FOR ADJUSTING CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

When a candidate makes contributions to his own campaign exceeding $50,000 in a House race (in a state with more than 2 districts) $100,000 in a Senate race (or House race in a state with 1 or 2 districts) that candidate must notify the FEC, within 5 days, that he has exceeded the limit. His opponent will then immediately have his individual and multicandidate committee contribution limits trebeled. Individuals could now contribute $6,000 per election and PACs could contribute $15,000 per election.

The intent of this section is to discourage wealthy candidates from financing their own campaigns, and to provide the opponent of a wealthy candidate with a means to allow equal access to the electorate. It also inhibits personal financing of campaigns while staying within the limits of Buckley v. Valeo.

SECTION 5—DIRECTED CONTRIBUTIONS

Would require PAC's to provide a written notification of "Earmarking Rights" with any solicitation for voluntary contributions.

Would allow individuals who have contributed to PAC's through a payroll deduction plan to decide, up to 45 days before an election, to retroactively earmark their contributions to a certain candidate.

In the case of payroll deductions, the PAC could keep 25 percent of the amount contributed to cover administrative costs and direct 75 percent to the designated candidate or return the entire amount to the contributor.

Currently, the FECA includes a provision allowing individuals to earmark all or part of a PAC contribution to be directed to a designated candidate. Very few PAC's instruct their contributors of the right to direct contributions.

This section would serve to educate PAC contributors of their right, and allow contributors to retroactivily earmark payroll deduction contributions—this is not allowable under the Act currently.

Note: Directed (earmarked) contributions count only as a contribution from the individual to the designated candidate, not against the PAC's contribution limits.

This reform would result in PACs serving more frequently as conduits for their members contributions. It would increase the role of PACs as organizers, while decreasing their role as block contributors.

SECTION 6—ALLOWING GENERAL ELECTION CANDIDATES TO CONTROL THEIR CAMPAIGNS

Would allow a candidate to unilaterally declare that all expenditures on his behalf, or in opposition to his opponent would be considered contributions to his campaign.

This would have the effect of requiring that any independent expenditure committee would now have the burden of proof to show that they were not in communication with the campaign benefiting from their expenditures.

Presently, candidates may publicly state that they disapprove of negative independent expenditure campaigns against an opponent, but that they can not prevent such expenditures as long as the independent expendors did not communicate with their campaign.

This section would provide a vehicle for a candidate to bring an independent expenditure committee under usual contribution limits, and to prevent disruptive independent campaigns.

Candidates could no longer claim that they are unable to stop smear campaigns against their opponents. By refusing to declare all independent expenditures to be contributions, they would be implying their approval of such expenditures, and be leaving themselves open to what would likely be harsh criticism from the press.

This qualification of independent expenditures should also fall within the constitutional guidelines laid down in Buckley v. Valeo.

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. 1073. A bill to amend the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 for the purpose of improving the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today Senator ROCKEFELLER and I are introducing the Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1985, which would authorize the Secretary of Commerce to increase our Government's efforts to make Japanese technical literature available to U.S. companies and researchers.

In a small but significant way, this legislation will help us adapt to the new, hypercompetitive international economy.

THE TRADE CRISIS

Last year, America had a $37 billion trade deficit with Japan. There were many causes of this deficit. One of the main ones, which has appropriately received a lot of attention lately, was Japan's refusal to open its markets wider to competitive American products.

But some of the other causes are right here at home.

One is our Federal deficit and resulting high interest rates contributing to the high value of the dollar compared to the yen. Another is our collective failure to adapt aggressively to intensifying international competition. It is this second cause that our bill addresses.

After World War II, America dominated the world's economy. We didn't have to worry much about competition from the Japanese or anybody else. But that's changed. Today, the United States must, as the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness recently said, "compete in an increasingly interdependent and competitive world environment." Indeed, about 70 percent of all American products now face international competition.

To succeed in this new environment U.S. business and Government both must adapt.

TRANSLATING TECHNICAL INFORMATION

Our bill addresses one aspect of adaptation: learning from others, or, more specifically, increasing the availability of Japanese technical literature.

One commonly accepted reason for Japan's post-war economic miracle is Japan's ability to acquire and incorporate American technological developments. This has not happened accidentally. All Japanese high school students study English, and many Japanese scientists and engineers can review American journals directly.

In addition, the Japanese Government and Japanese companies have been working diligently to learn from American technology. In fact, since 1957, the Japanese Information Center of Science and Technology has been gathering, abstracting, and translating information from around the world and making it available to Japanese researchers. Many Japanese companies have been doing the same, exchanging the results through informal networks. And the Japanese send thousands of students to American universities each year.

Americans, in contrast, have not paid much attention to much Japanese technical literature. At one time, this may have been justified by the belief that Japanese technicians were primarily imitators, not innovators.

But even if that belief once was justified, it isn't now. Today Japan ranks third in scientific research, just behind the United States and the Soviet Union. Japanese semiconductors, telecommunications equipment, fiberoptics, biotechnology, and robotics technology competes directly with ours. And Japan's "Fifth Generation" project is designed to achieve a profound breakthrough in computer technology.

Clearly, Japan is producing many technological innovations that Americans can learn from. As Japan expert Anthony Polsky said last year:

> This country can no longer afford the arrogance of indifference to scientific and technical developments in other nations, now serious competitors to our products in the area of domestic and international trade.

There's plenty of published material describing Japanese technical developments. As anyone who has visited Japan knows, the Japanese people are prolific writers and voracious readers. In fact, about 10,000 technical journals are published in Japan.

Some American companies and trade associations monitor some of this material. And some Federal agencies, such as the defense agencies and the National Technical Information Service, do the same.

But these efforts are not coordinated and cover only about 20 percent of the available material. We must do more.

THE GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

In many cases, this means simply that U.S. businesses must do more. The U.S. Government should encourage them and perhaps should make it easier for different U.S. businesses to coordinate their information-gathering efforts.

But in some cases, Government must do the work directly. Japanese technical translation is expensive. And a large part of the benefit frequently is an externality that accrues to more companies than the one that performs the technical translation. As Assistant Secretary of Commerce Bruce Merrifield told a House subcommittee last year:

> Foreign technical information is costly to gather and even more costly to screen and interpret in the context of specific needs. Systematic and timely access to relevant information of foreign technical developments is effectively beyond the reach of most U.S. firms.

The Office of Technology Assessment reached the same conclusion, recommending the establishment of a system for collecting, analyzing, and disseminating technical information from other countries, particularly Japan and the Soviet Union. The need begins with translations of technical literature. Information on Japan's technology and science is particularly critical.

THE JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT

The legislation we are introducing today, Mr. President, is designed to improve our modest efforts to make Japanese technical literature more widely available to American businesses.

The legislation amends the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 to direct the Commerce Department's Director of Industrial Technology to increase the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature to U.S. businesses, scientists, and engineers through increased accessibility, monitoring, screening, traslation, abstracting, indexing, dissemination, and marketing. The Director has substantial flexibility about how to achieve these goals, and we intend that he use this flexibility to build upon the best parts of existing programs at NTIS, the National Bureau of Standards, the Foreign Broadcast Information Service, and other agencies.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, enactment of this legislation will be just a small step. But it is an important one. To improve our international trade position, we must, among other things, adapt more quickly to a constantly changing environment. The more we know about developments elsewhere, the more quickly we can adapt.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1073

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3704) is amended by—

(1) redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) inserting immediately after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) FOREIGN TECHNICAL LITERATURE.—In addition to the duties specified in subsection (c), the Secretary, through the Director and on a continuing basis, shall increase the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature to United States businesses, scientists, and engineers through increased accessibility, monitoring, screening, translation, abstracting, indexing, dissemination, and marketing. In the conduct of this activity, the Secretary may make grants and, to the extent provided in advance by appropriations Acts, enter into contracts with private for profit, nonprofit, and educational organizations. In addition, the Secretary may provide funds to other government organizations, coordinate with other government organizations, and utilize (for all or part of this effort) the Directors, staffs, and facilities of the National Bureau of Standards and the National Technical Information Service.".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 14 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3713) is amended by—

(1) redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively; and

(2) inserting immediately after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) In addition to authorization of appropriations under subsections (a) and (b), there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 5(d) not to exceed $500,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988.".

(b) Section 14(d) of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act, as so redesignated by subsection (a) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(d) Such sums as may be appropriated under subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall remain available until expended.".●

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] in introducing this measure, which will remedy a key gap in this country's technological development and competitive position.

The bill earmarks $500,000 for the Office of Productivity, Technology, and Innovation in the Department of Commerce to arrange for the translation and dissemination of Japanese scientific and engineering literature. Access to our professional and technical journals is one reason Japan and other competitors have been able to push ahead with the development of new products and processes. For years, the Japanese have combed our scientific literature, to keep apprised of our discoveries.

But the language barrier hampers equivalent efforts by American researchers to learn from their Japanese counterparts. It is rare to find Americans who are fluent in Japanese. Having majored in Far Eastern studies, I would like to see Americans become more proficient with both the language and culture of countries like Japan. But at present, given the difficulty of learning this language, the translation services we're proposing are really a necessity.

A few months ago, the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness confirmed what analysts have long understood: That the United States excels in inventing—in developing new technology—but somehow, after that, the process breaks down. As a task force of Senate Democrats observed 18 months ago, "we remain in the forefront of most new and emerging technologies, but * * * have seen others leading the way in commercialization." Pioneering research is done in our laboratories; advanced processes like robotics are developing in the United States. But other countries are doing a better job of applying these findings and developing competitive new products. Unless our industries can match these efforts—and utilize research results more effectively, the process of technology transfer will remain essentially a one-way street.

The Japanese no longer simply copy and tinker with American technology; they are first-class researchers and innovators in their own right. With the modest funding proposed in this bill, the Commerce Department could add greatly to our knowledge in a wide range of fields. The potential returns—in new products and jobs—could be substantial.

I urge my colleagues to joint us in sponsoring this legislation, to provide a valuable function that most American laboratories and companies cannot undertake on their own. We will also show that we understand these problems and are beginning to mount a serious effort to strengthen the competitive position of our industries.●

By Mr. MATSUNAGA:

S. 1074. A bill to direct the Attorney General to study the problems of indigent, elderly immigrants who wish to return to their home countries but cannot afford to pay the transportation costs to do so; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMMIGRANT REPATRIATION STUDY ACT

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, we Americans whether we be native born or naturalized citizens, take great pride in the fact that while none of us seek to escape from our shores to foreign lands, millions are constantly seeking entry into our country to share the personal liberty and opportunity for a better life guaranteed by our Federal Constitution and our system of Government. There are, however, many immigrants who came to the United States to work, in high hopes of amassing a fortune, then returning to their native country, but who are now elderly, impoverished, and living alone. Many of these immigrants would like to return to their country of origin, to be reunited with their families and culture but are unable to do so, due to lack of funds to defray transportation costs. It is not known just how many resident aliens fall within this category.

Mr. President, I am therefore introducing legislation today which would direct the Attorney General to determine the number and study the problems of these indigent, elderly immigrants who wish to return to their home countries.

In my State of Hawaii more than 126,000 laborers migrated from the Philippines to Hawaii between 1907 and 1946. Many have already returned to their homeland. Many others have died; nearly all of the survivors are now retired. The youngest of them have reached 55 years of age. Most of these immigrants have spent their working years in Hawaii without the support of family ties.

Many of these lonely, aging Filipinos look forward to returning to their homeland. Their extended families in the Philippines welcome back their aged members and provide them with love and care that are so essential to their mental, physical, and emotional well-being in their late years. The retiree is able to be reunited not only with his extended family, but also with his church and associations in the Philippines, where there is not the language and cultural barriers that exist for immigrant Filipinos in Hawaii.

In 1975, Father Jaime S. Neri, a Catholic priest, almost singlehandedly, boldly undertook to address the needs of such Filipino retirees. With the support of his parishioners and the Hawaii State government, Father Neri was able to arrange for the return to the Philippines of a group of 41 men, ranging in age from 65 to 85, most of them lonely bachelors or widowers. This successful repatriation program is known as "Balik-Bahay," meaning "homecoming" in the Filipino language.

An important aspect of the Balik-Bahay Program is that it not only provides for a better quality of life for the retiree, it also effects considerable savings in American taxpayers' dollars.

As Father Neri has repeatedly stated to the Social Security Administration in his effort to federalize his Balik-Bahay Program, repatriation of many of the retired beneficiaries at Government expense would result in savings to the American taxpayer. Most of the men seeking repatriation are receiving supplemental security income [SSI] benefits while they remain in Hawaii. In 2 years, from 1975 to 1977, the Balik-Bahay Program saved the State and Federal Government a total of $74,000. The savings resulted from the cessation of SSI, food stamp, Medicare, and Medicaid payments and housing subsidies, which would have been provided to these individuals had they remained in Hawaii. In 1979, it was estimated that more than $10,000 a month of public taxpayer costs were being saved by the departure of the 41 men who had already been sent home to the Philippines.

For example, a 74-year-old bachelor was at his request sent back to his home in the Philippines in January 1979. It was costing the Hawaii Department of Social Services $1,084 a month to provide for his care in a nursing home. Now, back with his relatives in the Philippines, and with his U.S. Social Security check of $236 a month—earned legally through long years of labor—he lives comfortably. His monthly Social Security check translates into about 1,650 pesos, which is more than what the local physician earns.

This humanitarian and tax-saving program to help migrants who desire to return home to rejoin their families has been successful in repatriating over 70 elderly immigrants to the Philippines from Hawaii. Over the years the Balik-Bahay Program, now known as "Repatria" has been in operation, its main stumbling block has been the cost of transportation. Many immigrants have been assisted in reestablishing contact with their families in the Philippines and are eager to return home but are unable to pay their plane fare.

Mr. President, my bill would direct the Attorney General, through the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, to conduct a study to determine how many elderly, indigent immigrants in the United States wish to return to their native countries. The study would examine the costs and benefits of a Federal program to finance the transportation costs of returning such immigrants to their native countries and the options for financing such a program. In addition, the advantages and disadvantages would be weighed of requiring the Federal Government to ensure, through certification by an appropriate agency of the home country, that a repatriated immigrant's health and welfare will be protected. Finally, the use of the Balik-Bahay Program as a model for a similar Federal program or the expansion of the program with Federal funding would be explored.

This measure was introduced as S. 2402 in the 98th Congress as a companion bill to H.R. 4394. I urge the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to give this legislation early and favorable consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1074

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Immigrant Repatriation Study Act".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) many immigrants who came to work in the United States years ago are now impoverished and alone; and

(2) many of these immigrants wish to return to their native countries to be reunited with their families and homeland culture but cannot afford to pay the transportation costs to do so.

SEC. 3. (a) The Attorney General, through the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, shall conduct a study of and recommend solutions for the problems of elderly, indigent immigrants in the United States who wish to return to their native countries but cannot afford to do so. In such study the Attorney General shall determine—

(1) the number of immigrants in the United States who are elderly and indigent and who wish to return to their native countries;

(2) the costs and benefits of a Federal program to finance the transportation costs of returning such immigrants to their native countries, including an estimate of the financial consequences to the Federal Government from (A) the termination of benefits to which the repatriated immigrants would no longer be entitled, such as supplemental security income, food stamps, medicaid, medicare, and housing subsidies, and (B) the continuation of benefits to which such immigrants would continue to be entitled, such as social security retirement pay and disability pay;

(3) the options for financing such a program;

(4) the advantages and disadvantages of requiring the Federal Government to ensure, through certification by an appropriate agency of the home country, that a repatriated immigrant's health and welfare will be protected upon return to his or her home country; and

(5) whether and to what extent the Balik-Bahay repatriation program in the State of Hawaii should be used as a model for a similar Federal program or should be expanded in Hawaii with Federal funding.

(b) Within twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall report to Congress the results of the study under this section, including the Attorney General's findings and recommendations.

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 1075. A bill to authorize and direct the General Accounting Office to audit the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Advisory Council, the Federal Open Market Committee, and Federal Reserve banks and their branches; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

REQUIRING THE GAO TO AUDIT THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today legislation to require the General Accounting Office to perform a complete audit of the Federal Reserve System and Federal Reserve banks.

This legislation would require the General Accounting Office to make an audit each fiscal year of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Advisory Council, the Federal Open Market Committee, and all Federal Reserve banks and their branches. Such an audit would include the transactions of the system's open market account conducted through recognized dealers. This measure also provides that the General Accounting Office will have access to all books and records of the Federal Reserve.

Currently, an independent CPA audits the books of the Federal Reserve System annually. This audit is conducted by firms such as Arthur Anderson and Peat Marwick. Such audits, however, do not examine the transactions made by the FOMC or the other branches of the Fed. While audits of expenses are important, a more thorough analysis of the activities of the Federal Reserve System is needed.

Title 31, Section 714, United States Code Annotated contains the laws governing audits of Government agencies by the GAO. In 1978, audits of the Federal Reserve, the FDIC, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency were exempted from the purview of GAO audits. Section 714(b) states that "Audits of the Federal Reserve Board and Federal reserve banks may not include:

"First, transactions for or with a foreign central bank, government or a foreign country, or nonprivate international financial organization;

"Second, deliberations, decisions, or actions on monetary policy matters, including discount window operations, reserves of member banks, securities credit, interest on deposits, and open market operations;

"Third, transactions made under the direction of the Federal Open Market Committee; or

"Fourth, a part of a discussion or communication among or between members of the Board of Governors and officers and employees of the Federal Reserve System related to clauses (1)–(3) of this subsection."

One of the chief reasons for prohibiting an audit of the actitivies of the Fed is that its independence must be maintained.

The number and importance of the decisions made by the members of the Federal Reserve System and its committees, however, are too important to the economy of the United States to be unaccountable to the people and the Congress.

Decisions made by the Federal Reserve can increase or lower inflation and cause interest rates to rise or fall; such decisions affect farmers, the employment opportunities of thousands of Americans, and the production plans of businesses across the country. Decisions made by the Fed increase prices. Such decisions cannot be audited by the GAO.

Other decisions which must be looked at closely in light of our international economy are the relationships between the Federal Reserve, foreign countries, and international banks. For example, the Monetary Control Act, enacted in 1980, allows the Federal Reserve to purchase paper obligations of foreign governments and use them as collateral for Federal Reserve notes. We must be able to keep tabs on the activities of our central bank as the decisions it makes effects millions upon millions of people.

The American people and the Congress should know what decisions are being made by the Federal Reserve, and the effect of these decisions on their lives and livelihoods. We must carefully look at the powers we have granted to the Fed over the years, and see if Congress should be more knowledgeable of the Fed's actions.

Currently the General Accounting Office has the authority to look at the Fed's financial records and accounting made to the Treasury Department. They are not allowed to examine the decisions and actions of the Federal Open Market Committee, the Federal Advisory Council, the Federal Reserve banks and their branches or the Federal Reserve Board. It is time for the activities of these bodies to be made known to the Congress. I urge my colleagues to closely look at these issues, and support this bill to audit the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1075

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

(a) The Comptroller General of the United States shall make, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, an audit for each fiscal year of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Advisory Council, the Federal Open Market Committee, and all Federal Reserve banks and their branches, including transactions of the system open market account conducted through recognized dealers.

(b) In making the audit required by subsection (a), representatives of the General Accounting Office shall have access to books, accounts, records, files, and all other papers, things, and property belonging to or in use by the entities being audited, including reports of examinations of member banks, from whatever source. They shall be afforded full facilities for verifying transactions with balances or securities held by depositories, fiscal agents, and custodians of such entities.

(c) The Comptoller General shall, within six months after the end of each fiscal year, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, make a report to the Congress on the results of the audit required by subsection (a), and he shall make any special or preliminary reports he deems desirable for the information of the Congress. A copy of each report made under this subsection shall be sent to the President of the United States, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Reserve banks. In addition to other matters, the report shall include such comments and recommendations as the Comptroller General may deem advisable, including recommendations for attaining a more economical and efficient administration of the entities audited, and the report shall specifically show any program, financial transaction, or undertaking observed in the course of the audit which in the opinion of the Comptroller General has been carried on without authority of law.

(d) The Comptroller General is authorized to employ such personnel and to obtain such temporary and intermittent services as may be necessary to carry out the audits required by subsection (a), without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and such individuals may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.●

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 1077. A bill to amend the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2051 et seq.) to provide authorization of appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY COMMISSION AUTHORIZATION ACT

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Consumer Product Safety Commission Authorization Act of 1985. This bill reauthorizes the Consumer Product Safety Commission for 2 years and makes other minor changes to the Consumer Product Safety Act.

The last Consumer Product Safety Commission authorization expired at the end of the 1983 fiscal year. During the last session, the Senate passed a new reauthorization bill, S. 861, but it was later stalled as a result of controversy over the legislative veto. The bill I am introducing today is identical to S. 861, as passed by the Senate, except that this new bill does not contain a legislative veto provision.

In keeping with efforts to reduce the budget deficit, my bill authorizes the Consumer Product Safety Commission at $35 million for each of the next 2 years—$1 million less than current authorization for the Commission. In addition to the authorization, the bill includes two provisions which will improve Commission procedures. The first change will allow the Commission to disclose product hazard information to Commission contractors without first requiring Commission verification of the accuracy of that information. The second change relaxes the conflict-of-interest criteria for members of the Commission's chronic hazard advisory panels. Neither of these changes was controversial when the Senate approved the last Consumer Product Safety Commission authorization bill in 1983.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD, at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1077

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Consumer Product Safety Commission Authorization Act of 1985".

DISCLOSURE TO CONTRACTORS

SEC. 2. Section 6(a)(8) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2055(a)(8) is amended by striking "or employees" and inserting in lieu thereof ", employees or representatives of the Commission (including contractors)".

CHRONIC HAZARD ADVISORY PANEL

SEC. 3. Section 28(b)(1) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2077(b)(1)) is amended by inserting "that may be the subject of the Panel's investigation" immediately after "product".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 4. Section 32(a) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2081(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (8);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following: "(10) $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986; and

(11) $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987.".

CONSUMER PRODUCT SAFETY COMMISSION AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1985—SECTION-BY-SECTION

SECTION 1—SHORT TITLE

This section contains the short title of the legislation, the "Consumer Product Safety Commission Authorization Act of 1985."

SECTION 2—DISCLOSURE TO CONTRACTORS

Section 2 makes clear that the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) has the authority to disclose trade secret and confidential information to contractors of the Commission. The Commission may provide full information to contractors as needed in the contractors' work for the Commission. The contractors would be bound by the same restrictions regarding the public disclosure of information which currently govern the Commission itself.

SECTION 3—CHRONIC HAZARD ADVISORY PANEL

Section 3 relaxes the conflict-of-interest restrictions regarding members of the CPSC's chronic hazard advisory panels. As currently written, section 28 of the Consumer Product Safety Act limits membership on chronic hazard advisory panels to persons who receive no compensation from or have no substantial interest in any manufacturer, distributor, or retailer of any consumer product. Section 3 of the bill would limit this restriction to firms dealing in any product that may be the subject of the panel's investigation.

SECTION 4—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Section 4 authorizes appropriations of up to $35 million for the CPSC for FY 1986 and FY 1987. This authorization level is $1 million less than the FY 1985 CPSC appropriation.●

By Mr. KASTEN (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. PACKWOOD, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 1078. A bill to amend the Federal Trade Commission Act to provide authorization of appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce the Federal Trade Commission Act amendments of 1985. Senators DANFORTH, PACKWOOD, and GORTON join me in this effort to reauthorize the Federal Trade Commission and to make important changes in the Agency's authority and procedures.

The FTC has an important mission—to protect consumers from unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices. Unfortunately, the last FTC authorization enacted into law was the FTC Improvements Act of 1980, which expired at the end of fiscal 1982. Since then, the FTC has been without a formal authorization, although the Commerce Committee has held numerous hearings and reported two authorization bills to the full Senate.

The last FTC authorization bill reported by the Commerce Committee was S. 1714. This bill was adopted unanimously by the committee in the 98th Congress. However, floor action on this important measure was blocked because of impasses on two issues: The question of the legislative veto and the definition of FTC authority over the professions.

S. 1714 contained no legislative veto provision, but it did contain compromise language limiting the authority of the FTC to preempt State law in order to regulate the activities of professionals. S. 1714 also contained important compromises in two other areas—the FTC's authority over agricultural cooperatives and its regulation of "unfair" advertising.

In addition, this bill contained a number of other important reforms in FTC authority and procedures. These reforms in S. 1714 included a statutory definition of "unfair acts or practices," the requirement of a showing that challenged conduct is prevalent in an industry as a prerequisite for FTC rulemaking, repeal of the Commission's authority to compensate public participants in rulemaking, and codification of the so-called Braswell standard of review for knowing violation of FTC orders.

The bill we are introducing today provides new funding authority for the Agency for 3 years, and embodies the substantive provisions and reforms that were adopted by the Commerce Committee in S. 1714. In addition, this bill contains an authorization for a special appropriation of $3,811,000 for a one-time building consolidation of the headquarters offices of the FTC in Washington, DC.

This bill contains all the substantive provisions of S. 1714—except for the compromise language on the professions. S. 1714 contained compromise language which was supported by the administration and a number of professional groups. This language prohibited the FTC from using its consumer protection authority to invalidate State laws prescribing training, education, or experience requirements for licensure, or the permissible tasks or duties that professionals may perform based on specialized training or education.

Objections to this compromise language were an obstacle to floor action on S. 1714. However, at the recent consumer subcommittee hearing on the FTC authorization, the continued need for this provision was questioned. While there were different views presented as to the meaning of the compromise language and its impact on FTC authority, the view was expressed that this provision is no longer necessary in light of recent Supreme Court decisions clarifying the scope of the "State Action" doctrine, and in light of the sensitivity of the FTC to the requirements of professional self-regulation and State concerns in this area.

As a consequence, the compromise language has been removed from the bill. It is our hope that we now can move ahead expeditiously to enact this reauthorization of the FTC.

Mr. President, this authorization is essential to reaffirm congressional support for the Agency and to restore order to the legislative process. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, and I request that the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1078

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Trade Commission Act Amendments of 1985".

UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(n) The Commission shall not have any authority to find a method of competition to be an unfair method of competition under subsection (a)(1) if, in any action under the Sherman Act, such method of competition would be held to constitute state action.".

AGRICULTURAL COOPERATIVES

SEC. 3. The Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.) is amended by redesignating section 24 and section 25 as section 26 and section 27, respectively, and by inserting after section 23 the following new section:

"SEC. 24. (a) For purposes of this section, the term 'Capper-Volstead Act' means the Act entitled 'An Act to authorize association of producers of agricutural products', approved February 18, 1922 (7 U.S.C. 291 et seq.).

"(b) The Commission shall not have any authority to conduct any study, investigation, or prosecution of any agricultural cooperative for any conduct which, because of the provisions of the Capper-Volstead Act, is not a violation of any of the antitrust Acts or this Act.

"(c)(1) Before issuing a complaint under section 5 against any agricultural cooperative on the basis that such cooperative has violated any of the antitrust Acts or has used an unfair method of competition in or affecting commerce, the Commission shall—

"(A) provide the Secretary of Agriculture with a copy of the proposed complaint not less than 15 days before the complaint is issued; and

"(B) consult with the Secretary of Agriculture regarding the possible applicability of the Capper-Volstead Act to the conduct of the cooperative.

"(2) The Commission shall not issue any such complaint unless—

"(A) it has considered any comments regarding such complaint which have been submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture under this subsection; and

"(B) it has reason to believe that the Capper-Volstead Act does not provide an exemption for the conduct which is the basis of such complaint.

"(3) If the Commission makes a modification to any such complaint after it has provided the Secretary of Agriculture with a copy of the complaint pursuant to (1)(A) of this subsection, the Commission shall not, with respect to such modification, be required to comply with the provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection unless such modification substantially expands the original basis for the issuance of the complaint.

"(4) The Secretary of Agriculture shall designate those officials and employees of the Department of Agriculture who may have access to documents or information received from the Commission under this subsection. Officials and employees of the Department of Agriculture shall be subject to the same requirements and penalties regarding confidentiality of such documents and information and disclosure of the existence of an investigation or consideration of issuance of a complaint as apply to officials and employees of the Commission.

"(5) Unless specifically authorized in writing by the Commission (or by an official or employee of the Commission designated by the Commission), no official or employee of the Department of Agriculture may request information relating to such complaint from any proposed respondent or any third party before the issuance of such complaint.

"(6) After any such complaint is issued, the Secretary of Agriculture may file with the Commission a written statement regarding the applicability of the Capper-Volstead Act to the action or method which is the basis of such complaint. The Commission shall include such statement in record of the proceeding regarding such complaint.

"(7) No decision of the Commission to consult with the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the provisions of this subsection shall be construed to imply that the Commission has made a determination that it has reason to believe that any agricultural cooperative has violated or is violating any of the antitrust Acts as has used an unfair method of competition in or affecting commerce.

"(8) The provisions of this subsection shall not create any new basis for direct or collateral challenge to any complaint issued by the Commission.

"(d) The Commission shall not have any authority to conduct any study or investigation of any agricultural marketing orders.".

COMPENSATION IN PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 18(h) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(h)) is repealed, and subsections (i), (j) and (k) of section 18 are redesignated as subsections (h), (i), and (j), respectively.

(b) Section 18(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(a)(1)) is amended by striking "subsection (i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (h)".

KNOWING VIOLATIONS OF ORDERS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 5(m)(1)(B) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(m)(1)(B)) is amended by inserting ", other than a consent order," immediately after "order" the first time it appears therein.

(b) Section 5(m)(2) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(m)(2)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Upon request of any party to such an action against such defendant, the court shall also review the determination of law made by the Commission in the proceeding under subsection (b) that the act or practice which was the subject of such proceeding constituted an unfair or deceptive act or practice in violation of subsection (a).".

PREVALENCE OF UNLAWFUL ACTS OR PRACTICES

SEC. 6. Section 18(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(3) The Commission shall issue a notice of proposed rulemaking pursuant to paragraph (1)(A) only where it has reason to believe that the unfair or deceptive acts of practices which are the subject of the proposed rulemaking are prevalent. The Commission shall make a determination that unfair or deceptive acts or practices are prevalent under this paragraph only if it has issued cease and desist orders regarding such acts or practices, or any other information available to the Commission indicates a pattern of unfair or deceptive acts or practices.".

EFFECTIVE DATE OF ORDERS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 5(g)(2) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(g)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Upon the 60th day after such order is served, if a petition for review has been duly filed, except that any such order may be stayed, in whole or in part and subject to such conditions as may be appropriate, by—

"(A) the Commission;

"(B) an appropriate court of appeals of the United States, if (i) a petition for review of such order is pending in such court, and (ii) an application for such a stay was previously submitted to the Commission and the Commission, within the 30-day period beginning on the date the application was received by the Commission, either denied the application or did not grant or deny the application; or

"(C) the Supreme Court, if an applicable petition for certiorari is pending; or".

(b) Section 5(g)(3) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(g)(3)) is amended to read as follows;

"(3) For purposes of section 19(a)(2) and section 5(m)(1)(B), if a petition for review of the order of the Commission has been filed—

"(A) upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission has been affirmed or the petition for review has been dismissed by the court of appeals and no petition for certiorari has been duly filed;

"(B) upon the denial of a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission has been affirmed or the petition for review has been dismissed by the court of appeals; or

"(C) upon the expiration of 30 days from the date of issuance of a mandate of the Supreme Court directing that the order of the Commission be affirmed or the petition for review be dismissed; or".

(c) Section 5(g)(4) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(g)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) In the case of an order requiring a person, partnership, or corporation to divest itself of stock, other share capital, or assets, if a petition for review of such order of the Commission has been filed—

"(A) upon the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission has been affirmed or the petition for review has been dismissed by the court of appeals and no petition for certiorari has been duly filed;

"(B) upon the denial of a petition for certiorari, if the order of the Commission has been affirmed or the petition for review has been dismissed by the court of appeals; or

"(C) upon the expiration of 30 days from the date of issuance of a mandate of the Supreme Court directing that the order of the Commission be affirmed or the petition for review be dismissed.".

CIVIL INVESTIGATIVE DEMANDS

SEC. 8. (a) Section 20(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57-1(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by striking "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (within the meaning of section 5(a)(1))" and inserting in lieu thereof "act or practice or method of competition declared unlawful by a law administered by the Commission";

(2) in paragraph (3), by striking "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (within the meaning of section 5(a)(1))" and inserting in lieu thereof "acts or practices or methods of competition declared unlawful by a law administered by the Commission"; and

(c) Section 20(c)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57b-1(c)) is amended by striking "unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce (within the meaning of section 5(a)(1))" and inserting in lieu thereof "any act or practice or method of competition declared unlawful by a law administered by the Commission".

DEFINITION OF UNFAIR ACTS OR PRACTICES

SEC. 9. Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45), as amended by section 2 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(o) The Commission shall have no authority under this section or section 18 to declare unlawful an act or practice on the grounds that such act or practice is unfair unless the act or practice causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers which is not reasonably avoidable by consumers themselves and not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition.".

TRADEMARKS

SEC. 10. The Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 24, as added by section 3 of this Act, the following new section:

"Sec. 25. The Commission shall not have any authority to take any action under section 14 of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the registration and protection of trademarks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes' (15 U.S.C. 1064), commonly referred to as the Lanham Act, with respect to the cancellation of the registration of any mark on the ground that such mark has become the common descriptive name of an article or substance.".

CREDIT UNIONS

SEC. 11. (a) Sections 5(a)(2), 6(a) and 6(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45(a)(2), 46(a) and 46(b)) are amended by inserting immediately after "section 18(f)(3)," the following: "Federal credit unions described in section 18(f)(4),".

(b) The second proviso in section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 46) is amended—

(1) by inserting immediately after "section 18(f)(3)," the following: "Federal credit unions described in section 18(f)(4),"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after "in business as a savings and loan institution" the following: ", in business as a Federal credit union,".

(c)(1) The second sentence of section 18(f)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(f)(1)) is amended by inserting immediately after "paragraph (3))" the following: "and the National Credit Union Administration Board (with respect to Federal credit unions described in paragraph (4))".

(2) The last sentence of section 18(f)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(f)(1)) is amended—

(A) by striking "either such" and inserting in lieu thereof "any such";

(B) by inserting "or Federal credit unions described in paragraph (4)," immediately after "paragraph (3)," each place it appears therein; and

(C) by inserting immediately after "with respect to banks" the following: ", savings and loan institutions or Federal credit unions".

(3) Section 18(f) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(f)) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7), respectively, and by inserting immediately after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) Compliance with regulations prescribed under this subsection shall be enforced with respect to Federal credit unions under sections 120 and 206 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1766 and 1786).".

COMMERCIAL ADVERTISING

SEC. 12. Section 18(h) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(h)), as so redesignated in section 4(a) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Commission shall have no authority under this section to initiate any new rulemaking proceeding which is intended to or may result in the promulgation of any rule by the Commission which prohibits or otherwise regulates any commercial advertising on the basis of a determination by the Commission that such commercial advertising constitutes an unfair act or practice in or affecting commerce.".

REPORT

SEC. 13. (a) The Federal Trade Commission shall submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives the information specified in subsection (b) of this section every 6 months during each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988. A report containing such information shall be submitted when the Commission submits its annual report to the Congress during each of such fiscal years, and such report may be included in the annual report. A separate report containing such information shall be submitted 6 months after the date of submission of any such annual report.

Each such report shall contain such information for the period since the last submission under this section.

(b) Each such report shall list and describe, with respect to instances in which resale price maintenance has been suspected or alleged—

(1) each complaint made, orally or in writing, to the offices of the Commission;

(2) each preliminary investigation opened or closed at the Commission;

(3) each formal investigation opened or closed at the Commission;

(4) each recommendation for the issuance of a complaint forwarded by the staff to the Commission;

(5) each complaint issued by the Commission pursuant to section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45);

(6) each opinion and order entered by the Commission;

(7) each consent agreement accepted provisionally or finally by the Commission;

(8) each request for modification of an outstanding Commission order filed with the Commission;

(9) each recommendation by staff pertaining to a request for modification of an outstanding Commission order; and

(10) each disposition by the Commission of a request for modification of an outstanding Commission order.

Such report shall include the sum total of matters in each category specified in paragraphs (1) through (10) of this subsection, and copies of all such consent agreements and complaints executed by the Commission. Where a matter has been closed or terminated, the report shall include a statement of the reasons for that disposition. The description required under this subsection shall be as complete as possible but shall not reveal the identity of persons or companies complained about or those subject to investigation that have not otherwise been made public.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 14. Section 26 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as so redesignated by section 3 of this Act, is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after "1981,"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "; not to exceed $65,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986; not to exceed $66,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987; and not to exceed $67,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988, and such additional sums for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1987 and September 30, 1988, as may be necessary for increases in salary, pay, and other employee benefits as authorized by law".

BUILDING CONSOLIDATION

SEC. 15. Section 26 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as so redesignated by section 3 of this Act and as amended by section 14 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In addition, there is authorized to be appropriated during the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988, a total amount not to exceed $3,811,000, to carry out the consolidation into not more than three buildings of the Headquarters Offices of the Commission in Washington, DC.".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 16. (a) Except as provided in subsections (b), (c) and (d) of this section, the provisions of this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The amendments made by sections 2, 7 and 9 of this Act shall apply only with respect to cease and desist orders issued under section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45), or to rules promulgated under section 18 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a), after the date of enactment of this Act. These amendments shall not be construed to affect in any manner a cease and desist order which was issued, or a rule which was promulgated, before the date of enactment of this Act. These amendments shall not be construed to affect in any manner a cease and desist order issued after the date of enactment of this Act, if such other was issued pursuant to remand from a court of appeals or the Supreme Court of an order issued by the Commission before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) The provisions of section 24(c) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as added by section 3 of this Act, shall apply only to complaints issued by the Federal Trade Commission under section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C 45) on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) The amendments made by sections 6 and 12 of this Act shall apply only to rulemaking proceedings initiated after the date of enactment of this Act. These amendments shall not be construed to affect in any manner a rulemaking proceeding which was initiated before the date of enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. PACKWOOD:

S. 1080. A bill to amend the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 to authorize additional appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

RAILROAD AUTHORIZATION

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce a bill that would authorize appropriations for fiscal 1986 and 1987 for railroad safety and the Railroad Accounting Principles Board.

For railroad safety, the bill authorizes appropriations to support the railroad safety efforts of both the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA] and those 32 States that participate in what is known as the State Participation Program. This is a program pursuant to which the States help enforce the Federal safety laws, and, in turn, the FRA pays 50 percent of the States' costs.

For the Railroad Accounting Principles Board, the bill authorizes appropriations to support the Board's efforts to develop accounting principles to govern how railroads cost out rail movements. These principles will help shippers and others better understand railroads' costs and, in turn, whether particular rates are reasonable. Such information is necessary for proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1080

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

TITLE I—RAILROAD SAFETY

Enforcement of Subpenas and Orders

SEC. 101. Section 208(a) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 437(a)) is amended by inserting the following immediately after the first sentence: "In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena, order (other than an order directing compliance with this Act), or directive of the Secretary issued under the first sentence of this subsection by any individual, partnership, or corporation that resides, is found, or conducts business within the jurisdiction of any district court of the United States, such district court shall have jurisdiction, upon petition by the Attorney General, to issue to such individual, partnership, or corporation an order requiring immediate compliance with any such subpena, order, or directive. Failure to obey such court order may be punished by the court as a contempt of court.".

SEC. 102. Section 214 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 444) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)(2), by striking "and", and by inserting immediately before the period the following: ", not to exceed $3,200,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $3,328,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987'"

(2) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(3) by inserting immediately after subsection (c) the following:

"(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this Act, except section 206(d) of this title and except for conducting safety research and development activities under this Act, not to exceed $27,975,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $29,094,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987.".

TITLE II—RAILROAD ACCOUNTING PRINCIPLES BOARD

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 201. Section 11168 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "and"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period the following: ", not to exceed $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $750,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987".●

S.J. Res. 131. Joint resolution to designate the week of June 2, 1985, through June 8, 1985, as "Future Problem Solving Program Week;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FUTURE PROBLEM SOLVING PROGRAM WEEK

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce a Senate joint resolution designating the week of June 2, 1985, through June 8, 1985, as "Future Problem Solving Program Week." Future Problem Solvers is an educational program which has created and organized chapters in elementary and secondary schools in every State of the Union. There are currently over 100,000 students and 8,000 school districts involved in Future Problem Solvers across the country, and even a few foreign countries.

The Future Problem Solving Program seeks to educate students in the area of solving futuristic problems which they may encounter. The program is based on a six-step problem solving process which challenges the students in mind development and reasoning. It helps its participants improve their communication skills, their teamwork skills, and their research techniques. By using their problem solving skills, students are able to improve their ability to think critically, analytically, and creatively.

This joint resolution would commemorate the week of June 2 through June 8, during which students from all across America will gather in Cedar Rapids, IA, for the National Future Problem Solvers Bowl. We in Congress should take this important opportunity to recognize the impressive work of this program and its participants. Future Problem Solvers is helping our young people shape and build the foundation of our future, and this resolution merits the support of my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 131

Whereas we are concerned about our nation's youth and their interest in the future problems of our country and finding creative approaches to solve those problems; and

Whereas the Future Problem Solving Program, an educational program which combines problems of the future with a multiple step creative problem solving process, has been created and organized in all 50 states of the Union; and

Whereas the program which began as a local program in a Georgia high school, now involves over 100,000 elementary and secondary school students nationwide, over 8,000 school districts, and several foreign countries; and

Whereas the Future Problem Solving Program, in addition to teaching problem solving skills, assists students in developing skills in the areas of creative thinking, critical and analytical thinking, communication, research, future studies, and group interrelations; and

Whereas students representing all regions of the United States of America, selected on the basis of the outstanding performance in earlier problem solving competitions, will be assembling to participate in the Future Problem Solving Bowl on June 2, 1985 through June 5, 1985: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of June 2, 1985, through June 8, 1985, is designated as "the Future Problem Solving Program Week," and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all Government agencies and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.●

By Mr. DANFORTH:

S.J. Res. 132. Joint resolution designating October 1985, as "National Head Injury Awareness Month;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL HEAD INJURY AWARENESS MONTH

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution to designate October 1985 as "National Head Injury Awareness Month."

Head injury is a very serious health problem in our Nation. Over 100,000 Americans die from head injuries each year, mostly in motor vehicle or sports accidents. In addition, 450,000 to 700,000 people sustain head injuries each year serious enough to require hospitalization. Fifty thousand of these individuals suffer permanent brain damage that prevents them from returning to schools, jobs, and normal lifestyles.

Two-thirds of these seriously disabled individuals are young people, under the age of 30. They are left with mental and physical impairments, speech problems, and behavioral disorders. Often these disabilities are not apparent to the casual observer, but their effects are still debilitating. In many cases, the victims of serious head injury experience frequent fatigue, forgetfulness, irritability, and depression, making it extremely difficult or impossible for them to maintain a job or attend school.

The families of head injury victims also suffer. They must bear devastating emotional and financial burdens. Many head injury victims are comatose for extended periods of time and therefore require professional services and treatment, but because of a lack of suitable treatment facilities, family members themselves often must assume the burden of caring for victims.

A great many of these families have experienced great frustration and a sense of helplessness in their search for appropriate facilities and treatment for head injury victims. As a result, they have joined together with a number of health care professionals to form the National Head Injury Foundation. This organization, together with its numerous State chapters, has been working tirelessly to educate the public about the problems of head injury and the needs of disabled head injury victims. The National Head Injury Foundation has committed itself to bring the problems of head injury to national attention and to provide the families of head injury victims with the necessary facilities and resources.

I am glad to assist the Foundation in its efforts, and I urge my colleagues to join me by designating October 1985 as "National Head Injury Awareness Month."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 132

Whereas an estimated four hundred and fifty thousand to seven hundred thousand people require hospitalization each year for head injuries;

Whereas an estimated one hundred thousand of these victims die as a result of head injuries;

Whereas approximately fifty thousand head injury victims, more than two-thirds of whom are under the age of thirty, suffer permanent brain damage that prevents them from returning to schools, jobs, or normal lifestyles;

Whereas the effects of head injuries are emotionally and financially devastating to families;

Whereas there is a serious lack of facilities designed to care for the special needs of the head injured; and

Whereas long-term medical research on brain-injured patients is incomplete: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, That October 1985 is designated "National Head Injury Awareness Month" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe that month with appropriate programs and activities.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

At the request of Mrs. KASSEBAUM, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ZORINSKY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 32, a bill to provide for a 1-year, across-the-board freeze on Federal spending.

S. 104

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] was added as a cosponsor of S. 104, a bill to amend chapter 44, title 18, United States Code, to regulate the manufacture and importation of armor piercing bullets.

S. 232

At the request of Mr. PRYOR, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ZORINSKY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 232, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to add a new subsection dealing with exchanges and rentals of names from donor lists and membership lists.

S. 274

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the names of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] were added as cosponsors of S. 274, a bill to provide for the national security by allowing access to certain Federal criminal history records.

S. 361

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] was added as a cosponsor of S. 361, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to make permanent the deduction for charitable contributions by nonitemizers.

S. 425

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the name of the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] was added as a cosponsor of S. 425 a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish a National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases.

S. 755

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the name of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 755 a bill to provide that transportation provided by an airline to parents of its employees shall be tax free.

S. 768

At the request of Mr. PRESSLER, the name of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] was added as a cosponsor of S. 768, a bill to authorize the President of the United States to award a Congressional Gold Medal to Jan C. Scruggs in recognition of his work on behalf of Vietnam veterans, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bronze duplicates of such medal.

S. 925

At the request of Mr. HUMPHREY, the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] were added as cosponsors of S. 925, a bill to deny most-favored-nation trading status to Afghanistan.

S. 973

At the request of Mr. BENTSEN, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 973, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for an alternative corporate minimum tax in lieu of the present additional corporate minimum tax, to provide a method of reducing corporate tax rates by the amount of such tax, and for other purposes.

S. 982

At the request of Mr. BAUCUS, the names of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] were added as cosponsors of S. 982, a bill to amend the Trade Act of 1974 regarding international trade in softwood lumber, and for other purposes.

S. 983

At the request of Mr. MCCLURE, the names of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] were added as cosponsors of S. 983, a bill to provide for limited extension of alternative means of providing assistance under the School Lunch Program and to provide for national commodity processing programs.

S. 1018

At the request of Mr. GORTON, the names of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS] were added as cosponsors of S. 1018, a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to clarify the meaning of the term "guard" for the purpose of permitting certain labor organizations to be certified by the National Labor Relations Board as representatives of employees other than plant guards.

S. 1047

At the request of Mr. CHILES, the names of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], were added as cosponsors of S. 1047, a bill to reform the laws relating to former Presidents.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 33

At the request of Mr. MATTINGLY, the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 33, a joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate May 12, 1985 to June 16, 1985, as "Family Reunion Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 43

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 43, a joint resolution to authorize the Armored Force Monument Committee, the U.S. Armor Association, the World Wars Tank Corps Association, the Veterans of the Battle of the Bulge, the 11th Armored Calvary Regiment Association, the Tank Destroyer Association, the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 16th Armored Division Associations, and the Council of Armored Division Associations, jointly to erect a memorial to the "American Armored Force" on U.S. Government property in Arlington, VA, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 57

At the request of Mr. CHILES, the names of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 57, a joint resolution to designate the week of October 20, 1985, through October 26, 1985, as "Lupus Awareness Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 59

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the name of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 59, a joint resolution to designate "National Science Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 64

At the request of Mr. RIEGLE, the names of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 64, a joint resolution to designate the week beginning May 5, 1985, as "National Correctional Officers Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 88

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the names of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 88, a joint resolution to designate the week beginning September 8, 1985, as "National Osteopathic Medicine Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 98

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 98, a joint resolution condemning the passage of Resolution 3379, in the United Nations General Assembly on November 10, 1975, and urging the U.S. Ambassador and U.S. delegation to take appropriate actions necessary to erase this shameful resolution from the record of the United Nations.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 102

At the request of Mr. ZORINSKY, the name of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 102, a joint resolution to establish a National Commission on Illiteracy.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 104

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the name of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 104, a joint resolution to proclaim October 23, 1985, as "A time of remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 117

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the name of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 117, a joint resolution designating the week beginning September 22, 1985, as "National Adult Day Care Center Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 118

At the request of Mrs. HAWKINS, the name of the Senator from Louisiana

[Mr. JOHNSTON] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 118, a joint resolution to designate May 25, 1985 as "Missing Children Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 128

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the name of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 128, a joint resolution to designate May 7, 1985 as "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 4

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the name of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 4, a concurrent resolution calling on the President to appoint a special envoy for northern Ireland.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 36

At the request of Mr. PROXMIRE, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 36, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the establishment of a joint commission between the United States and the Soviet Union to study the concept of "nuclear winter" and its impact for the national security of both nations.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 41

At the request of Mr. BAUCUS, the name of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 41, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that corporate income tax rates should remain graduated.

SENATE RESOLUTION 130

At the request of Mr. WALLOP, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 130, a resolution relative to the Sport Fish Restoration Trust Fund.

SENATE RESOLUTION 144

At the request of Mr. KASTEN, the names of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], and the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 144, a resolution to give special recognition to the achievements of John James Audubon.

SENATE RESOLUTION 148

At the request of Mr. ZORINSKY, the names of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 148, a resolution commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration.

SENATE RESOLUTION 154

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 154, a resolution to pay tribute to the American veterans of World War II on the 40th anniversary of V-E Day.

SENATE RESOLUTION 155

At the request of Mr. CHILES, the names of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 155, a resolution to condemn the actions of the Ethiopian Government.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

FIRST CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET

NICKLES (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 54

Mr. NICKLES (for himself, Mr. ARMSTRONG, and Mr. ABDNOR) proposed an amendment to amendment No. 43 proposed by Mr. DOLE (and Mr. DOMENICI) to the motion to recommit with instructions the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 and revising the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal year 1985; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the amendment, insert the following:

It is the sense of the Congress that overall Federal outlays should be reduced and it is assumed that legislation should be enacted to conform the overtime requirements under the Walsh-Healey Act and the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act with the Fair Labor Standards Act and it is further assured that the resulting outlay reductions shall be utilized to achieve the previously agreed-upon program outlay savings.

LEVIN (AND DIXON) AMENDMENT NO. 55

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. LEVIN (for himself and Mr. DIXON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to amendment No. 43 proposed by Mr. DOLE (and Mr. DOMENICI) to amendment No. 43 to the motion to recommit, with instructions to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32), supra; as follows:

On page 2, increase the amount on line 9 by $1,500,000,000.

On page 2, increase the amount on line 10 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 2, increase the amount on line 11 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 2, increase the amount on line 15 by $1,500,000,000.

On page 2, increase the amount on line 16 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 2, increase the amount on line 17 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 3, decrease the amount on line 25 by $1,500,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 1 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 2 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 6 by $1,500,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 7 by $3,200,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 8 by $4,900,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 12 by $1,500,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 13 by $1,700,000,000.

On page 4, decrease the amount on line 14 by $1,700,000,000.

ABDNOR (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 56

Mr. ABDNOR (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. NICKLES) proposed an amendment to amendment No. 43 proposed by Mr. DOLE (and Mr. DOMENICI) to the motion to recommit, with instructions, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32), supra; as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment add the following:

It is the sense of the Senate that revenues should be increased and it is assumed that tax legislation will be enacted to limit to the national median family income the amount of farm loss which may be deducted against nonfarm income, and it is further assumed that revenues derived from enactment of such legislation be used to reduce individual income tax rates and to assure that full-time, family-size farm operators will not be disadvantaged by unfair competition from high-income taxpayers with substantial nonfarm income.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources has moved its hearing previously scheduled for Thursday, May 9, at 2 p.m., on the Department of Energy's Fusion Energy Programs. This hearing has been rescheduled for Thursday, May 9, at 9:30 a.m. in room SD-336.

For further information regarding this hearing, please contact Mr. Paul Gilman of the subcommittee staff at 202-224-4431.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I should like to announce for the information of the public that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will hold a public hearing on Saturday, June 1, 1985, on S. 400, a bill to establish a national health promotion policy within the Indian Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services, and to develop a comprehensive and long-term plan to tribal and national health promotion and disease prevention objectives.

The bill defines health promotion and disease prevention as the cessation of smoking, reduction in alcohol and drug use, improvement of nutrition and physical fitness, control of stress, immunization, control of high blood pressure, control of sexually transmittable diseases, family planning, pregnancy and infant care, control of toxic agents, occupational safety and health, control of accidental injuries, fluoridation of water, and control of infectious agents.

The hearing will begin at 10 a.m., until 2 p.m., in the Kennedy Middle School Auditorium, 600 Boardman, in Gallup, NM. Persons wishing to testify or who have questions regarding the hearing should contact June Tracy, professional staff member on the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at (202) 224-4521, or Faith Roessel, legislative aide to Senator JEFF BINGAMAN at (202) 224-5521.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

PRISONS

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, for several years I have been concerned about the state of America's prison system. In the last decade alone our Nation's prison population has more than doubled and is now increasing 15 times faster than the general population.

Many factors are cited as the cause for this country's unprecedented increases in the numbers of men and women in State and Federal penitentiaries. One is the trend toward mandatory sentencing laws. During the past several years over 37 States have passed mandatory sentencing laws. Some States no longer allow for prisoner parole. These changes in the law have resulted in longer "average time-served" figures than those of prior years. Another reason for the increase is simply that there continues to be a steady rise in the number of people arrested and sentenced each year. Further, studies have shown that judges are assessing stiffer penalties when it is within their discretion to do so.

As a result, the prison populations of 40 States exceed prison capacity. In virtually every State the department of corrections is asking for more money to construct additional prisons to deal with overcrowding. Thirty States, because of overcrowded conditions, are unable to meet minimal requirements set by the courts, and are under State or Federal court order to remedy the situation. Eighteen States have people sleeping on the floors because they have no other place to put them.

Mr. President, there are some who say that the best answer to meeting the problem of prison overcrowding is just to build more prisons. Others, however, recognize the skyrocketing costs of prison construction as well as the dramatic rise in annual costs of housing prisoners, and advocate a major overhaul of the existing philosophy of corrections. This new approach embodies the concept that imprisonment should be the punishment of last resort, not first resort.

Efforts to come up with an alternative model for corrections to provide relief of prison overcrowding have been underway in several States. One of the States, I am proud to say, is the State of Oregon. For the past 3 years a group of individuals from all elements of Oregon's criminal justice system have been working together on a project entitled the Oregon Prison Overcrowding Project [OPOP]. The projects purpose was to develop long range strategies for relieving prison overcrowding.

Mr. President, the Oregon Prison Overcrowding Project's report was recently completed. It represents many hours of work on the part of the members of the "policy group." It also is a product of many other individuals and organizations, both public and private, which provided support both financially and technically. I applaud their work and ask that a summary of the OPOP report be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The summary follows:

OPOP: ITS MISSION AND METHOD

The goal of the Oregon Prison Overcrowding Project (OPOP) is to develop long-range strategies for relieving the prison crowding problem. OPOP was formed in May, 1982 as part of a nationally sponsored demonstration project in four states. The Oregon Jail Overcrowding Project (OJOP) of the Association of Oregon Counties is a second generation project in the same national program sponsored by the Edna McConnell Clark Foundation and the National Institute of Corrections of the United States Department of Justice. OPOP is currently funded by several/Northwest foundations.

Because the design of effective long-range solutions requires participation from all elements of the criminal justice system, OPOP's "Policy Group" consists of officials from law enforcement, local government, the judiciary, the Legislature, the Parole Board, the Oregon Corrections Division, the law schools and prosecuting and defense attorneys. It is this unique opportunity for communication and study that has led to a strong consensus on OPOP's recommendations.

Another source of consensus is OPOP's extensive data collection effort. OPOP surveyed thousands of state prisoners, jail inmates and probationers regarding personal characteristics, criminal histories and offense behaviors. OPOP's recommendations, therefore, are based upon substantial knowledge about Oregon's offender population and a strong background in Oregon criminal justice among the Policy Group.

OREGON'S CROWDING PROBLEM

Oregon's prison crowding situation is not new or unique, but it is a serious situation which adversely affects the entire criminal justice system. Crowding within the institutions can promote stress and resentment, presenting an immediate, continual danger to staff and inmates. In crowded settings the cost of housing and guarding the inmates consumes funds that were once spent on programs aimed at returning inmates to productive lives upon release. Lack of jobs, recreation or activities can result in idleness and increased tension. Crowding also may have a negative impact upon public safety in at least two ways. First, crowding causes early release of inmates who continue to be a risk. Second, inmates who are incarcerated in crowded conditions may be more likely to reoffend upon release. Another result of crowding is a loss of credibility throughout the system. Imposed sentences cannot be carried out and decisions on what to do with offenders are driven by what is available rather than what is appropriate.

Currently, the Oregon State Correctional Institution (OSCI) is populated at 206% of single cell capacity and the Oregon State Penitentiary is at 153% of single cell capacity. Prisons are not the only component of our criminal justice system which are crowded. Most of Oregon's county jails are crowded and many have been or are being sued for the claimed unconstitutionality of their conditions. Field services—probation and parole—is also badly overtaxed, with a statewide caseload which has grown by nearly 2,000 in the last 1½ years. Overloading field services staff can result in lower quality supervision and less likelihood that the offender will receive needed services.

At this time about one in every 40 adult male Oregon residents is under the supervision—prison, parole or probation—of the Oregon Corrections Division.

Although Oregon's prisons are overcrowded, the inmate population is relatively stable at this time (3,562 as of February 1, 1985). However, Oregon's risk group population (crime prone males aged 15-29) is expected to remain stable only during the next few years. After that, the size of the risk group is expected to begin to climb again. If long range policy choices are not enacted during 1985, prison population size is likely to increase in the 1990's as the effects of the larger risk group begin to affect prison population. The time to gain control over the problem is now. The data is the best ever, and consensus among policymakers has been honed by nearly three years of analysis, discussion and debate. If action is taken now, the future of Oregon corrections can still be shaped by deliberate policy choices rather than forces beyond our control.

DYNAMICS OF THE CROWDING PROBLEM

Prison population is determined by a simple formula—how many offenders enter prison and how long they stay. The determination of these basic elements, however, is very complex.

This is because decisions at every level of government affect who goes in to prison and how long they stay. The Legislature decides what is a crime and what is punishable by prison, the police decide whether to arrest; the prosecutor decides whether to charge and at what level; the judge decides whether the convicted offender goes to prison, jail, an alternative facility, is placed on probation, or given some other sanction. If the offender is placed on probation, the judge may later revoke and incarcerate the offender if the probation officer decides to report violations of conditions. If the offender is imprisoned, the Parole Board, with the aid of the "matrix," determines length of stay. After prison, offenders serve an average of 11 months on parole, during which they can be reincarcerated for violating conditions which apply to every paroled inmate.

The criminal justice "system" consists of a series of discrete decisions which, taken together, have a huge impact on the number of offenders in the system and in the prison. A change of behavior of any one component often impacts the entire system; policy choices made in one component are often offset or exaggerated by choices made in other components.

A major principle of OPOP's findings is that prison and jail population sizes are functions of policy choices, as well as demographics (such as the size of the risk group). Therefore, control of prison and jail populations can be improved by implementing appropriate policies, it is necessary, however, that coordination and consistency throughout the "system" be achieved, and that extensive information, not currently existing, be gathered.

FINDINGS

OPOP's recommendations for action are based on several conclusions about the nature of Oregon's criminal justice system and needs for change. This section will describe some philosophical conclusions and the policy recommendations which result.

OPOP in this study has not determined the extent to which serious state prison overcrowding is due to lack of effective risk discrimination, lack of space in state prisons and local jails, and lack of alternative sentencing sanctions. We believe that all three factors are involved. But until we can develop a more accurate risk assessment method and a coordinated punishment/risk management sentencing policy, we cannot make reliable statewide decisions on what needs to be done. This includes when, what kind, and how much additional custodial space is required. Nevertheless, these decisions must be made. We look to the Criminal Justice Council, proposed in this report, to make the necessary studies, develop the data and follow through with recommendations to all three branches of government.

The appropriate mix of state and local custodial space is an important part of the question. Many local jails are antiquated and need replacement. Additional space is clearly needed in some counties. The extent of the need statewide can only be determined with development of a consistent policy on how such jail space should be used. Local jails, like state prison facilities, should be utilized under a punishment/risk management sentencing policy.

A. Redefining capacity

Criminal justice policy is often driven by notions of sanctioning "capacity," which is commonly defined as incarcerative "bedspace." While the availability of bedspace is important, this definition is seriously inadequate, because it assumes that only prisons or jails can meet the goals of the criminal justice sanctioning system. A more accurate and useful definition of "capacity" includes all of the sanctions available to the system, including bedspace but not limited to it. Under this concept, criminal justice "capacity" becomes a fully integrated, flexible sanctioning system which includes a wide variety of services and sanctions. A critical part of our recommendations is the development of the entire range of sanctions, which must be available in order to match sanctions to the crime and the criminal.

Within this broader concept of capacity, sanctioning options can be thought of as lying on a continuum, with the least restrictive sanctions on one end and the most restrictive on the other end. The following table illustrates a continuum of possible sanctions, with the average cost of each, and the number of offenders in each. It clearly (but only roughly) shows why "capacity" viewed only as bedspace distorts the overall nature of the sanctioning system's "true" capacity.

Sanctions (in descending order or restriction of freedom)	Cost per offender per day	Approximate number of offenders currently in each sanction
1. State prison	Avg. $39	3,600
2. Local jails	$25 to $60	2,650
3. Work camps, probation centers, temporary leave.	$20 to $35	1,300
4. Home supervision [1]	[1]$5 to $20	[1]2,000
5. Parole/probation supervision.	$.60 to $5 (avg. $2)	23,000
6. Community corrections (additional options and services).	$.54	23,000
7. Community service	$.34	14,000
8. Fines, fees and restrictions.	([2])	([2])

[1] Potential option not yet fully developed.
[2] Not determined. Some offenders are subject to more than one sanction, therefore the column on the right will total to more than the number of offenders in the sanctioning system.

The cost column represents costs to the state. It does not include the possible social costs of either incarceration or community-based sanctions. It is apparent from this table that the least restrictive options, such as low supervision probation, are the least costly and prison incarceration is the most costly option in terms of cash outlays by the state.

Since it is so costly, bedspace must be regarded as a relatively "scarce" resource, one which OPOP believes ought to be reserved to those most deserving of punishment and who represent significant risks to public safety. The notion of bedspace as a scarce resource leads to the questions—who are the most deserving of punishment and how is risk assessed?

Currently, the "system" has no consistent way of answering these questions because there are no clear goals and standards. OPOP believes it is essential to establish statewide sanctioning goals to help establish which offenders receive what levels of sanctions and services. The system needs coordination and consistency in its decision making if the problems of jail and prison overcrowding are to be adequately addressed and correctional resources efficiently and effectively managed.

B. A punishment risk management sanctioning model for Oregon

The philosophy which OPOP recommends incorporates the principle of punishment which already characterizes Oregon sanctioning philosophy, and combines it with risk management. Offenders would be placed in appropriate sanctions based on the need to respond to their crime (punishment) and their likelihood of committing future crimes (risk). The goals of the sanctioning system would be to punish offenders equitably and in proportion to the crime, and to restrict offenders' freedom to the degree necessary to achieve a reasonable level of public safety.

In order to do this, decision making throughout the system—arrest, prosecution, sentencing, supervision and release—would be based on using scarce resources on offenders who most deserve punishment and those most likely to commit another crime. The question of an appropriate level of punishment for specific crimes is a matter of policy choice made by responsible and accountable public officials. The criminal code enacted by the Legislature sets the possible penalties for each crime. Offenders would be placed in the least restrictive (least costly) appropriate setting in order to reserve bedspace for those who most need it based upon punishment and risk.

In order for a punishment/risk management sanctioning system to be successfully implemented in Oregon, several interim steps must be taken.

Primary among these steps is the systematic development of risk assessment technology. Risk assessment scales which reliably screen for risk have been produced in other states, notably Iowa. These scales are based upon the actuarial principles used in the insurance industry to screen for and thus manage risk. The development of vastly improved risk screening tools is one of the most significant advances in criminal justice management in recent years, but it has had no impact so far in Oregon. It is critical that Oregon do a high quality job of developing and applying the risk management tool. The tool must be tested and statistically validated on Oregon's offender population.

In order to accomplish this task, OPOP supports the establishment of a "Criminal Justice Council" charged with guiding the technical work required to develop the risk screening scales (HB 2093). The risk assessment development should be geared to all decision points where risk is a relevant factor, including pretrial custody, charging, sentencing, supervision and releasing decisions. This fits well with the Council's overall objective of improving communication and coordination among criminal justice agencies, which is essential for long-term improvements and planning in criminal justice policy.

Another important step is to recognize the need for a full range of sanctioning options, especially those between the most and least restrictive. Judges, probation officers, etc., cannot use alternatives which are overloaded or do not exist. The range of existing options varies from county to county. OPOP recommends that a priority for Oregon be the further development of sanctioning options and the provision of services necessary to help prevent future crime. It is important to "fill the gaps" in the local sanctions and services.

The provision of services is an essential ingredient in risk management because it addresses the importance of rehabilitation of the offenders. The "reduction of risk" should be a goal of the criminal justice system. HB 2093 requires the Criminal Justice Council to "study and make recommendations" regarding community corrections programs.

Finally, another key to the successful development and implementation of the risk punishment/risk management model is the availability of relevant information. Risk assessment technology requires collection of additional reliable, timely information which is not currently being collected in Oregon. Oregon's Corrections Division has a great deal of daily management information about how many offenders there are, where they are located, etc. These data allow the Division to plan for housing, staffing, etc. But they do not generally describe the offenders in terms of personal characteristics, the nature of their crimes (e.g., levels of violence) or their criminal history. This matching of offenders, offenses and sanctions is the essence of risk management. The Criminal Justice Council should guide the development of an information base which will serve both the initial development needs for risk assessment, and the continual testing and validation necessary to maintain their effectiveness. With the right information, risk management can be effective at each level of the criminal justice system.

SUMMARY: ADVANTAGES OF A PUNISHMENT/RISK MANAGEMENT MODEL

A criminal justice sanctioning system based upon both punishment and risk management would have several advantages:

It recognizes the need to respond to crime, commensurate with the seriousness of the offense (punishment). It will reserve prison and jail space for the most serious and dangerous offenders, help to restore or maintain the credibility of the system and maximize the chance for a deterrent effect for the criminal sanction.

It recognizes the importance of equity in sanctioning offenders; that like crimes should receive similar sanctions. This should also help credibility and may relate to offender willingness to cooperate in rehabilitation efforts.

It is realistic in that it recognizes:

1. That the Oregon criminal justice system already operates on the basis of punishment and risk, but the latter largely occurs on an intuitive level without coordination. Examples of current risk assessment would be judicial assessment of risk at the time of sentencing; the parole matrix' history/risk score; and the Corrections Division security classification procedures for new institutional admissions. Oregon needs to systematize, expand, and coordinate all of these while raising the level of decision quality through careful development of statistically validated risk assessment tools.

2. That a level of risk is inevitable in dealing with offenders. It simply cannot be avoided; and given that, we should do the best possible job in managing it. Even if it were possible to eliminate all risk, the fiscal costs would be enormous.

It retains a level of discretion within the sanctioning model that will allow the system to operate with some flexibility. Today, some states are moving toward "deterministic" sanctioning systems based exclusively on punishment which allow little or no discretion. These systems essentially lock the sanctions in at the earliest decision stages when information is the least reliable and often unavailable. When this happens, it is often impossible to adjust for errors or to respond appropriately to the offender's progress.

It incorporates effective resource management as both a goal of the model (that is, that punishment and risk should be keyed to available resources) and as a logical outcome of the model. Risk management allows resources to be used based upon systematically determined need for security as well as the need to punish. Resources are not being "wasted" on offenders who do not need them, whether those resources are sanctions or services.

It uses limited jail and prison space on those most "deserving" of punishment. This model, properly developed and implemented, would answer the policy question of "What are prisons and jails for?" leading to their designated use on those whose crimes and risk justify that allocation of resources.

The punishment/risk management model involves the entire criminal justice system, from decisions to release pending trial to decisions to release from prison. Risk assessment tools can be developed for each of these decision points. Thus, the approach has utility and relevance to all officials because it will help them do their jobs better.

Finally, commitment to a common set of goals for sanctioning policy will increase the likelihood of improved communication and coordination among all criminal justice agencies at all levels of government, by virtue of the need for continual discussion. This should address the too-common attitude that "capacity" is solely the problem of the Corrections Division and the sheriffs, and help to establish the idea that everyone must assume responsibility for it.

POTENTIAL IMPACT ON RESOURCE MANAGEMENT

To get an idea of how much risk management could potentially benefit the system, OPOP data on prison inmates and probationers were analyzed to gauge whether any offenders currently incarcerated in state prisons might be considered low risk. The procedures are described in detail in the full report. By successively eliminating prison inmates on the basis of violent behavior, criminal history and the Iowa risk assessment scale, our data indicate that 12.5% of the prison population closely resembles the least risky 52% of the probation population. This 12.5% is equivalent to about 441 inmates.

This analysis would have to be validated using a tested Oregon-based risk assessment tool to be considered conclusive. But it is strongly suggestive that well-developed risk management could result in better use of prison space. Currently, the average annual cost of incarcerating an offender in the Oregon State Correctional Institute is about $14,000. The cost of community supervision is much less. (See Table 1) The potential fiscal impact is thus very large, and this does not include the impact which might be realized by applying the same sanctioning tools to local jail populations.

OPOP's focus through the past 2½ years has been on recommending long-term strategies for relieving the crowding problem. The recommendations contained in this report achieve that goal, but do so without fundamental structural revision of Oregon's criminal justice system, which we believe is sound.

Instead, our recommendations recognize that criminal justice policy must be based, like other areas of public policy, on the notion of scarcity of resources. We cannot expect the criminal justice system to catch all criminals and prevent all of them from ever committing another crime. We can, however, create a system which uses resources wisely, applying the most expensive, most restrictive resource in the interest of public safety.●

CIVILIAN MANAGERS LOST WAR IN VIETNAM

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, until this year, the story had not been told of how civilian officials of the executive branch hobbled, chained, and bound American military forces with restrictions saying what the military could and could not do in Indochina. These restrictions were known as rules of engagement. The recent declassification of these documents, formerly classified top secret, proves the military took a bum rap in Vietnam.

U.S. military forces did not lose the Vietnam war, civilian policymakers did.

The rules of engagement caused a piecemealing of air operations which allowed North Vietnam to adjust to the U.S. air bombing campaign by importing war materials through routes immune from attack and then to disburse and store the materials in guaranteed sanctuaries. From these safe areas North Vietnam infiltrated the material to South Vietnam and Laos. The rules allowed the enemy to protect its forces and material, provided it with military training and staging areas free from attack and permitted it to erect massed air defense weapons. One of the most tragic consequences of the rules was the impact on American aircraft and pilot losses by giving North Vietnam time to build up its sophisticated air defense system.

The lesson of Vietnam is that once civilian policymakers decide on war, the result of placing military operations under day-to-day management of unskilled amateurs and rejecting the advice of the best military professionals may be loss of the original objective for going to war. Such rules must never again be applied to our Armed Forces.

Mr. President, my legal counsel, Mr. J. Terry Emerson, was invited to speak on the subject of the rules of engagement at a symposium held on Capitol Hill last week sponsored by the American Security Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the American Conservative Union. His statement presents a tight history of the effect and evolution of these rules. One could not claim to understand the Vietnam war without being aware of the rules of engagement and for that reason I submit his remarks for the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

VIETNAM RULES OF ENGAGEMENT

(J. Terry Emerson)

United States military forces did not lose the war in Vietnam.

Congress did not block the Vietnam War. In fact, Congress was up to its ears in the Vietnam conflict, from as early as 1949 when it first pushed funds on President Truman to support anticommunist forces in Indochina.

Although Congress can be blamed for denying Presidents authority to enforce the peace agreement with Hanoi after January 1973, it was civilian managers of the Executive Branch who first denied our military forces victory by imposing a complex and lengthy set of restrictions on what the military could and could not do in South Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos and North Vietnam. These restrictions were known as Rules of Engagement.

They ran on page after page and were constantly changing. The rules were almost impossible to memorize or interpret, although our pilots had to do so. When some changes were made after repeated appeals of the Joint Chiefs, the reductions were gradual and not strong enough to serve strategic ends. Numerous partial and total bombing halts interrupted the effectiveness of preceding bombing campaigns. Often, when limited extensions of target areas were granted, they were withdrawn shortly afterward.

For years the contents of these rules were kept top secret. It is only this year, thanks to the initiative of Senator Goldwater and the agreement of Secretary Weinberger, that the actual text of the rules were declassified. In addition, a contemporary historical examination of the air war in Southeast Asia compiled by the Air Force was among the top secret documents newly released at Senator Goldwater's request.

The rules covering North Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia were issued in the form of daily message traffic and these papers were not retained. They are described, however, in the three volume Air Force report entitled Project Checo. The detailed rules for South Vietnam were issued as official directives and the complete set of these rules for 1966 and 1971 were placed in the Congressional Record by Senator Goldwater. The Air Force reports and the rules appear in the Record of March 6, 14, 18 and 26.

These newly public documents reveal just how comprehensive the restrictions were that bound our military units in Vietnam. For example, one rule told American pilots they were not permitted to attack a North Vietnam MIG sitting on the runway. The only time it could be attacked was after it was in flight, was clearly identified and showed hostile intentions. Even then, its base could not be bombed. The same "hostile intention" rule applied to truck convoys driving on highways in Laos and North Vietnam, if you can imagine how a truck is to show hostile intent. In some regions, enemy trucks could evade attack under the rules by simply driving off the road. Even military truck parks located 200 yards from a road could not be destroyed. Another rule provided that SAM missile sites could not be struck while they were under construction but only after they became operational and dangerous, unless a bombing halt was in effect and not even an active missile site could be attacked.

In 1967, the Preparedness Investigating Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee conducted extensive hearings relative to the conduct of the air war against North Vietnam. After gathering the facts, the Subcommittee issued a report on August 31, which was strongly critical of the Rules of Engagement.

The Subcommittee concluded:

"That the air campaign has not achieved its objectives to a greater extent cannot be attributed to inability or impotence of air power. It attests, rather, to the fragmentation of our air might by overly restrictive controls, limitations, and the doctrine of 'gradualism' placed on our aviation forces which prevented them from waging the air campaign in the manner and according to the timetable which was best calculated to achieve maximum results."

The Subcommittee found that Secretary of Defense McNamara and the Johnson Administration had "discounted the professional judgment of our best military leaders and substituted civilian judgment in the details of target selection and the timing of strikes." The Subcommittee charged these civilian managers with having "shackled the true potential of air power and permitted the build up of what has become the world's most formidable anti aircraft defense. . . ." The Subcommittee found the Rules of Engagement to be directly attributable for the fact that "during the entire year of 1966 less than 1% of the total sorties flown against North Vietnam were against fixed targets on the JCS target list." I should point out the targets on the Joint Chief's list could not be hit without specific approval of the Secretary of Defense.

The concentration of the air war to areas well south of the vital Hanoi-Haiphong regions, which left the important targets untouched—the existence of large assured sanctuaries—the failure to close the Port of Haiphong—the prohibition against a coordinated aerial mining of coastal water lanes of communication with a bombing attack continuously cutting off rail and road lines to China, all these results of the rules combined to cause a piecemealing of air operations which allowed North Vietnam to adjust to the air campaign by importing war materials from communist countries through routes immune from attack and then to disburse and store this material in guaranteed sanctuaries. From these safe areas North Vietnam infiltrated the material to South Vietnam and Laos. By granting North Vietnam sanctuaries with our blessing, the Rules of Engagement allowed the enemy to protect its forces and material, provided it with military training and staging areas free from attack and permitted it to erect massed air defense weapons.

One of the most tragic consequences of the Rules of Engagement was the impact on American aircraft and pilot losses by giving North Vietnam time to build up its sophisticated air defense and to disburse its stocks of war supplies. The point on which military experts disagreed most vehemently with civilian managers was the certainty among professional military men that these self imposed restrictions greatly increased U.S. casualties.

Revisionist historians argue military leaders did not convey to civilian officials the depth of their concern with the rules. Bunk!

The Pentagon Papers and the newly declassified documents reveal that the Joint Chiefs repeatedly argued against the artificial limitations impeding the objectives of our nation in the Vietnam War. A handful of civilian advisors, such as Walt Rostow, agreed with military professionals that systematic and sustained bombing of war making resources in North Vietnam would have decisive results, but Secretaries of Defense McNamara and Clifford stubbornly insisted on continued strict limitations over military operations.

The Joint Chiefs and commanders in the field pressed time after time for changes in the rules to put more pressure on North Vietnam. For example, in 1968, Secretary of Defense Clark Clifford convened a senior group of advisors from the State and Defense Departments, the CIA and the White House to review United States involvement in Vietnam. General Wheeler submitted a paper to this group on behalf of the Joint Chiefs. The cover memo for his paper noted that "General Wheeler would favor action to close the Port of Haiphong through mining or otherwise." But a specific paper was not included since President Johnson had already indicated closing the ports was not an action he was going to consider, even as part of a comprehensive review. This illustrates what our military leadership was up against.

Specifically, the paper written by the Joint Chiefs proposed:

"An integrated interdiction campaign should be undertaken against the road, rail and waterway lines of communication with the objective of isolating the logistics base of Hanoi and Haiphong from each other and the rest of North Vietnam."

To achieve this objective, the Chiefs wrote it was necessary to reduce the restricted and prohibited areas around Hanoi and Haiphong and to delete the Special Northeast Coastal Armed Reconnaissance area which limited attacks on North Vietnamese craft to those within three nautical miles of the coast.

The Joint Chiefs explained how North Vietnam had taken advantage of the sanctuaries gratuitously given them in the cities. The JCS paper stated:

"There have been repeated and reliable intelligence reports that indicate civilians not engaged in essential war supporting activities have been evacuated from the cities of Hanoi and Haiphong. Photographic intelligence, particularly of Haiphong, clearly shows that materials of war are stock piled in all open storage areas and along the streets throughout almost one half of the city. Rather than an area for urban living, the city has become an armed camp and a large logistics storage base."

But the Joint Chiefs' paper fell on deaf ears. On March 31, 1968, President Johnson announced he would not seek reelection and at the same time he restricted air strikes on North Vietnam to a line south of the 19th parallel. Then, on December 1, President Johnson ordered the complete cessation of bombing in North Vietman, Only defensive air operations were permitted until the resumption of strategic bombing in May of 1972 by President Nixon.

During this bombing halt, U.S. aircraft could not make even protective reaction strikes into North Vietnam unless the strike was below the 19th parallel and it was an immediate response against enemy aircraft which had taken aggressive action against our aircraft. Military requests for one time preemptive strikes against the maturing North Vietnamese air defense system south of the 20th parallel were turned down. This permitted the system to reach a high level of sophistication in which the North Vietnamese linked their GCI radars with the lock on radar capability of SAM sites to guide MIG attacks on U.S. aircraft and to aim SAMs undetected until the instant of firing against our aircraft.

The Rules of Engagement were so tight that during the last week of March 1972, General Lavelle, Commander of the Seventh Air Force, was relieved of duty for allegedly ordering unauthorized raids against North Vietnamese air fields and radar sites. During the same week General Lavelle was recalled, Noth Vietnam launched a major offensive against South Vietnam. Within a week the rules he was accused of violating were obsolete. Authority was granted in April 1972 to use tactical air strikes against SAMs, artillery and other military targets to the 18th parallel and protective reaction strikes were authorized as far as the 20th parallel.

A month later, President Nixon ordered the mining of Haiphong harbor and offensive air operations were reopened throughout North Vietnam except for a buffer zone at the communist Chinese border. There was a brief suspension of bombing north of the 20th parallel in late October, but President Nixon initiated the famous Christmas bombings, 12 consecutive days of strikes starting on December 18, 1972, using B-52's on a sustained basis for the first time over the northern part of North Vietnam. Hanoi returned to the negotiating table immediately and signed a peace agreement within six weeks.

A major objection to increased war operations that prevailed among civilian policy makers had been concerned about armed intervention by Red China. Yet Henry Kissinger tells us in his memoirs, "Years of Upheaval," that during his visit to Peking in February 1973 he discovered a unified communist Vietnam dominant in Indochina would be a strategic nightmare for Mainland China. Peking approved the goals of the Paris peace agreement because it would benefit China by denying Hanoi primacy in the region and buffer North Vietnam with three independent states, Laos, Cambodia, and South Vietnam. Dr. Kissinger also writes that he discovered the answer to a mystery which had long confounded him. The road Chinese troops had been building through northern Laos for nearly a decade was not intended or used to supply the Pathet Lao; instead it sat on the flank of the advancing North Vietnamese and could be used to contain and threaten Hanoi's possible domination over all Indochina. No wonder that Red China had stood by passively when virtually unlimited bombing of North Vietnam had been permitted in December 1972.

Unfortunately, Congress made it impossible for Presidents Nixon or Ford to uphold the peace terms. Again quoting Dr. Kissinger, the resulting collapse of South Vietnam in 1975 "not only led to genocidal horrors in Indochina; from Angola to Ethiopia to Iran to Afghanistan, it ushered in a period of American humilitation (and) an unprecedented Soviet geopolitical offensive all over the globe. . . ."

But the Congressional abandoment of friendly peoples who relied on us came at the end of the war. The real architects of the lost opportunity that doomed our undertaking in Vietnam were the civilian officials who had made a commitment large enough to risk our global position but executed it with so much hesitation as to defeat their purpose. Without derogating the principle of civilian control of the military, it should be recognized that once civilian policymakers decide on war, the result of placing military strategy and tactical operations under the day to day direction of unskilled amateurs may be greater sacrifice in blood and the denial of a military victory. Once American forces were committed, there is no logical goal except to prevail.●

WASTEWAY? NO WAY!

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, over the past few years, John B. Oakes of the New York Times has written a series of columns on the Westway real estate development and highway project in New York City. Today I am inserting in the RECORD a column from June 6, 1983.

In this particular piece, Mr. Oakes stresses the availability of the trade-in option to the city and the State. Under the trade-in option, New York would be able to trade-in $1.71 billion in Federal funds which could be used to construct a nonlandfill highway and to rehabilitate New York's crippled mass transit system.

Some 37 cities in 21 States have traded in interstate highways for substitute mass transit and/or highway projects since 1974. For instance, Boston has received $1.4 billion, Chicago has received $1.1 billion, and Washington, DC, has used over $2 billion in trade-in funds for the Metro system.

Few question the serious transportation needs that the city of New York faces. These trade-in funds could be used for urgently needed repairs to the collapsing subway, bus and commuter rail system. Consider this—if $85 million were deducted from the $1.71 billion trade-in total to cover the 85-percent Federal share of a nonlandfill alternative highway costing $100 million—then the city would have $1.625 billion to spend on mass transit.

The trade-in still stands as a viable and attractive alternative for the State and city of New York, but time is running out. The deadline for New York to take advantage of the trade-in alternative is September 30, 1985.

Mr. President, the Westway plan as it now stands is an unacceptable assault on the environment and the Nation's Treasury. New York does have options to address its legitimate transportation needs, perhaps foremost among these is the trade-in option. I ask that John B. Oakes' column, "Wasteway, Governor? No Way!" be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

WASTEWAY, GOVERNOR? NO WAY!

(By John B. Oakes)

Governor Cuomo is a pragmatic politician as well as a respected one. He is risking his reputation on both counts by his curious reluctance to face reality in the Westway fiasco, which is rapidly turning into the Westway scandal.

Inexplicably, Governor Cuomo is ignoring recent actions both in Congress and in the Federal courts that make trade-in of Federal interstate highway funds a more realistic alternative to Westway than ever.

Inexplicably, he airily dismisses as "nothing new" the devastating report on Westway prepared at his request by Thomas P. Puccio, a former Federal prosecutor.

Inexplicably, Governor Cuomo refuses to recognize that Westway, far from being a "free" gift from a benign Federal Government, will impose an additional heavy financial burden on the people of New York State.

The Governor concedes that there might be better ways of spending "free" Federal dollars for the state than by pouring them into a $2 billion to $5 billion, 4.2-mile superhighway, landfill and real estate development on Manhattan's lower West Side.

Of course there are. One of the ways is to trade in Westway money now, as the law allows, for a riverside boulevard, other road and bridge repairs, and major capital improvements for the city's bus and subway system. Such a project is far more responsive to New York's transportation and financial needs than Westway. It provides equal if not greater employment opportunities. It is much more quickly realized. It will do none of Westway's major, long-term damage to the economy and the environment of city and state. It will not force New York to divert massive funds from real transportation needs to this unwanted and unneeded extravaganza.

But, said the Governor to this reporter a few days ago, this is "not the choice." His rejection of trade-in seems to be based on the mistaken theory that while Federal dollars for Westway are certain and sufficient, trade-in funds are neither. He seems entranced by the idea that if we are going to get that Federal money at all, we had better opt for Westway. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Late last year, Congress adopted a highway law that for all its many faults sets up a new formula for distribution of trade-in funds that is particularly beneficial to New York. The net effect of this and other changes is to solidify the assurance that New York will get its fair share of trade-in grants for both highways and mass transit—if it only asks for them.

The trade-in timetable means that New York could receive at least $100 million in its first installment, beginning a few months from now. The entire $1.5 billion that New York would be in line to receive under trade-in would be paid, at the present and planned rate of Congressional appropriations, within seven years.

The Governor seems to shrug aside the virtual certainty that New York's share of Federal interstate highway funds will not nearly meet the 90 percent of Westway's true costs that it is supposed to cover. Unless New York's annual allotment is astronomically increased, Westway's cost overruns, inflation and federally unreimbursable expenses will eventually create a gap estimated at anywhere from several hundred millions to $2 billion. This shortfall can be filled only by diverting Federal and state money from other, more worthwhile road projects, by funneling state funds into the Westway sinkhole at the expense of genuine state needs elsewhere or by raising taxes.

For example, under bills recently introduced in Albany, some Port Authority funds could be channeled off to Westway, and much if not all of the proposed new $1.25 billion transportation bond issue to meet statewide demands could be sneaked over to Westway, directly or indirectly, while nobody was looking.

Such Westway features as the parkland atop the landfill, and roads, sewers and other utilities necessary to support the privately financed apartment houses, will not be eligible for full Federal funding. Given perennial shortages of both state and city funds, the Westway landfill could well become the Westway wasteland.

Fortunately, Westway construction is now tied up in the Federal courts. Questions stemming from an alleged conspiracy by two of the most notoriously arrogant agencies of Government—the Army Corps of Engineers and the New York State Department of Transportation—is to come up in a contempt trial before Federal District Judge Thomas P. Griesa next week; but it may be years before the substantive issues at the root of the problem are resolved.

Meanwhile, trade-in stands as the practical, immediately effective alternative to the stalled and discredited Westway. All Mr. Cuomo has to do is say the word. Mayor Koch will doubtless follow along. After all these years, it's about time that long-term commonsense prevail over short-term common politics.●

AGRICULTURE AND TRADE

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, a great deal has been written and spoken about the plight of the American farmer—and about the connection between his problems and our trade problems in general.

The American farmer is a victim of the overvalued dollar.

He is not alone. Workers all over this country in all kinds of industries see their jobs disappear under a flood of imports.

Protection is not the answer—but nor is ignoring the problem. We cannot pretend the problem will go away, will right itself.

I would like to share with my colleagues remarks on this topic made by Roger J. Baccigaluppi, president of the California Almond Growers Association. Mr. Baccigaluppi is eloquent in his description of the problem and of our need to act. We may or may not agree with every line in this speech—but we can all benefit from reading it.

I ask that the text of Mr. Baccigaluppi's speech be printed in the RECORD.

The text follows:

"AGRICULTURAL EXPORT: PROBLEMS AND A SOLUTION"

(By Roger J. Baccigaluppi)

A few weeks ago in Sacramento, I had the privilege of addressing the National Agri-Marketing Association on the occasion of National Agriculture Day—the first day of spring—March 20. I indicated to that group that it was a nice thought, National Ag Day, but that there was little to celebrate. Let me tell you why.

We have on our hands today the greatest agricultural depression of this century. All of those who still remain in agriculture should be congratulated. They have survived despite a government policy to encourage cheap food for the consumer. That means low prices to the farmer.

More recently, our federal fiscal and monetary policies have been devastating to agriculture, whether it be in California, Kansas, or Illinois. We continue to hear how robust our economy is—the leader in the world. But how long will it last?

You probably expect me to talk about the 1985 Farm Bill tonight. If you do, you are going to be disappointed. All I will say on that subject is that no matter what is enacted—the Administration's program, a much less costly program from the standpoint of the taxpayers, or a program that costs many times the Administration's proposal—no '85 Farm Bill is going to solve the underlying problems in agriculture that have developed in this country in recent years. Whatever Farm Bill finally evolves is going to be little more than superficial first-aid by untrained paramedics who do not seem to understand that our injuries are not superficial, but potentially fatal to agriculture as we know it today. Our injuries need to be diagnosed carefully. Only then can we take the necessary surgical action to help agriculture truly recuperate. A box of band-aids patched all over a mortally wounded industry will not make agriculture any better or more able to survive.

We have a crisis in this country that must be addressed promptly if we are to save the economic future of this nation and the rest of the world. Very strong words, but I believe them and so do many others, Republicans and Democrats alike.

The problem begins with the public perception that the economy is doing well. Perhaps a few farmers and export industries are being hurt, but the economy in general is doing very well. Given this public perception, why should Congress take action?

They must take that action, ladies and gentlemen, because our economy—the greatest economy in the world—is in its decline. The decline began slowly, but has now accelerated. Just four years ago, in 1981, our merchandise trade deficit amounted to only $28 billion. That means we imported $28 billion more products than we exported. Three years later, in 1984, we were importing $130 billion more than we exported, and this year it is expected to reach about $150 billion.

Why does it matter that we are importing more than five times as many Toyotas, Sonys, agricultural products, and Airbuses, to name just a few products, than we did four years ago? It matters primarily because of the trend it represents. If five times as many products have been imported in the last four years, will there be ten times as many in the next four years, and 20 times as many in the next eight or ten years?

Let me take a moment to discuss some specifics.

First, the United States has fewer trade barriers, tariff and non-tariff, than anywhere in the world. Our trading partners, on the other hand, have any number of barriers to U.S. products. We in agriculture must continue working with our government to improve this problem.

Second, the economies of most of the countries of the world have suffered badly during recent years, tending to hurt our export sales. This situation has begun to improve, but remains a problem.

The two problems I have just mentioned, however, pale by comparison to those created by the grossly overvalued dollar. It is the dollar, more than any other factor, that is choking off our exports and stimulating imports.

Some have suggested that exporters in the United States are using the overvalued dollar as a crutch to explain why they are unable to export. I would urge them to consider the facts.

In August 1980, it took 2.37 U.S. dollars to purchase one British pound. By the end of February, it took 1.06 U.S. dollars to buy one British pound.

Apply this to the case of almonds. Assume for the moment that we were selling almonds for $1 per pound in 1980 and that our prices have not changed since then. If you disregard what inflation has done to our purchasing power, the dollars we are receiving from the British are the same as we received in 1980. The British consumer, though, because of the increase in the value of the dollar and the decrease in the value of the pound, is paying the equivalent in his currency of $2.23 per pound for those $1 per pound almonds. His price, in this case, has more than doubled. What we receive stays the same.

Similarly, the French buyer is paying the equivalent of $2.57 per pound, more than 2½ times as much as he paid in 1980. The German buyer is paying the equivalent of $1.95 per pound, or nearly twice as much for those $1 per pound almonds.

What has actually happened in almonds is that we have reduced our price by one-third from $1.88 per pound in 1980 to $1.30 per pound this year. That means our growers are getting one-third less money for their product, a disaster from their standpoint. But the British buyer, because of the grossly overvalued dollar/undervalued pound, is paying 56 percent more for our $1.30 product than he did for our $1.88 product in 1980. The French buyer is paying 78 percent more, and the German buyer is paying 35 percent more. Think about that. Our growers are getting one-third less, but our buyers are paying about 50 percent more. All of this is a result of the dollar relationship with other currencies, and nothing more.

Almond growers have adjusted to the grossly overvalued dollar by taking one-third less for their product. Many others in agriculture have done the same thing. But neither almond growers nor the growers of other crops, whether it be grapes, cotton, wheat, or soybeans, can continue to operate year after year receiving less than the cost of production. The dollar must be brought down to a more reasonable level, or agriculture, as we know it today, will not survive.

This prospect should not be taken lightly. Approximately one-third of all the agricultural land in this country is planted for export. This is true on a national basis, as well as here in California. For many crops, such as wheat, soybeans, almonds, rice and cotton, more than half of the crop must be exported. A recent USDA study shows that more than one out of every five jobs in the United States has its roots on the farm. More than 22.7 million Americans—22 percent of the work force—earn their living in agriculture.

I have told you how agriculture is trying to adjust to the grossly overvalued dollar. Perhaps we should take a monent and talk about how others are adjusting.

By mid-year, 1984, two million of the best jobs in this country had been lost. Some industries, and this includes farmers, have made adjustments by simply closing down—going out of business. They are bankrupt.

Others are adjusting by moving their production out of this country and into areas where there is a weak currency. The great Caterpillar Tractor Company and John Deere are two examples. The distortions created by the grossly overvalued dollars have forced them to produce their products overseas, rather than in the heartland of America. Caterpillar has cut its work force from 90,000 in 1979 to 60,000 today This year, Caterpillar is consolidating its production of truck-type loaders—which have been made in both Davenport, Iowa and Glasgow, Scotland—in Glasgow, not in Davenport. Next year, Caterpillar is going to start production of its D-6 tractor in Grenoble, France, laying off still more workers in Davenport, Iowa.

Chrysler and General Motors are not only importing finished cars at cheap prices, but are also importing more and more of the components they put in their so-called "American car". Chrysler has cancelled their plan to build a new U.S. plant, which would have been worth billions and tens of thousands of jobs. They will do it overseas instead. Boeing is having difficulty competing with the Airbus. Recently, our largest international carrier, Pan Am, purchased the Airbus rather than a domestic product. Boeing is trying to adjust by buying more and more of the components they put in each finished Boeing aircraft from overseas suppliers.

At our own Blue Diamond facility in Sacramento, we have learned that a piece of packaging equipment that we formerly purchased from the manufacturer in Sheboygan, Wisconsin, for about $100,000 can be purchased from the Wisconsin manufacturer's Italian subsidiary for about $50,000. With the plight our farmers are in, where do you think we are purchasing that equipment?

We have also found that we can buy packaging material, like cellophane and foil, at about half the U.S. price from manufacturers in the United Kingdom or Brazil. We, too, are beginning to do some packing overseas.

Sun-Diamond, a major California cooperative, is moving a great deal of their processing from Stockton, California, to Tijuana, Mexico. Tri-Valley, California's largest canner, is considering doing some of its fruit processing in Japan.

And the list goes on and on. Two million jobs have already been lost in this country and the number is climbing rapidly.

This country has been known around the world as the most efficient world grain producer. Yet a few months ago, Cargill, this country's number one grain trader, found that they could land grain from Argentina in the United States cheaper than they could get it here in this country. A spokesman from USDA, commenting on this situation, said, "When the river starts to flow backwards, there is something wrong with the plumbing." The "plumbing" problem, if you will, is the grossly overvalued dollar.

The same is true in my favorite food—almonds. California is the world's most efficient producer, we are highly mechanized, we have harnessed the water in the mountains to our advantage and we use all the most modern cultural practices. We outproduce our next largest competitor, Spain, at the rate of 10 times as many almonds per acre, producing 1,500 shelled pounds per acre versus an average of about 150 pounds per acre in Spain. But, because of the horrible distortions in the dollar/peseta relationship, growers are removing almonds from production in California, while growers are planting in Spain.

If these alarming trends continue, and I see every indication that they will, the day will soon come when this country will be unable to export anything. Our prices will simply be too high.

Some might argue that our industries can still depend on the domestic market. That would be a good idea except that our prices will be too high here as well. As a result of the dollar relationship with other currencies, imported products can come in much more cheaply than we can produce them at home. That is why there has been a fivefold increase in imports in just the last four years.

What sort of an economy will we have if we can neither export what we produce, nor sell it here at home? I submit, we will not have any economy. We will be bankrupt as a nation.

Some people say we will be a service economy. If we do not have an agricultural industry, a tourism industry (foreigners cannot afford to come here, and Americans are finding it cheaper to vacation abroad), an automobile industry, a steel industry, a machine tool industry, an aircraft industry, an appliance industry, a TV industry, and a photographic industry, who are we going to be servicing? Our computer hardware and software cannot be expected to service the rest of the world. Some people say we will become a McDonald's economy. But, I ask, where are people going to get the income to buy those Big Mac's?

It should be clear that something must be done to correct the grossly overvalued dollar. What, then, should be done?

Before answering that question, I would like to take a moment to explain why the dollar today has such an extremely high value in the world. There are two basic reasons. Number one, the United States is considered a "safe-harbor" for overseas investors—the safest harbor in the world. No other country in the world, in the view of the world, is less likely to suffer from a civil war, insurrection, overthrow by a foreign power, or any other major destabilizing event. The United States is the very best place you can invest your funds and not have any fear of losing them due to some unpredictable event. We are fortunate to live in such a great country. The world perception of this country as a safe harbor is not something any one of us would suggest should be changed.

The second reason for the strength of the dollar is the very high real interest rates currently being paid in this country. While nominal interest rates, the amount a big borrower pays for money, have come down from about 21 percent to the 11 percent range, the real interest rates, the difference between the rate of inflation and the nominal interest rates, or prime rates, are at an all-time high. This means that a foreign investor not only receives security and safety, he also enjoys the highest real interest rates in the world.

If we were in fact in the business of packaging investment opportunities for foreigners, we would either offer them high rates with little safety or low rates with a great deal of safety. We offer both. This has produced the influx into this country of foreign money, bolstering the dollar to new records relative to other major currencies.

It is our government that is responsible for the dollar's high value. In this environment, where too many people are trying to borrow too few dollars, the United States has been the biggest borrower of all. Real interest rates—in accordance with basic principles of supply and demand—are thus held at an all-time high.

In just three years, the United States has changed from the world's largest creditor nation to the world's largest debtor nation. A few years ago, Americans owned about $150 billion more abroad than foreigners owned in the United States. Now, we borrow $100 billion and more abroad to finance our national debt. During this year, the U.S. foreign debt will exceed that of Brazil and Mexico, places we formerly complained about as the world's largest debtors.

In 1974, just 11 years ago, people were alarmed that our annual federal budget had a deficit of just over $6 billion. Today, that number has grown by a factor of 33 times to more than $200 billion annually.

In 1974, again just 11 years ago, people were also alarmed by the debt that our federal government had accumulated in the first 198 years of our history—$486 billion. In the six years that followed, we managed to double that debt again to $914 billion. And by the end of this year, five years later, we will have doubled the $914 billion debt to $1 trillion, 807 million. This projection is probably understated, since it assumes a deficit this year of $190 billion when it is likely to be closer to $222 billion.

One of the problems we have with all these numbers is that none of us can visualize what a $222 billion deficit really is. Perhaps I can put it in perspective by asking you to think of this year's $222 billion federal deficit in some other terms. For example, the total number of seconds from the time Christ walked the earth until today is only 63 billion. The entire area of the earth's surface is a miniscule 197 million square miles—1/11th of a billion, compared to 222 billion.

This year, $131 billion, or 14 percent, of the total outlays by our federal government, will be interest on the national debt. Put another way, 69 percent of our deficit will be interest on the national debt. Last year it was 59 percent, and the year before that it was 45 percent. Again, a very alarming trend.

Our problem, ladies and gentlemen, is that the budget proposed by the President for fiscal 1986 reduces the budget deficit by only about $40 billion—chicken feed when one talks about federal budgets.

The Senate talks in terms of a $60 billion reduction in the annual deficit. At the rate they are going in approving the continuation of various programs, there will be no reduction at all.

The President says we cannot touch defense and social security. Add those two together and then add in the interest on the national debt, something we cannot avoid until we have massive reductions on that debt, and it adds up to about $580 billion out of a $977 billion annual budget.

Given that these untouchable programs plus the interest on the national debt amount to 60 percent of our total federal outlays, can we realistically expect to get the necessary cuts from the 40 percent that is left? The cuts could be made from the farm programs, but that would only run about $10 billion to $12 billion a year. Similarly, they could come from Medicare or the Federal Highway Program, but when you get through cuts in all these programs, they are not enough to reduce the deficit by $50 to $60 billion this year, and more in the next few years.

The answer, then, is more revenue. The President, however, has rejected this approach and was able to use this view successfully as part of his platform for reelection last year.

The Democrats, too, are unwilling to propose a tax increase, since they lost the election in part because of Mr. Mondale's tax increase proposal.

All this adds up to a grim and perhaps hopeless situation, unless the American people speak out and demand action. A call should be made for across-the-board cuts in every single category of federal spending. Farm programs, social security, Medicare, defense, student loans, Small Business Administration programs, and every other program must be affected. The only way to bring about massive reductions in federal spending is to spread the cuts in a fair and equitable way over each person, interest group, and sector of the economy. No one should be spared except the absolutely destitute and those absolutely unable to help themselves.

Unfortunately, even if these cuts are made, we will still find ourselves short of our goal of a $50 to $60 billion reduction in the deficit in the next fiscal year, with greater reductions in the years following. We need, as a realistic goal, a balanced federal budget in four to six years. They simply cannot be attained with cuts in expenditures alone. More revenue is needed. This means a broadening of the tax base, a change in income tax rates, or perhaps a new form of tax for this country, such as a consumption tax or a value added tax.

Time is running out. Next year is an election year. I know we just finished an election, but next year is another one. If action is not taken to obtain massive reductions in the deficit by mid-year, I am afraid our Congressmen are going to be too busy with their reelection to deal with the very tough decisions that massive deficit reductions will entail.

Drastic action by our federal government is needed now. The huge federal deficit has forced our dollar to an all-time high, making it impossible for us to sell our goods both abroad and at home. Two million American jobs have been lost since 1980. In steel, we have gone from 13.8 percent imported product in 1970 to 25 percent last year. In autos, we have gone from 15.2 percent imported product in 1970 to 23 percent in 1984, and that was with a voluntary auto import quota in place. In machine tools, we have gone from 9½ percent imported product in 1970 to a staggering 41½ percent in 1984. In wine, we imported 11 percent in 1970 (principally premium wines), doubled that in 1980, and by 1984 had increased our imports (now primarily bulk wine) to a whopping 26 percent. California wine producers can hardly buy the bottles and labels, let alone buy the grapes, produce the wine, and ship it for the price that many foreign producers are delivering their wine for in this country. As a result, consumption of U.S. produced wines has increased only 8 percent in the last four years, while consumption of foreign wines has increase 39 percent, nearly five times the growth of our own product.

What I have been talking about today is not a problem specific to agriculture, but rather a problem for this entire nation, for its industry and for its agriculture. It is a problem that must be solved if this nation is to remain economically viable. America, agriculture, the other industries I have mentioned, and many others I have not mentioned are in grave danger of extinction unless the dollar is brought down to more reasonable values. This is the major problem facing our nation.

If we do not bring about massive reductions in the federal deficit beginning with fiscal year 1986 and continuing for a number of years after that, I fear it may be too late. Four more years will have passed, a new Presidential election will have taken place, there will be many new faces in Congress, and industry and agriculture, as we have known it in the United States, will be a memory for all but a very, very few.●

SECURITIES SAFETY AND SOUNDNESS ACT OF 1985

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in light of the controversy over the risks of junk bonds, I thought my colleagues would be interested in seeing some language from the prospectus of a typical junk bond offering. The November 29, 1984, prospectus is from the Metromedia Corp. and foreshadows the very problems the corporation is having today in servicing its debt.

Under the heading "Significant Considerations" the prospectus reads as follows:

Based on current levels of operations and anticipated growth, the Company does not expect to be able to generate sufficient cash flow to make all of the principal payments due on the Notes, which commence on (date), without taking action to refinance a portion of its indebtedness. No assurance can be given that such refinancing can be successfully accomplished. Based on current levels of operations, the Company's cash flow would be insufficient to make interest payments on the Debt Securities and it would have to use other funds, to the extent available, to make such interest payments.

I will include an article from the Washington Post that describes how Metromedia has been forced to sell its assets in order to meet future interest payments on junk bonds. If you were a depositor, would you want your savings account invested in such questionable securities? Is this the kind of speculative investment that the Federal Government should guarantee under FSLIC and FDIC? Should Federal deposit insurance be shouldering the entire responsibility for protecting the funds of insured account holders at institutions that invest in such risky bonds? How does this type of investment make affordable housing available to Americans? Such considerations are indeed significant.

I ask that the material be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

METROMEDIA TO SELL LOCAL TV STATION

(By David A. Vise)

Metromedia Inc., the giant communications company, plans to sell WTTG-TV (Channel 5) and five of its other six television stations to an entity controlled by Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp., investment industry sources said yesterday.

Twentieth Century Fox is owned by Australian press baron Rupert Murdoch and Denver oilman Marvin Davis.

Sources said Metromedia is under pressure to sell assets because the company otherwise might have difficulty making future interest payments. Metromedia added about $1.3 billion in debt to its books when the company was purchased in a leveraged buyout last year by an investor group led by its Chairman John W. Kludge. Sources said Murdoch and Davis were minority investors in the buyout.

Metromedia's heavy debt includes high-yielding, risky securities known as "junk bonds," a target of recent congressional hearings. Some members of Congress are worried that the growing use of these risky bonds to finance takeovers poses a threat to the nation's financial system by saddling corporation with heavy debt.

Federal Communications Commission sources said they expected to meet with representatives of the Murdoch-Davis group today. The group will have to persuade the FCC that the proposed purchase does not violate restrictions on the ownership of media properties.

As a foreign citizen, Murdoch is prohibited from owning more than 25 percent of a company that controls a TV station. Sources said he could get around that restriction by becoming a naturalized United States citizen or by structuring the transaction so he owns less than 25 percent.

Also, a single owner is prohibited from having both a newspaper and a television station in the same city, which would appear to cause problems for Murdoch in Chicago and New York, where he already owns newspapers and plans to buy Metromedia TV stations. The FCC also would have to approve the transfer of broadcast licenses, a process that could take months.

According to sources, Metromedia plans to sell independent television stations in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston, Dallas, and Washington to the Murdoch-Davis group and is negotiating with American Broadcasting Companies Inc. regarding the sale of its Boston TV station, which is an ABC affiliate. Broadcasting analyst Paul Kagan said yesterday that Metromedia is seeking to sell the stations in part because of the high prices being paid now for television stations.

Murdoch owns The New York Post and The Chicago-Sun Times and other media properties on three continents. Murdoch and Davis became partners in March when Murdoch agreed to purchase 50 percent of the company that controls Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. from Davis, who still owns the other half. Sources said Metromedia stations could be used as outlets for Twentieth Century Fox productions.

The suggestion of financial pressure on Metromedia raises questions about Ted Turner's hostile takeover bid for CBS Inc. Turner's proposal, which includes no cash and consists entirely of risky "junk bonds," was patterned after Metromedia's leverged buyout plan, investment banking sources said. Most Wall Street estimates of the value of Turner's proposal have relied on the Metromedia junk bonds as a guide.

Sources said Metromedia, heavily laden with debt from the buyout, encountered financial pressure after the cost of obtaining programming for its independent TV stations increased while the growth of revenue slowed. Metromedia, which also plans to sell a production company to Murdoch and Davis as part of the deal, according to sources, would retain ownership of properties, including a telecommunications company that is involved in radio paging and cellular telephones. It would also retain a group of radio stations that includes WASH-FM in Washington, an outdoor advertising business, and an entertainment subsidiary, sources said.

Last December, Metromedia raised $1.3 billion by selling junk bonds. Leonard Pack, Metromedia's associate general counsel, said in December that one of the advantages of the junk bonds was that they included zero coupon notes, which require no interest payments until 1988. Sources said yesterday Metromedia made the decision to sell its stations after coming under financial pressure now and realizing it would have difficulty meeting those payments in 1988.

In a leveraged buyout, investers borrow the money to purchase a company, pledging the company's assets as collateral.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with the committee's intention to see that such information is immediately available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notification which has been received. The classified annex referred to in the covering letter is available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, room SD-423.

The information follows:

[In reply refer to: I-00558/85ct]

Hon. RICHARD C. LUGAR,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding under separate cover Transmittal No. 85-26, concerning the Department of the Navy's proposed Letter of Offer to Pakistan for defense articles and services estimated to cost $14 million or more. Since most of the essential elements of this proposed sale are to remain classified, we will not notify the news media.

Sincerely,

GLENN A. RUDD,
Acting Director.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

Deleted.

Deleted.

(U) This sale will contribute to the foreign policy objectives of the United States by enabling Pakistan to increase its capability to provide for its own security and defense. Pakistan plays an increasingly greater role as a stabilizing force in the Southwest Asia/Indian Ocean region. It is strategically important in terms of defense of sea lines of communication in the Arabian Sea and approaches to the Persian Gulf.

Deleted.

(U) These systems supplement a prior Harpoon sale to Pakistan made in 1983. This is part of the Pakistan Navy's selective modernization program. The sale of this equipment and support will not alter the basic military balance in the region, but will enhance Pakistan's ability to protect its maritime commerce and Pakistan's one major port, Karachi.

(U) The prime contractor for Harpoon is McDonnell Douglas of St. Louis, Missouri.

(U) Implementation of this sale will require the assignment of contractor representatives to Pakistan. The number and length of time in-country is unknown at this time.

(U) There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

CANADA—AIM-7M SPARROW MISSILES

The Government of Canada has requested the purchase of a quantity of 184 AIM-7M SPARROW missiles and related support at an estimated cost of $42 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of Canada; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defense of the Western Alliance.

The Government of Canada intends to use these AIM-7M SPARROW missiles on its CF-18 fighter aircraft.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractors will be the Raytheon Company of Lowell, Massachusetts, General Dynamics of Camden, Arkansas, and Hercules ABL of Cumberland, Maryland.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government or contractor representatives to Canada.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

EGYPT—TANKS

The Government of Egypt (GOE) has requested the purchase of a quantity of 94 M60A3 tanks with Tank Thermal Sights, 7.62mm machine guns, .50 caliber machine guns, searchlights, and smoke grenade launchers. This purchase will also include spare parts, tools, test sets and a basic load of smoke grenades. The total estimated cost of this sale is $165 million.

The proposed sale supports the American foreign policy and national security objectives of assisting Egypt in its program of modernizing its armed forces so that it may provide for its own security and self-defense and contribute to regional security and stability. A strong and independent Egypt will be able to participate in the Middle East peace process and resist incursions of Soviet client states in the region. This sale is being notified as an exception to the general U.S. policy not to undertake new arms sales to the Middle East pending completion of the Middle East Arms Transfer Study. This action is required because the M60A3 tank production line is at its end, and delay in placing orders would cause price increases which are avoidable if orders are placed in the immediate future. Early notification, prior to completion of the directed study, is needed to meet these deadlines.

The Government of Egypt plans to use these tanks for force modernization. This sale would continue the ongoing program of replacing aging Soviet equipment with modern U.S. equipment.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the General Dynamics Corporation of Warren, Michigan.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel or contractor representatives to Egypt.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

SUDAN'S TRIALS OF ASSISTANTS IN ETHIOPIAN JEWS AIRLIFT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I recently became aware of a shocking report regarding the nation of Sudan's new leadership. Abdel Rahman Diwar el-Dahab, the military leader of Sudan who ousted Gen. Gaafar Al-Nimeiry in an April 6 coup, has declared that his government will put on trial any officials involved in the recent airlift of Ethiopian Jews to Israel.

Earlier this year, Senator CRANSTON and myself achieved an accomplishment rarely seen in our body; all 100 Senators signed a letter to President Reagan urging him to provide necessary assistance to Ethiopian Jews without mentioning our efforts to the press. Due in part to this letter, the United States was able to help airlift over 800 Ethiopian Jews from Sudan. This humanitarian effort by the United States and Israeli governments, and through the benign neglect of the Nimeiry government in Sudan, enabled this rescue effort, named Project Moses, to succeed.

Until this airlift, the future for the Ethiopian Jews in Sudan had been imperiled. They were not only fleeing famine in Ethiopia, but also persecution. Although Ethiopian Jews have been subjected to harsh discriminatory policies in the past, measures instituted by the 10-year-old Marxist regime in Addis Ababa have jeopardized the Ethiopian Jews' very existence. These harsh policies, coupled with the severe famine, made rescue of the Ethiopian Jews necessary.

Earlier rescue attempts were discontinued because of premature disclosures. This directly endangered the Ethiopian Jews who remained in Sudan. In addition, because they were afraid of being identified as Jews in a Moslem country, Ethiopian Jews refrained from soliciting medical and food assistance. This resulted in alarming death rates among Ethiopian Jews that cried for immediate action.

Sudan, which is estimated now to shelter over a half million famine refugees, allowed our rescue effort to take place this past March. This humanitarian effort was applauded all over the world. Shortly thereafter, however, General Nimeiry was overthrown and the pro-Western view of the Sudan Government has since been in doubt.

The disclosure of the new military leader's intent to prosecute those involved in the airlift is reprehensible. The United States and Sudan have had friendly relations for many years. It is important that our relations with Sudan, which is bordered not only by Communist Ethiopia, but also by Qadhafi's Libya, remain strong. I am dismayed that Sudan would not openly assist in the airlift of Ethiopian Jews. I am appalled, however, that this nation would go as far as to prosecute any Sudanese who assistance in such a humanitarian cause as the rescue and liberation of fellow Africans from hunger and persecution.

For fiscal year 1985, the United States will provide over $250 million in food, economic, and military assistance to Sudan. I now realize, however, that we must seriously review our aid to a nation which looks upon the rescue of hundreds of starving Africans as a crime. I view such a policy with the strongest condemnation. It is my hope that it is never carried out.●

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ARTHRITIS AND MUSCULOSKELETAL AND SKIN DISEASES

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor S. 425, which would amend the Public Health Service Act to establish a National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases within the National Institute of Health. I commend my distinguished colleagues, the senior Senator from Arizona, for offering this legislation.

More than 40 million people suffer from arthritis and other musculoskeletal diseases that cripple the body's joints and tissues. Each year, these painful and debilitating diseases afflict an additional 1 million victims. Of all Americans over age 65, more than 40 percent are afflicted by an arthritic condition. Yet it is not a disease of the elderly alone. More than 250,000 children contract a devastating form of arthritis. Juvenile arthritis can stunt growth, blind, cripple, deform, and even kill, 50 percent of diseased children are crippled for the rest of their lives.

We can not measure the damaging effects of arthritis in terms of human suffering alone. The economic impact related to lost wages, medical care, and insurance amount to more than $30 billion each year. It represents 5 percent of our national health bill. An additional $1 billion thrown away each year on unapproved remedies. As more Americans reach their senior years and the frequency of musculoskeletal diseases increases, health costs will escalate and burden an already troubled health care system.

There is an urgent need for this new institute. Well over 16 percent of our population—or more than one out of every six Americans—is now suffering from arthritis or a musculoskeletal disease. That is an increase of 6 percent in just 4 years.

Mr. President, it is time that we focus our attention on winning the war against these crippling diseases. Presently, Government sponsored research programs pertaining to arthritis are grouped with programs in the National Institute of Arthritis, Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases. Under provisions of S. 425, the new institute would be given primary responsibility for all arthritis research conducted within the NIH.

S. 425 will enable the new Institute to promote national research efforts with increased interest. The new Institute will become a national sponsor of research and training. It will also serve as a clearinghouse for much needed information. Our goal must be to improve treatment of disorders related to musculoskeletal and skin diseases, by intensifying efforts to diagnose root causes of these diseases and make progress in therapy.

As we have learned in our battles against cancer and heart disease, when Americans dedicate themselves to an intensified research effort, tremendous progress can be the result. Mr. President, the time has come for such a national dedication to the battle against arthritis, musculoskeletal, and skin diseases to occur. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.●

CHUMS (CANCER HOPEFULS UNITED FOR MUTUAL SUPPORT)

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding progress that has been made by CHUMS—Cancer Hopefuls United for Mutual Support—a young health organization whose efforts are directed toward improving the quality of life of cancer patients and survivors. CHUMS is a national organization of cancer patients and survivors and their families and friends. CHUMS was started in September 1981—and incorporated in November 1981—as a national self-help organization that emphasizes a higher quality of life for all who have a history of cancer.

The purposes of CHUMS are:

First, to offer therapeutic aid via self-help and crisis intervention.

Second, to afford cancer patients and survivors the opportunity to share experiences and offer each other mutual peer support.

Third, to help cancer patients and survivors and their families and friends to better cope with and reduce the resulting traumas and problems of cancer.

Fourth, to disseminate information about the latest developments on the subject of cancer, including the use of lecture-discussions by prominent cancer specialists.

Fifth, to stress that cancer is a disease, not a disaster, and that it often is curable, especially if detected early and treated early.

Sixth, to counter misconceptions that cancer is always terminal by highlighting cancer survivors who are 5 or more years beyond diagnosis.

Seventh, to encourage cancer patients to become cancer "hopefuls" and opt for life, and

Eighth, to improve the quality of life of cancer patients and survivors by helping them to strengthen their psychological "weapons": positive outlook, cheerful attitude, hope, optimism, the determination to live, and the will to get well, be well, and stay well.

The CHUMS agenda includes:

First, crisis intervention and information service on a nationwide basis.

Second, self-help rap sessions at which cancer patients and survivors share experiences with each other.

Third, educational meetings at which prominent cancer specialists speak and answer questions.

Fourth, phone-a-patient and visit-a-patient programs to let cancer patients know someone cares.

Fifth, parties and get-togethers for everyone's enjoyment.

Sixth, campaigns against discrimination against cancer patients and survivors in employment, financial, insurance, and other areas.

Seventh, research in the fields of virology and immunology where a cure for cancer may be found, and Eighth, CHUMS Exchange, a newsletter with good news for and about cancer patients and survivors.

On Sunday, May 19, 1985, CHUMS will hold its third annual luncheon at which Kelly Drenke, a 12-year-old Ewing's sarcoma survivor, from Oshkosh, WI, will be honored as the CHUMS Child of the Year.

Arthur C. Upton, M.D., former Director, National Cancer Institute, and presently director, Institute of Environmental Medicine, New York University Medical Center, will be honored as CHUMS Physician of the Year.

Sarah Splaver, Ph.D., president and founder of CHUMS and a cancer survivor, will be honored as CHUMS Woman of the Year, in recognition of a decade of her extraordinary dedication to cancer patients.

Arlene Dahl and Juliette Koka will be among the show business celebrities who will entertain at the luncheon. The renowned Fontayne will present a mini fashion show.

In the organizational structure of CHUMS, most are cancer survivors. They include:

President: Sarah Splaver, Ph.D., counseling psychologist and author of many books in the fields of guidance and psychology: cancer survivor 10 years past diagnosis

Vice President: William C. Zeek, Ph.D., chemist: cancer survivor 8 years past diagnosis.

Secretary: Miranda Craig, B.A., advertising copywriter: cancer survivor.

Treasurer: Juan F. Camara, B.A., graduate student: cancer survivor.

On the board of directors are the following individuals:

Fay Allen, cancer survivor.

John V. Conti, M.A., Assistance Commissioner, Rehabilitation Service Administration., U.S. Department of Education: cancer survivor.

Diane DuBroff, J.D., attorney.

John J. Fischer, Jr., M.B.A., manager, Systems Development, Smith Barney, Inc.: cancer survivor.

Richard Halpern, M.B.A., associate editor, Standard & Poor's Corp.: cancer survivor.

Robert Harris, C.P.A., accountant.

Helen Kleinberg, M.A., M.S., director, career counseling and placement, Lehman College, City University of New York: cancer survivor.

Janet Levins, C.S.W., social worker, New York City Human Resources Administration: cancer survivor.

Howard S. Mase, Ph.D., vice president/director of human resources development, Citicorp: cancer survivor.

Vivienne Niemann, B.A., advertising executive: cancer survivor.

If any of my colleagues or their constituents want further information about CHUMS, they may write to CHUMS, 3310 Rochambeau Avenue, Bronx, New York 10467 or phone 1-212-655-7566.

Thank you, Mr. President, for giving me the opportunity to share this information with my colleagues. I hope it will be of assistance.●

SECRETARY OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 657, introduced by my distinguished colleague, Senator THURMOND. I am pleased to cosponsor this bill to elevate the Veterans' Administration to a Cabinet level department.

For more than three decades, the Veterans' Administration has faithfully carried out the reponsibility of administering programs and services to benefit the men and women who have risked their lives in defense of freedom. There are 28 million veterans in this country today and approximately 54 million dependents and survivors of veterans—totaling some 82 million actual or potential beneficiaries of veterans' benefits and services. VA actions directly affect better than one-third of the population of the United States. Their programs touch in some way virtually every family in America.

The VA's commitment to our veterans is reflected in the size and dimensions of its programs, which were created and are maintained to heal both the physical and the psychological wounds of war. With 172 major medical facilities and 185 outreach centers, the VA operates the largest health care system in the world. The VA also administers the largest direct insurance program in the United States, one of the Nation's largest income maintenance programs, and an education program that interacts with almost every postsecondary and vocational institution in the Nation.

Let us now provide the VA with a more secure future. Given the enormity of the VA's responsibility as the largest independent Federal agency, it is most appropriate that we provide for a Secretary of Veterans' Affairs within the President's Cabinet.●

REVOLUTION COMING TO SOUTH AFRICA

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I think that most Members of this body have at one time or another felt frustration at the current state of affairs in South Africa. As our frustrations and the frustrations of the people we represent grow, the pressure to somehow hasten the process of change in South Africa continues to increase. It is almost certain that this body will at some point seriously consider legislation to bring greater pressure to bear upon the Government of South Africa.

Mr. President, there is little doubt in my mind that revolutionary change is coming to South Africa. That point was driven home again to me by an article that appeared in the May 1 edition of the New York Times. That article told of two incidents. In the first incident, South African riot policemen detained at least 30 black labor activists in central Johannesburg during peaceful demonstrations called to protest layoffs. According to the article, the protest was peaceful; the demonstrators were singing and carrying placards that said, among other things, "We Demand a Living Wage."

In the second incident described by the article, bombs exploded just after midnight outside the offices of two gold mining companies. One of those companies was the Anglo American Corp., which had dismissed 17,000 black workers after what it said were a series of disruptions and unlawful work stoppages. The explosions were caused by Soviet-made limpet mines of the type that have frequently been used by the African National Congress in its compaign of sabotage and urban guerrilla warfare against white minority rule.

History has demonstrated repeatedly that no government can forever deny fundamental political and economic rights to those it governs. Revolution is inevitable when people demand those rights that have been denied to them. The choice before the people of South Africa, and particularly the white minority, is not between revolution and the status quo. The choice is whether or not revolution will take place peacefully, and whether or not the forces that are striving for constructive change will prevail over the forces of destruction.

It has always been the goal of this country's policy to encourage peaceful and constructive revolution in South Africa. Different administrations have chosen different means to try to encourage change in that direction. As this body considers U.S. policy toward South Africa in the weeks ahead, I hope that Members will keep uppermost in their minds that our goal should be to encourage those elements within South Africa that are striving for a nonviolent, democratic revolution.

To that end, Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues an article that appeared in the February edition of The Industrial Pioneer. The article was written by William G. Jaeger, who was kind enough to share his thoughts with me during a recent visit to my office. Mr. Jaeger has devoted his life to building sound ideological leadership in British and world labor. He has done this for over 40 years in Europe, Africa, the Middle East, Asia, North America, and Latin America. The article is entitled "South Africa: Union Strength a New Factor." The article was written after a 6-week visit to South Africa during which Mr. Jaeger met with black, colored, Indian, and white leadership of the trade unions. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows.

SOUTH AFRICA-UNION STRENGTH A NEW FACTOR

(By William Jaeger)

Whatever political standpoint one views from, it is very difficult today to be a political leader of any country. So much that has gone before has been wrong; so many want to justify what has gone before; so much is wrong today. It takes great courage to decide to put right what is morally wrong, whatever anybody says, and it is uncertain how quickly things can be put right—almost certainly not overnight. The situation is deeper and more diverse than many people think.

This is especially true in South Africa where I have just had four weeks meeting black, coloured and white trade unionists in FOSATU (Federation of South Africa Trade Unions), 110,000 members, CUSA (Council of Unions of South Africa), 150,000 members, and TUCSA (Trade Union Council of South Africa), 400,000 members, also Indian, coloured and black allied workers in unions registered and unregistered; also people of every shade of opinion from the Government, Church, education and employers.

There was acute violence last October and November, 400,000 schoolchildren were absent from school. A two-day strike of between 300,000 and 800,000 workers was the biggest in South Africa history. The leadership of FOSATU and CUSA were arrested. Over 3,000 people were arrested last year, including 49 trade unionists and over 1,000 people were injured.

The strike was organized by the umbrella group, the "Transvaal Regional Stayaway Committee", comprising Church and political groups and the United Democratic Front. The UDF is a loose coalition of organizations led by Reverend Allan Boesak and has been a rallying point for opposition to the Government. The strikers demanded withdrawal of the army and police from the townships; release of political prisoners; reinstating dismissed workers and a halt to rent increases.

It was not the violence which shocked the country's leadership, it was the painful realization of exactly how deep the feelings of discontent are. Trade unions are clearly involved in the township unrest; unionized factories gave overwhelming support. Unions and students worked together for the first time.

The strike and stayaway reflects the absence of political rights for blacks—the right to vote and to freedom of association. As long as the blacks are refused some form of political power, the strike will re-emerge as a weapon. The recommendations of the Wiehahn Commission which aimed to develop black trade unionism have not been sufficiently carried out. It recommended a part for black shop stewards, more apprenticeships and the removal of legislation restricting black union activity.

Also the De Lange Educational Report, recommending an end to the inferior educational system for blacks has not been carried out. The amount spent on white education is eight times that spent on black, per head. This is of course why the black schoolchilren were absent and refused to complete their examinations. Another contributor to the unrest is the high unemployment.

DESTRUCTION OR DIALOGUE

It seems not yet to be the revolution that people were afraid of. The Council of Unions of South Africa General Secretary, whom I met and who was arrested during the strike, stated, "We don't have the financial resources for a long strike. Another would just weaken our position and employers' attitudes would be much tougher. We cannot pursue all our demands. But unemployment, bad pay, rent increases, are all cumulative. The Government will now have to take into consideration the views of the black trade union leaders rather than the homeland leaders and community councillors".

The issue today is whether South African Africans will sit down and talk now to each other, or will blindly follow the usual route of destruction and bloodshed before they sit down among the ruins and talk. So far the Government has reacted to strikes not by dialogue, but by arresting leading black union organisers. There are black townships which most whites never see; whose few access roads are controlled by army and police. Any attempt to take protest into white areas would be met by an overwhelming display of armed force.

Renewed efforts are being made by TUCSA, the original pioneers of a multiracial union to create dialog. They have been accused in the past of being too onesided, but TUCSA leaders have made contact with the leaders of the black federations and discussions between the 24 unions have taken place about creating unity and a common effort in the country.

It was encouraging to speak to the Executive Board of the 17,000 strong Cape Teachers' Professional Association. In an open letter to members, one of the Executive writes, "In a real sense, the struggle has only just begun. We must destroy apartheid, but we must put in its place a system built on people who do not show signs of the very elements they resent most. We must find unity based on what is right and not who is right, which deeply respects others and is therefore truly non-racial."

"Authoritarianism is wrong whether practices by white or black. It is the offence we are against and not the person. If any one of us claims the right to decide for another what he or she may or may not do, then he cannot escape being called an oppressor'.

In an unprecedented show of solidarity with black trade unionists South Africa's three main industrial and business organizations publicly condemned the arrest of trade unionists referring specially to leaders of CUSA and FOSATU. They are unquestion-ably aware that increased white prejudice will limit radical changes.

It is said that if President Botha had brought some of these changes into his recent election platform it is most likely that he would have been replaced by a more entrenched white leadership. But something must be done for the 21 million blacks to make life economically, socially and politically worthwhile, with an adequate educational opportunity.

A Cabinet Committee headed by President Botha and Mr. Heuns, the Minister of Cultural Development, are drawing up plans for some black political representation, stopping short of a black fourth chamber. But in the present mood of the black community it could easily be dismissed as too little and too late.

IMMENSE POTENTIAL

Without any question, there are faceless men and women exploiting the situation and making the most of the issues. But sending in troops to search homes can only serve an immediate purpose. It has not solved the fundamental problems and has actually made people more bitter.

Zulu Chief Buthulezi, one of the most influential black leaders, is opposed to the strikes and is a fierce critic of the UDF. He blamed them for setting black against black rather than channelling their energies into forcing the Government to negotiate black participation in the democratic process.

Many black union leaders state that they felt that disinvestmant in South Africa by other countries was not very effective. Church and political leaders proclaim disinvestment without it costing them anything, but the black union leaders have to face the unemployment due to lack of contracts.

The most disturbing issue is the human rights issue. Many abuses need to be abolished. If not, there could be terrible bloodshed and destruction. Dictatorship of the left or right will not solve the immense problems of relationships between the races. But if these abuses were dealt with, the potential of South Africa is immense; and if genuine trust can be built between black, coloured and white, South Africa could be in the eyes of the whole world a very progressive nation, giving much to Africa and the rest of the world.●

FORMER PRESIDENTS AND FACILITIES REFORM ACT OF 1985

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1047, the Former Presidents and Facilities Reform Act of 1985, and I commend my colleagues, Senator ROTH, Senator CHILES, and Senator PRYOR for their leadership on this issue. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation.

I knew that in our debates over the budget we have become accustomed to dealing in such large numbers that to talk about a program which costs $27 million per year may not seem significant. But I think passage of this bill will go a long way toward letting the American people know that we are looking for every possible way to show fiscal restraint, and that no program is exempt from this scrutiny.

There is no question that our former Presidents should be given the means to carry out duties which relate to their former office, and that they should be provided with a reasonable, necessary amount of protection, but there is no reason that these services should be provided without regard to common-sense fiscal restraints.

The Former Presidential and Facilities Reform Act of 1985 will provide reasonable limits on the amount spent on former Presidents' libraries, staff, officers, and Secret Service protection. First, it will require that private foundations establising libraries for former Presidents will provide an endowment equal to 20 percent of the facility's value to operate and maintain the library. In the past, these growing costs have been borne by the General Services Administration.

Second, this bill limits staff allowance and office size, as well as restricting the use of these funds from use for partisan political activities or income-generating activities.

Finally, it limits Secret Service protection to 5 years after a President leaves office, unless the Secetary of the Treasury extends that protection. A spouse and children are entitled to protection only if their safety is related to the former President's, or if the current President determines it to be warranted.

Mr. President, I am pleased to support this reasonable approach to what has been a largely uncontrolled program. It is one more example of how I believe we can limit Government spending without sacrificing worthwhile programs. I urge my colleagues to join in cosponsoring this bill.●

SENATOR LUGAR'S ADDRESS TO AIPAC

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the distinguished Senator from Indiana, DICK LUGAR, for his determined and well-accomplished efforts to date in forging bipartisan support and leading the way to what I hope soon becomes a national consensus for our foreign policy. Under his leadership, which can only be called dynamic, the new chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has in short order produced significant results in the Foreign Relations Committee.

A sterling example of Senator LUGAR's leadership and insightful perspective on U.S. foreign policy issues is found in his recent address to the 36th Annual Policy Conference of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, given on April 22, 1985. I ask that his speech be placed in the RECORD so that it may have the broadest possible circulation.

The material follows:

ADDRESS BY SENATOR LUGAR

Thank you for those warm words of welcome.

It is true that I am the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Those of you who follow these matters closely will recall that this was not a job which I solicited. Indeed, it was only through a complicated series of events that I came to the position at all.

Had Senator Helms made a different choice, I might tonight be addressing a major farm bureau meeting.

Had Senator Dole fared less well in his campaign for the majority leadership of the Senate, I might well be trying this evening to figure out how to get 51 votes for a budget.

Had Senator Percy succeeded in his re-election campaign, and Senator Dole in his campaign, and had Senator Helms remained at agriculture, I might be a plain Senator from Indiana, without benefit of portfolio at all.

I am sure you would have invited me anyway—sooner or later.

But I am delighted that things have worked out the way they have, and I have entered into this chairmanship with all of the energy and enthusiasm I can bring to it.

One of the special joys of this position is that it brings me together frequently with friends such as you who are present this evening. This is a remarkable occasion in which to explore together some of the aspects of a relationship which is as deep as that between any two nations on Earth: That is the relationship between the United States and the nation of Israel.

I will suggest this evening that the years of the Reagan administration have been good ones for the relationship. I will suggest that no administration has offered stronger support for Israel than this one.

On the military side, we have seen a deepening of our relationship. We now see systematic and thorough cooperation in many areas. We see an integration of our thinking and our planning so that we are not going to surprise one another, as has happened from time to time in the past.

Economic relations are expanding as well. Today—and this is highly significant—the United States and Israel have signed agreement creating a free trade area. This is a strong step toward increasing our economic relationship. This agreement has not been without its critics on both sides. Businesses or individuals who calculated potential losses of markets from increased competition raised serious questions about this agreement along the way. We cannot and should not treat these questions relating to peoples' livelihood cavalierly. But it is fair to say that this new agreement will help both Israel and the United States. It represents a deepening or our relationship in an important way. There is an enormous potential for Israeli exports to many nations, and this agreement is a strong first step.

Israel and the United States have also increased cooperation in many technical fields. Israeli technical capabilities in many areas, ranging from agriculture to medicine to economic development to military matters, have produce beneficial improvements for both sides.

Another very significant development is now underway. Soon, American pilots will be flying Israeli fighter planes to help in their training. I am referring, of course, to the KFIR. The United States Navy is purchasing these aircraft for use in training as aggressor squadrons.

Forty years ago, when the concentration camps were liberated, or in 1948 when the infant Israeli state was scrambling to find used aircraft to defend its existence, who would have thought that one day American military pilots would be flying Israeli-built fighter aircraft?

Finally, this administration has provided the most generous economic and military assistance ever to Israel. This year the administration requested from the Congress $1.8 billion in military assistance, up $400 million from last year. As you know, this request has found favor in both the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee. We look forward to timely action on both the Senate and House bills.

On the economic side, the Foreign Relations Committee has adopted a total $1.2 billion, the same amount as last year. During the course of further deliberations on Israeli economic reforms, we thought it best to include this amount as an assurance that these funds—which are required as an offset to debt servicing requirements—would be forthcoming.

But it is not enough to provide funds to nations like Israel with large external debts if these funds help to compound long-term economic problems. For this reason, the Reagan administration has moved strongly in the direction of grants rather than loans. This year, as was the case last year, every dollar of assistance to Israel will be in the form of grants rather than loans.

Indeed, if I might digress for a moment, this movement in the direction of grants has not been for Israel alone. Egypt has also experienced the benefit of this approach. The Reagan administration has given careful thought to the large debt problems which confront many nations around the world. There are many good reasons, including national security, economic solvency, and long-term development, which call for current funds. But if we help to increase the long-term debt of nations to the point that they simply cannot repay it, we have done neither ourselves nor the recipient nation any favor.

Israel is a good case in point. Each year, Israel pays back the United States roughly the same amount which we provide under the economic support fund program. And there are many other nations which are heading into this same position. The reason Israel has these huge debts is that previous administrations burdened Israel with loans rather than providing grants.

The fact is that U.S. funds are not provided out of altruism, but out of a firm conclusion that it is in the national interest of the United States to do so.

A secure, economically sound Israel is in the national interest of the United States.

And a secure, economically sound United States is in the national interest of Israel.

Let me address this latter question for a moment. Each of us knows that the credibility of the United States—both economically and militarily—is vital to the defense of freedom around the world. That is why we have undertaken many efforts in the past several years to ensure that credibility.

Militarily, we have regained a measure of the strength which was lost through years of deferring modernization programs. A strong boost in the morale of our troops has occurred. Enlistments are up. Equally important, reenlistments are up. New strategic programs are coming on stream. And we are exploring fully the next generation of offensive and defensive technology. We do these things not out of a desire to be aggressive; we do them because they are vital to preserving the peace and to defending ourselves and our friends and allies.

Economically, we have experienced substantial growth and new job creation. Economic growth and the creation of new jobs are absolutely vital to our future. Without them, we will not be able to meet either our defense needs or the many legitimate social needs of our people.

That is why we have looked to tax cuts and to other means to provide incentives for Americans to grow and to produce. At the same time, we must realize that we are now spending nearly $200 billion each year which we do not have. We are borrowing those funds. We are borrowing them from our children. That is why it is crucial to make certain that we try to reduce the growth of Federal spending.

Our relationship with Israel is healthy and fundamentally sound. This is important, for there are difficult issues of considerable scope which we must address or which we might be called upon to address in the coming months. Let me mention three or four of these issues.

The first is the condition of Israel's economy. As each of you know, the Government of Israel has united behind a number of critical economic reforms. These reforms have not been easy to achieve. Such reforms never are. But they are necessary. The United States has offered advice from time to time, but understands that it is the Government of Israel which will necessarily have to make these decisions and the Israeli people who will have to make the necessary sacrifices.

I believe that there is strong sentiment in the Congress—as well as on the part of the President and the Secretary of State—to assist Israel in this process. We stand ready to consider and to adopt a supplemental authorization and appropriation to aid Israel in weathering the difficult months during which this process will take hold.

I am confident that in the very near future this process of reform will be complete, and that a supplemental funding bill will be sent to the President for his signature.

A second issue concerns the peace process in the Middle East. There have been hopeful signs of willingness on the part of several parties to sit down with one another. Let me state the principles which ought to guide this effort.

First—and paramount—the United States cannot substitute its own judgment for that of Israel or, for that matter, of any of the other parties. Israel is and must always be the judge of what will advance its own security.

Second, President Reagan has said to Arab leaders that they should sit down and negotiate directly with the Israelis. There can be, and there should be, no need for the United States to act as a surrogate in this process. If Arab nations cannot sit down and talk directly with Israel, then what promise do any future agreements really hold?

Third, there must be a continuing realization on the part of all parties that the United States remains vitally interested in the process of peace in the region. We cannot control it, and we cannot compel the parties to accept it: but neither can we leave any doubt about the depth of our interest in achieving genuine and lasting peace in the region.

We look to each of the nations of the Middle East to shoulder its responsibilities in bringing peace to the region. With some nations, to be sure, the prospects for responsible action are greater than with others. But we cannot exempt any nation from the obligations of civil discourse and adherence to time-honored norms of international behavior.

For this reason, I would call upon all nations who have not done so to end the formal state of war with the nation of Israel.

Many nations in the region have legitimate security interests which the United States can and must help to address. Doing so in a mannner which does not unsettle our friends and complicate their security planning is of course difficult to do in a region of the world which is small in size and which already contains enormous amounts of sophisticated weaponry.

We should introduce new weapons into the region only if we are certain that they are necessary and that they will genuinely further American interests. That is the standard which I have asked the administration to adopt in any future arms sales proposals which might be sent to the Congress.

Finally, let me mention one more matter. The war between Iran and Iraq continues. Although there is something of a stalemate at the moment, it is vital that we monitor this situation carefully. The consequences for the region of a substantial victory for either side are enormous and not altogether predictable. This is a matter which commands our continuing attention.

To this point, I have mentioned a number of issues in the Middle East which are of common interest to the United States and to Israel. But our relationship is not merely a regional one; it is a global relationship. There are many issues of common concern to men and women everywhere that are spoken to in our relationship.

We confront at this time a new phenomenon, a phenomenon which is both ugly and alarming: International terrorism. The systematic use of terror to achieve political ends by attacking innocent civilians is a deeply disturbing threat; it runs counter to the very premises of organized nations living in peace with one another and settling their differences as nations rather than as anarchic individuals. No nation has been threatened more—or responded more bravely and wisely—to terrorism than Israel. We all have much to learn from Israel's model.

In the coming months and years, it will be more and more critical for all nations opposed to international terrorism to band together to find ways of combating it. We must work together to share information, to share strategies which have been successful in combating terrorism, and in speaking out against it as an unacceptable way of furthering political ends. Surely, the wanton use of innocent people as a means, rather than an end, is the most thorough going violation of their human rights.

Terrorism would not thrive if it were not supported directly and indirectly by governments. That is why we must work to achieve agreement from all governments about this minimum standard of international behavior.

I regret to say that terrorism has found supporters within this hemisphere. Let me read to you from the recent statement of the National Jewish Coalition on Nicaragua:

"Members of European terrorist groups such as the Irish Republican Army, the Basque Separatists, ETA, the Italian Red Brigades and the West German Baader-Meinhof group are welcomed by Nicaragua and sheltered in the name of international solidarity."

The statement also says:

". . . The ties between the Sandinista government and the PLO are strong. The PLO works alongside East Germans, Bulgarians and Cubans in training the Nicaraguan security forces. In exchange, the Sandinistas have allowed the PLO to maintain a fully-accredited embassy in Managua. The only other country in the Western Hemisphere to allow the PLO such a privilege is Cuba. 'We say to our Brother Arafat,' Tomas Borge, the Sandinista commandante, told the PLO Leader, 'That Nicaragua is his land and the PLO cause is the cause of the Sandinistas,' "

Such are the problems we confront.

The nation of Israel has also expressed its global role with regard to issues of refugees and freedom of emigration. Whether it be with regard to Ethiopia or the Soviet Union or any other land that prevents free emigration, Israel has stood steadfastly with the United States as an example of a nation concerned with the rights of men and women everywhere. Freedom to emigrate is a fundamental right, a right which has been acknowledged by many nations in the Helsinki accords. Let us work together to ensure that it is a right in reality as well as a right on paper.

I have participated each year for the past several years in a moving ceremony in my own city of indianapolis to uphold and to demonstrate our common interest in Soviet Jews. It is imperative—especially at a time when the results have been discouragingly slim—to keep this issue before the conscience of the world. I am hopeful that the new Soviet leadership will relax restrictions on emigration so that we can return to the levels of previous years. No gesture would be more significant in our search for a better relationship with the Soviet Union. And no lasting progress with the Soviet Union is possible unless the issue of emigration is addressed by the Soviet Government.

Finally, let me conclude on a deeper note. Both the United States and Israel share a heritage which differentiates them from other nations of the World. Both were founded anew upon a principle or an idea. Many great nations exist in the world; most have come into existence through long historical processes, including historical accidents of geography and force.

The United States and the nation of Israel were—and are—products of conscious design. They represent the concrete expression of human striving to embody in government our principles and our ideals. This is at once a great advantage and a special burden. For we have ideals against which to measure our actions, and special demands of morality against which to measure our accomplishments.

We must remain true to these ideals. Our task will be all the easier if we do so together. We Americans who are gathered here this evening will, I am confident, continue to extend the hand of friendship, alliance, and humanity to Israel in the coming years. I look forward to doing so, and I thank you very much for this chance to speak to you this evening.●

JOHN P. PRICE, ARKANSAS' SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, May 5 through May 11, 1985 has been designated by President Reagan as Small Business Week. During this time our attention will be focused on the continuing contributions of the small business community, which remains the backbone of our Nation's economy. Small Business Week also affords the opportunity to honor a very special group of small business owners from across the country—those who have been selected as "State Small Business Persons of the Year."

My fellow Arkansans and I are extremely proud of this year's State honoree—John Porter Price of Monticello, AR. In 1965, at the age of 24, Mr. President, this lifelong resident of Drew County organized the J.P. Price Lumber Co., with just $5,000 in capital. That first year saw gross sales of $300,000. Today, the corporation boasts sales of more than $14 million.

The 20 years since John Price started his company have not always been smooth sailing, however. As with so many other small businesses, the J.P. Price Lumber Co., faced a series of problems in its early years, including the threat of bankruptcy. The company not only weathered this storm, but has gone on to gain a respected place among the lumber and timber related manufacturing industry.

John Price has proven to be a skillful innovator, designing and manufacturing a drum type debarker system of producing a uniform sized, clean—bark-free—wood chip, which has provided a solution to the problem of increased costs among the paper industry. The company has also developed a process whereby its products will be sold kiln dried and surfaced, rather than rough green and in need of further processing.

Mr. President, the J.P. Price Lumber Co., has emerged as a dynamic, creative force in the timber related manufacturing industry, due to the vision and ingenuity of its founder and president, John Porter Price. I am proud to honor him as Arkansas' Small Business Person of the Year.●

ABE STOLAR

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to speak today on behalf of an American citizen in the Soviet Union who has repeatedly been blocked from emigrating with his family.

Abe Stolar is a familiar name to many of us in this Chamber who have worked on his behalf for several years.

Abe Stolar, his wife Gita and son Michael have been trying to emigrate for over a decade. In 1975, they thought they had succeeded. That year, after working their way through the maze of regulations involved in the emigration process, the three members of the Stolar family were granted exit visas.

Filled with anticipation, the Stolars sent all their belongings to Israel and relinquished their Soviet citizenship. They were actually on the plane to Israel when they were suddenly called back and told they could not leave on the pretext that Gita had access to classified materials in her job. With all their belongings in Israel, the Stolars had to return to a lifestyle that was very limited, as they were no longer Soviet citizens and had very few resources.

Since then, Abe and Michael have been granted American passports. Gita has an Israeli passport.

Since 1974, many Members of both Houses of Congress have tried through different avenues to secure the Stolars' release. We have repeatedly written to the President of the United States, and the Secretary General of the Soviet Union. I introduced a resolution, which was approved by the full Senate in 1982, expressing the sense of the Senate that the U.S.S.R. allow the Stolar family to leave. As with too many refusenik cases, our efforts have been to no avail.

In the interim, Michael married a young woman, Julia, who is a Soviet citizen. They were wed in a religious ceremony. They tried to officially register their marriage but were not permitted to do so by Soviet officials. This fact played an important role in a recent development which raised many of our hopes.

The Stolars were asked to resubmit their applications. All four members of the family were hoping that this would be the first step in being permitted to leave the Soviet Union.

Instead, they were faced with a cruel and impossible choice. The Soviet Government reserved only three exit visas—for Abe, Gita, and Michael Stolar. They did not grant one for Julia. Since Soviet officials maintain Michael and Julia are not officially married, having blocked them from doing so, they see no reason to grant her permission to emigrate.

To make their burden even heavier, the Stolars were given a deadline to make the difficult choice of whether to split up the family or pass up perhaps their last chance at freedom.

Upon learning of the decision facing the Stolars, many of us promptly contacted Soviet authorities. A telegram initiated by Senator SIMON, who represents Abe Stolar's original home State of Illinois, and signed by 20 other Members, expressed disappointment that Julia had not been granted permission to emigrate, and urged General Secretary Gorbachev to intervene in this matter.

In a letter I sent by messenger to Ambassador Dobrynin on April 18, I said:

> The Stolar family should not be broken up. All four members should be granted permission to leave. If the lack of a marriage registration for Michael and Julia is creating a problem, then I urge Soviet authorities to permit them to register it.

It is my understanding that other Members of Congress also contacted the appropriate Soviet officials, and the recent House delegation headed by Speaker O'NEILL brought up the matter during their trip to the Soviet Union.

The deadline passed, and Julia was not granted an exit visa. The three Stolars did not use theirs. Abe and Gita did not want Michael to leave his wife, and they did not want to leave Michael behind.

The future of the Stolar family is uncertain. Abe and Gita are quite elderly, and one can only imagine the tremendous stress this situation has placed on them and the hopelessness they must now be feeling.

I wish the Stolar case were a singular event—a rare and tragic case. Unfortunately, this little drama has been replayed over and over again. So many people have applied to emigrate, only to be denied permission and then have to face the harsh life of a refusenik.

It is easy to be discouraged when dealing with the issue of human rights in the Soviet Union. However, even when concrete results are few and far between, I believe our continuing efforts on behalf of refuseniks are achieving something. We are letting the Soviets know that human rights is an issue of paramount importance to us and plays an essential role in all aspects of our relationship with that country.

We must continue to work on the Stolars' behalf. And, in every means open to us, we must continue to press the Soviet Government to improve their record on human rights and restrictive emigration policy.●

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF REA

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am proud today to remind my colleagues of the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration. Over the past half century, possibly no other program has done more to improve the quality of life in rural America than the REA.

The REA was created by Executive order on May 11, 1935, when only 10.9 percent of the farms in America had electricity. Today that figure stands at 99 percent. The authority to make loans for telephones was granted to REA in 1949 when less than 4 of every 10 of our farms had this service. Currently, over 95 percent of rural residents have telephones. The success in providing these necessary facilities is testimony to the success of the REA.

There is no better example, Mr. President, of cooperation between Government and private individuals than in the REA success story. This story epitomizes what the creation of the proper environment can do when Government and private enterprise work hand in hand to provide citizens with a standard of living they wish to attain.

Almost anyone in his or her middle years, and who grew up in rural America, remembers the excitement when electricity came to the farm. For many, this still remains their No. 1 thrill when one day the line was connected to the house and they went from kerosene to consistent light delivered by a flick of a switch.

This new miracle overnight transformed America's rural land into the most efficient and productive sector in our world's economy. It changed living standards, united rural communities, and started America toward prosperity.

Mr. President, this REA 50th anniversary is one of America's great success stories. And Arkansas has a hand in its development. All of us from my home State remember the contributions of Clyde Ellis, known to us in Arkansas as "Mr. REA," who was involved in those early days not only in Arkansas but on a level nationwide.

My colleagues should take notice today of what made this program so successful and unique, and we should apply this to some of today's projects. It was a unique relationship that fostered cooperation between Government and the private sector. The REA can truly define what a proper environment should be between our Government and its citizens.

I am proud, Mr. Chairman, to be a part of this celebration and to praise those who played a part in these wonderful accomplishments.●

DR. WALTER J. MOLO, JR.—RECOGNITION ON HIS RETIREMENT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on Friday, May 10, 1985, friends and admirers of Dr. Walter J. Molo, Jr., superintendent of the Pleasantdale School District No. 107 in Lyons Township, IL, will hold a testimonial dinner observing his retirement and thanking him for his splendid service to the cause of public education.

My senior colleague, Senator DIXON, and I know that you and our colleagues here in the Senate would want to join us in paying tribute to Dr. Molo on this occasion.

In the last 35 years, Dr. Molo has made an outstanding contribution to the field of education as a teacher, principal, and superintendent. His expertise encompasses subjects such as mathematics, biology, physical education, and health—areas of prime importance to students across the Nation.

Senator DIXON and I would like to take this opportunity to commend Dr. Molo for his 35 years of dedicated service to students and staff members of our public schools, and extend our best wishes for a pleasurable retirement.●

BOYS CLUB OF AMERICA

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I shall share with you some of the child protection activities of a major youth organization, the Boys Club of America. On January 7, and 8, 1983, my office was invited to participate in a 2-day seminar on child sexual abuse prevention whose goal was to identify the ways in which Boys Clubs of America might assist with this community problem. The Task Group on Sexual Child Abuse Prevention identified the following priorities:

To develop a position statement on the role of Boys Club of America in preventing and responding to child abuse with special attention to child sexual abuse. This position statement then would be shared with clubs and their local boards for support and endorsement.

To develop sample guidelines for clubs to review, modify, and adapt regarding the screening and selection of staff and volunteers and the handling and reporting of suspected or known incidents of child abuse inside or outside the club.

To expand existing Boys Club programs such as the Body Works and Help-a-Kid, and identify already existing resources which clubs can use to create an awareness of the problem among parents and club members and teach club members skills to protect themselves from sexual child abuse.

To provide training to Boys Club professionals to help them identify children who have been abused, report known or suspected cases of abuse, and respond in a supportive way to these children.

Since that time, many of these activities have been set in motion and others completed. For example, a proposal for the development of a safety and survival supplement to the Body Works program was introduced. This supplement will teach children how to protect themselves against accidents, crimes, violence, and particularly, child abuse. The Boys Club regional administrative conferences in the Midwest and Southeast will include sessions for the Boys Club members on child sexual abuse prevention. The upcoming national conference will include a presentation by the executive director of the National Conference of Missing and Exploited Children.

Mr. President, I ask that two articles by Boys Club of America be printed in full in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. They both seek to make children more aware of potential sexual child abuse through preventive programs.

The articles follow:

CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE PREVENTION

In the small community of Frankfurt, Indiana, five children were the victims of sexual abuse. Bill Wheeler, Boys Club Executive Director, decided to do something about it. After training from the local child protection services, Bill and his staff are conducting educational programs for Club members and for elementary school children throughout Clinton County.

The South Omaha Unit Boys Club of Omaha, Nebraska, is teaching boys ages eight to ten how to protect themselves from sexual abuse. The program, called "When Is A Hug Okay?" is made up of four classes taught by Boys Club staff and outside experts. According to Marc Dosogne, the program was developed in response to a community concern resulting from the murder of two young boys.

In Ventura, California, the Club's A.S.A.P. Program is aimed at reducing a child's vulnerability to sexual assault by training members to recognize and intervene in potentially dangerous situations. According to Executive Director Barbara Stricker, A.S.A.P. includes staff training, a parent workshop and programming for members. (See Connections, Fall, 1984 for a complete description of this program.)

The sad truth is that thousands of children are sexually abused. In the United States, there are more than 200,000 reported cases of child sexual abuse each year. Yet, many of these incidents could have been prevented had these children been taught some basic skills and understandings. Recognizing the extent of this problem and the fact that something can be done to prevent child abuse, more and more Boys Clubs are asking how they can get involved.

Guided by a task force of outside experts and Boys Clubs professionals, Boys Clubs of America is developing a comprehensive plan to help local Clubs address this problem from a professional as well as a program perspective. Clubs can expect more information and assistance on this important subject in 1985. In the meantime, however, there are steps that every Club can take right now to contribute to the solution to this problem.

FOR PARENTS

Helping parents to educate their children is an important link to preventing the problem of child sexual abuse. The fact is that many parents have great difficulty talking to their children about sexual abuse. Other parents simply do not see sexual abuse as a serious risk to their child. Still others are concerned about creating unnecessary anxiety for their child.

There are several avenues for reaching parents with vitally important information:

Copy, fold and distribute the enclosed brochure "Child Sexual Abuse Prevention: Tips to Parents."

Reprint the enclosed "Ten Tips for Parents on Child Sexual Abuse" developed by Boys Clubs of America. Print your own message and service mark on the back and insert in your mailings to parents and others.

Reprint these ten tips in the Club newsletter or place articles in you local paper.

Hold a seminar for parents. Boys Clubs staff can either join with a community agency to provide the training or arrange to have staff trained to conduct this seminar.

Although the Club is a likely place to hold a seminar, more parents might be reached by making presentations to organized parent groups such as Mothers' Clubs, Tenants Associations, service clubs, P.T.A. groups, church groups, etc. Arrangements also might be made with local corporations to enable employees time out of their workday to attend a seminar held at their worksite.

Invite parents to attend a screening of a film or other program on child sexual abuse which you plan to show to Club members. This technique allows the same message to be reinforced at home and in the Boys Club. The resource section at the end of this article includes recommended films and programs for use in the Club.

Whether your Club chooses to simply distribute the brochure, arrange a parent seminar or screen a film with parents, Club staff must be prepared to deal with inquiries from parents or situations where parents reveal information. In anticipation of this, Club staff should be trained to respond to parent needs. Staff should have a resource number handy to give to parents and to use themselves. This resource number, however, is no substitute for the training which is needed to prepare staff to respond to adults and children, too.

FOR STAFF

The trusting relationship between Club members and Club staff and parents and Club staff makes the Boys Club professional an ideal person to discuss this sensitive issue. However, before this happens, staff members themselves must be comfortable with the subject and knowledgeable about the best strategy for teaching about prevention and possibly dealing with a suspected case of child sexual abuse. This requires in-service training which often can be provided by community resources, including your local child protection services, mental health departments, rape crisis centers, Parents Anonymous, your local chapter of the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse and/or other child welfare agencies. Also, there are numerous resources listed in the resource section of the article which can help staff to learn more about this problem.

As staff begin to program in this area, they may encounter members who have been sexually abused. Training, therefore, should include information on reporting procedures, laws and referral resources. It should be clear to staff that sexual assault is a crime no matter how young the victim or who the offender is. There is an agency in every state that is mandated by state law to receive and to investigate reports of suspected sexual child abuse. To report suspected sexual abuse, staff should notify the mandated agency in the state where the child lives. The agency is listed in the telephone directory, usually under the state's Department of Social Services, Protective Services, Social and Rehabilitative Services, or Children and Family Services. If you have difficulty finding the agency, call the police department or dial the Child Help USA National Child Abuse Hotline (800) 422-4453.

FOR MEMBERS

There are a variety of curricula, film and resource materials already produced which you can use in your Boys Club. See the resource section for an annotated listing of films and curriculum guides. Also, many local groups have developed their own curricula and in doing so have involved parents, schools and other community groups. Local curricula which have been accepted in your community may be a good starting point. It is strongly recommended that Clubs draw on their community resources and experts to help select or design a program and deliver it, too. Regardless of the curriculum, any Boys Club sexual abuse prevention program should be conducted by trained Boys Club staff and/or community experts. Whatever program conducted or resources selected, the following concepts should be incorporated in your approach:

Talk to members about child sexual abuse before it happens. Children who know about child sexual abuse are more able to recognize dangerous situations, avoid them if they do occur, and tell a trusted adult when and if they suspect danger or encounter it.

Develop a mutual vocabulary so that you can begin to talk openly. Children need a basic working vocabulary for all body parts including names for the genital, anal and breast areas. Dolls and books can be used to teach children body parts. The Body Works contains many activities for teaching children about their bodies and is an ideal way to develop this mutual vocabulary. It is not easy to talk about child sexual abuse. Having a mutual vocabulary will make the job easier and is a good beginning point.

Warning members about strangers is not enough. In the majority of cases (85%), the child sexual molester is known to the child and the child's family. It could be a relative, parent, close family friend, babysitter. When you talk to members about sexual abuse it is important to explain that a child molester can be someone they know, like and trust.

Teach members about child sexual abuse along with other personal health and safety subjects. Just as you teach members rules to protect themselves from crime or accidents, as part of the Body Works program you could teach them the three basic rules to protect themselves against child sexual abuse:

Say no—Your body belongs to you. You can decide who touches it and should say no when someone—a stranger or someone you know—asks to see or touch the private parts of your body (those covered by a bathing suit including breasts, vagina/vulva, buttocks and penis) or shows you or asks you to touch private parts of their body.

Get away—When you suspect a problem, get away, run if you have to. Scream or yell while running toward people.

Tell someone—Immediately tell an adult what happened. Talk to a teacher, neighbor, parent or relative. If they do not believe you, tell someone else.

Let members know that it is not their fault if someone touches them in a way that confuses them. Remind members that even grown-ups are not always right. Explain that it is possible that even people who are nice to them might try and do the wrong thing.

Do more than just talk. "What If" games are good ways to help members work out solutions to dangerous situations. Some examples:

What would you do if:

A grown-up asked you to help find a missing dog;

You see a grown-up hanging around the playground for no special reason;

You are unexpectedly invited into a neighbor's home on you way home from school;

Your babysitter asks you to undress to play a special touch game;

Someone touches you in a way that makes you feel uncomfortable, asks you to take your clothes off, wants to take pictures of you without your clothes, or promises a special present if you let them touch you?

Storytelling is another good technique. Telling children stories in which a child is faced with a situation and avoids it provides a positive example—one they will remember.

If a member tells you about being touched, take it seriously. Always begin by believing what is said to you. Your response is important. Stay calm. Reassure your member that he or she is not to blame, they have the right to tell you what happened and that you will do your best to help them. Do not make angry threats about the offender. Remember that the offender can be someone the child knows, trusts and loves and threats can make him/her feel guilty about telling. You may be the first person the child approaches. Your response can have a tremendous impact on their healing.

Be sure you know the reporting laws and referral sources in your community. In each situation, be sure to follow your state reporting laws immediately. If the offender is a parent or step-parent, do not contact them before reporting the situation to the authorities. Follow the advice of authorities. Remember the assailant is likely to repeat this behavior as long as nothing is done.

PREVENTING CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE: OFFERING HELP A.S.A.P.

(By Barbara Stricker)

Sexual abuse of children is a serious problem that recently has received much national attention. Here is what one Boys Club is doing to prevent it.

Developed by Program Director Melinda Brown and initiated in mid-1984, the child abuse prevention program—called A.S.A.P.—at the Boys and Girls Club of Ventura, CA, is already well established. The Program designed is based on the Child Assault Prevention (CAP) project developed by an organization called Women Against Rape. The CAP program offers a practical, step-by-step formula with three main components:

Inservice training of staff,

A parents workshop, and Workshops for children.

The Boys and Girls Club of Ventura also has developed an ongoing schedule of follow-up programs. The follow-up programs were developed after nearly a year of research and testing.

The purpose of the program is to reduce children's vulnerability to sexual assault by training them to recognize and confront potentially dangerous situations quickly and effectively. The ultimate purpose is to avoid an assault.

TRAINING THE STAFF

The first phase of the program at the Boys and Girls Club of Ventura involved the inservice training of staff. A staff workshop, held in September, covered all aspects of the child sexual abuse problem, including the history, myths, and common factors of adult rape and child sexual assault; details about how to identify abused children and how to talk to a child if he or she comes to a staff member for help; the legal and moral obligations in reporting assault; and outside resources/intervention programs available to the Club. A hand-out sheet of local resources and telephone numbers was distributed to every staff member.

Staff were also given an in-depth explanation and demonstration of the upcoming child/youth workshops that were to be conducted as part of the program, as well as information on how to identify children who may be in crisis and/or may undergo stressful or emotional reactions to the workshops.

The purpose of the session was to inform and sensitize all staff about the child abuse problem, because the atmosphere of the Club offers so many possibilities for communication and interaction between kids and staff.

INVOLVING PARENTS

Once the staff felt comfortable with, and knowledgeable about this sensitive issue, a parents workshop was conducted. This workshop was held on an evening at the Club, and the format and topics covered were similar to those provided during the staff training. Reactions from parents about the program were very positive.

Two weeks prior to the workshop, the parents received a packet containing information about child sexual abuse, an invitation to attend the adult workshop and a permission slip for their children to participate in the upcoming children's workshop on sexual assault. Although participation by parents and children was less than 100 percent, attendance at both workshops was substantial.

Several parents who attended the workshop have children who have been assaulted, and they unexpectedly shared this information with the group. They provided some important clues to an abused child's behavior, and helped the staff to assess what additional program components and referral resources might be needed.

REACHING THE KIDS

The Club next began conducting workshops for its day-care members who are in grades kindergarten through fifth. Because of their age differences, children in kindergarten, and first grade were combined into one workshop group, and children in second through fifth grades were combined into a second group.

Both workshops consisted of a one-hour discussion about a number of aspects of child abuse, including: children's rights and feelings. Peer support, self-defense, saying "No!," telling a trusted adult, the Mighty Mouse Yell, "listen to your tummy," stranger-danger rules, tattling vs. telling, good touch vs. bad touch, good vs. bad secret, and bribe vs. gift.

Also included were seven potentially dangerous situations and positive reinforcement role-playing of possible solutions. One of the solutions kids were encouraged to role-play involved discussing an encounter with a trusted Boys Club staff member.

Reactions of the children to these workshops were mixed. Some kids needed to talk about the experience; others were basically nonplussed. But all responded to some degree and participated within their group. The kids were given opportunities to share what information they already knew about prevention and safety, and it was observed that there was wide variation in knowledge among them.

FOLLOW-UP PROGRAMS

Because it is strongly felt at the Club that the A.S.A.P. program will not be nearly as effective if there is no followup, a series of additional workshops were scheduled to be conducted throughout the upcoming year. Plans for these future workshop programs include:

Film and video presentations, including "Better Safe Than Sorry (Parts I and II)" and "Child Sexual Abuse: What Your Children Should Know" (see "Cues & Reviews," this issue).

Guest lecturers, including a police officer, telephone operator, social worker, and other individuals who have some responsibility for the safety of people in the community.

A workshop for children ages 12 and under.

A workshop for children over age 12.

Future workshops will include puppet shows, coloring contests and home safety guidelines appropriate to the age of the child. Older adolescents will be able to participate in discussion groups centered on safety topics and issues such as a date rape. All workshops are based on the safety theme.

Several additional A.S.A.P. program aspects will be incorporated into regular Club programming structures where a controlled group situation exists—such as the Keystone Club, sports teams, etc.

Overall, the program already has been so well received by staff, parents and kids that it contributed to a strong sense of accomplishment and satisfaction at the Club—and of doing something really useful for our members. And that is what makes the Boys Club experience so worthwhile.

PREVENTING CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE: TIPS FOR CONCERNED PARENTS

Recent public concern nationwide about the problem of child sexual abuse has prompted many Boys Clubs to review their programs and evaluate how and where child assault prevention programs might be added or expanded. There are some excellent resources available to Clubs (see "Cues & Reviews," this issue), as well as some established programs that can be adapted to the Boys Club situation.

Boys Clubs of America convened a task group of Club professionals and outside experts to study various aspects of this most sensitive and unfortunate problem. More information about the issue will be forthcoming.

In the meantime, here are some basic guidelines for working with children, both to help them become alert to potential danger and to help them talk with a trusted adult about an assault if one has already occurred. While these guidelines were prepared for distribution to parents, they can easily be adapted for use by Boys Club volunteers and staff.

1. Talk to your children about child sexual abuse before it happens. Children who know about child abuse are more able to recognize dangerous situations, avoid them if they do occur, and tell you when and if they suspect danger or encounter it.

2. Develop a mutual vocabulary so that you can begin to talk openly. Children need a basic working vocabulary for all body parts, including names for the genital, anal, and breast areas. Dolls and books can be used to teach children body parts. It is not easy to talk about child sexual abuse. Having a mutual vocabulary will make the job easier and is a good beginning point.

3. Warning your children about strangers is not enough. In the majority of cases (85%), the child sexual molester is known to the child and the child's family. It could be a relative, parent, close family friend, babysitter. When you talk to your child about sexual abuse, it is important to explain that a child molester can be someone they know, like and trust.

4. Teach your children about child sexual abuse along with other personal safety subjects. Just as you teach other rules to children, you should teach them the three basic rules to protect themselves against child sexual abuse.

Say no. Your body belongs to you. You can decide who touches it and should say no when someone—a stranger or someone you know—asks to see or touch the private parts of your body or show you or ask you to touch private parts of their body.

Get away. When you suspect a problem, get away, run if you have to.

Tell someone. Immediately tell an adult what happened. Talk to a teacher, neighbor, parent, or relative.

5. Let your children know it's not their fault if someone touches them in a way that confuses them. Remind your child that even adults can make mistakes. Explain that even people who are nice to them might try to do the wrong thing.

6. Do more than just talk. "What If" games are good ways to help your child work out solutions to dangerous situations. Some examples:

What would you do if:

A grown up asked you to help find a missing dog;

You see a grown up hanging around the playground for no special reason;

You are unexpectedly invited into a neighbor's home on your way home from school;

Your babysitter asks you to undress to play a special game;

Someone touches you in a way that makes you feel uncomfortable, asks you to take your clothes off for no good reason, wants to take pictures of you without your clothes, or promises a special present if you let them touch you? Storytelling is another good technique: Telling children stories in which a child is faced with a situation and avoids it provides a positive example—one they will remember.

7. Be aware of signs or symptoms of trouble. Most children don't tell anybody because they don't know how to talk about it, they think no one will believe them, or they are afraid to tell. Be alert for symptoms:

Is your child more withdrawn than usual, afraid to be alone, having trouble sleeping, waking up with nightmares, complaining of irritation of the genital area?

Does your child show marked behavior change toward a relative, neighbor, babysitter?

Does your child demonstrate "sophisticated" sexual behavior or exhibit seductive behavior?

Is your child expressing new fears? If so, be sure to listen to them and encourage your child to tell you why he or she is afraid.

8. If a child tells you about being touched, take it seriously. Your response is important. Stay calm. In a reassuring tone, find out as much as you can about the incident. Reassure your child that he or she is not to blame, is right to tell you what happened, and that you will do your best to offer protection. Do not make angry threats about the offender. Remember that the offender can be someone your child knows, trusts, and loves, and threats can make your child feel guilty about telling. What Uncle Joe did to you was unfair. We are going to get him help so he doesn't hurt you or anyone else again," is the right type of response.

If your child was physically molested, a medical examination may be a good idea. This is a good time to reassure your child that everything is OK. Law enforcement, special hotlines, or a child welfare agency should be contacted right away. Remember the assailant is likely to repeat this behavior as long as nothing is done.

9. Know where your children are at all times and know who they are with.

Check references of babysitters and others you employ to care for your children. Encourage your school to call the parents of absent students to make sure they are someplace safe.

10. There are many local sources of assistance and counseling. The local mental health center, department of child and family services (terminology will vary), police, your usual source of pediatric care, rape crisis centers and parent groups are all sources of help. Choose sources with which you and your child will feel most comfortable.●

INTERNATIONAL FAMILY PLANNING

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I read with concern the remarks made by my colleague from Alabama, Mr. DENTON, about the family planning community in his statement, "Concerning Abortions: Werner Fornos, the IPPF, the UNFPA, China and AID," which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on April 4, 1985. In all fairness, I believe Mr. Fornos should be given an opportunity to offer his own positions on these important issues for the RECORD. For this reason, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the testimony Mr. Fornos presented at the Senate Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee on April 3, 1985.

The testimony follows:

TESTIMONY FOR THE RECORD

(By Werner Fornos, President, The Population Institute)

Mr. Chairman, I am Werner Fornos, President of the Population Institute, the largest citizens network concerned with bringing global population and resources into a more equitable balance.

During the first four years of the current Administration, there was general support for the 20-year bipartisan United States international population policy objectives spanning five administrations.

The President voiced his concern in statements emanating from economic summit meetings expressing, along with leaders of other industrialized nations, his efforts to curb rapid population growth.

Secretary of State Shultz and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Kirkpatrick emphasized the necessity for Third World countries to contain their population growth in order to achieve their development goals and objectives.

Meanwhile, the U.S. population budget has been increased by some 53 percent, primarily due to Congressional actions.

But in the year that has passed since I last appeared before this committee, the Administration has reversed itself on this important issue involving the future of humanity.

A new population policy paper, drafted by the White House, concluded that U.S. population assistance for developing countries has been a failure and resurrected the old myth that development is the best contraceptive. This ignores the progress of countries such as Indonesia, Thailand, Mexico, Colombia, and several others that have brought their population growth rates down by 15-to-45 percent.

The President, ignoring the fact that world population is now growing at an unprecedented rate of 85 million a year, told a national television audience that the global population explosion has been "vastly exaggerated."

Through Administration policy, the United States has cut off funds to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the largest and most experienced non-government organization involved in family planning programs for developing countries.

And the Administration has made the decision to withhold $10 million of the $46 million Congress mandated last year for the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the most significant multilateral agency involved in family planning programs for the developing world.

A clause that the U.S. Agency for International Development has proposed for inclusion in cooperative agreements has drawn sharp criticism from a number of sources, including two of the country's most distinguished institutions of higher learning: The Johns Hopkins University and Columbia University.

Commenting on the clause, Estelle Fishbein, General Counsel for Hopkins, said:

"The University is particularly concerned that the clause in essence makes the recipient an insurer that AID funds will not be distributed to organizations advocating the use of 'abortion as a method of family planning.' At some point, however, in the chain of distribution of funds, goods, and services, it becomes unreasonable to hold the recipient responsible for the views espoused by a group which may have come into the possession of material orginally purchased with AID funds."

Dr. Allan Rosenfield, director of the Center for Population and Family Health under the Faculty of Medicine of Columbia University, commenting on the same clause, said:

"We are to require NGO sub-grantees and sub-sub grantees to sign a document which we at Columbia University would not sign ourselves if so requested, since it puts restrictions on how funds obtained from sources other than USAID are to be spent. While the U.S. government may put restrictions on ways federal funds are expected, we would object to limitations being placed on the legal use of other funds. Therefore this application of a double standard seems to me to be an untenable situation that puts in question the sovereignty of private foreign organizations.

"As a physician I would find it unacceptable, even unethical medical practice, to require family planning providers in a country in which the provision of abortion is legal, as it is for example in the United States, India, and Bangladesh, not to be able to counsel or refer for abortion services, when indicated.

". . . under the proposed clause, abortion as a method of family planning is, in effect, defined as any abortion unless it is necessary to save the life of the mother. To characterize an abortion performed for reasons of rape, incest, or to preserve the physical or mental health of the mother as a method of family planning is a definition to which I object strongly."

Meanwhile, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities is being punished because it provides some population assistance to the People's Republic of China. There have been press allegations of forced abortion and infanticide in China. By distorting the facts, opponents of the Chinese program have concluded—despite vigorous denials of high officials in the People's Republic of China (see attached letter from Zhang Wenjin, Chinese Ambassador to the United States, to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz)—that forced abortion and infanticide are part and parcel of China's family planning program.

Moreover, UNFPA denies that any U.S. funds, or, for that matter, any UNFPA funds have been used to support abortion or infanticide in China. No responsible source, not even the reporters who wrote the articles from which recent allegations about China's family planning program stem, have suggested that a penny of U.S. or UNFPA funds has ever been used for either abortion or infanticide.

Yet AID withholds $10 million appropriated by the Congress, approximately the sum UNFPA allocates to China, from UNFPA.

In response to U.S. sensitivity about the Chinese population program, the UNFPA, in August of 1984, established sub-accounts, enabling every nation to trace where its contribution goes. On the basis of this arrangement and "concrete assurances" that none of the U.S. funds would be used in China, the United States released $19 million, which it had impounded, to UNFPA.

When more recent allegations surfaced, via newspaper articles, the Administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development dispatched a team, composed of a member of the U.S. permanent mission to the United Nations, as well as representatives of the State Department and AID, to investigate the accusations. That team concluded that meticulous bookkeeping left clear audit trails as to where U.S. funds were used and that none were expended in China or for that matter, on abortion or infanticide.

The fact of the matter is that UNFPA has well established population and family planning programs in 120 countries, far exceeding the number of countries with which the United States has bilateral programs.

Turning to the International Planned Parenthood Federation we find that IPPF spends less than one percent of its funds—but not a dime of U.S. monies—on abortion related activities in developing countries requesting such assistance. In fact a 1973 amendment to the U.S. Foreign Assistance Act prohibits use of U.S. funds for abortion in foreign countries.

Curiously enough, there has been no evidence that IPPF has used U.S. assistance to fund abortions. AID has not made such an accusation, nor has any newspaper or any member of Congress. On the contrary, audits by the General Accounting Office and the AID Inspector General have not turned up a scintilla of evidence that population assistance is being misused.

Yet AID has cancelled $17 million scheduled for IPPF and says it will redirect these funds to family planning programs in Africa and Latin America where abortion is prohibited. Presumably these funds will be used for such projects as CP84.07A, which is "A Comparative Study of Polygamy and Fertility in Africa"—research currently underway with U.S. population funding. If that study concludes that polygamy is having a positive effect on slowing down fertility rates, will the U.S. government recommend polygamy as a method of family planning in Africa?

Mr. Chairman, IPPF is the largest and most widely respected non-government organization involved in family planning in the developing world. There are serious questions as to whether AID will be able to find programs that can use these funds as expeditiously or as effectively as IPPF has been using them over the years. The Administrator of AID has repeatedly stressed that non-government organizations are the most cost-effective means of providing development services. However, without a shred of evidence that U.S. taxpayer dollars are being used, or were ever used, for abortion by IPPF anywhere in the world, this organization has had one of its primary funding sources severed.

Mr. Chairman, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee recently approved an amendment to the 1986-87 foreign assistance bill that would cut off U.S. funds for UNFPA if that agency does not rescind its funding of China's population program. As you well know, Mr. Chairman, from your experience in working with the United Nations system, it is not within the power of UNFPA to make such a decision.

The 27th Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations in December of 1972 passed Resolution 3011, which places oversight for UNFPA with a 48-nation Governing Council, which includes the United States. Indeed that Council, with the concurrence of the United States, approved the current UNFPA assistance for China only last June for a five-year program.

In light of this action, the appropriate vehicle for getting UNFPA out of China is not legislative blackmail. Instead it is a relatively simple procedure once the Administration has made the decision that it wants to do this: Instruct the U.S. representative to the upcoming Governing Council meeting in June to call for the recision of that assistance. By demanding the impossible of UNFPA, the Foreign Relations Committee amendment reveals its sponsor's true motive—to cut off all funds for UNFPA.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that the recent actions directed at UNFPA AND IPPF are nothing more than subterfuge—a smoke-screen to conceal an insidious hidden agenda.

Under the guise of discouraging abortion, these actions will have exactly the opposite effect. The denial of funds to the most significant non-governmental organization and the most important multilateral agency that provide family planning services to developing countries will deprive countless poor women in developing countries access to modern contraception. Many of these women will resort to the only alternative available to them: life-threatening, illegal abortions. According to Columbia University, there were an estimated 40 million illegal abortions performed throughout the world last year. Yet an avowed anti-abortion U.S. Administration seems prepared to become the architect of an ironclad guarantee that many more illegal abortions will be forthcoming in the years ahead. Mr. Chairman, the Administration's new policy is not the crusade against abortion it purports to be. Rather, it is a crusade against family planning.

As the world grows by 85 million people a year, the United States should be pulling out all stops to accelerate its assistance for international population and family planning programs. Instead we are taking definite and deliberate steps backward. Steps to circumvent the will and intent of Congress. Steps to thwart the efforts of organizations that have established distinguished records in extending the human right to couples to determine the size and the spacing of their families.

The World Bank in its 1984 World Development Report categorically stated that "the significance of population growth in shaping the world is at least as great as financial crisis or political upheaval." Urging an immediate intensification of efforts to slow down rapid population growth in developing countries, the Bank warned that:

"Inaction today forecloses options tomorrow in general development strategy and in future population policy. Worst of all, inaction today could mean that more drastic steps, less compatible with individual choice and freedom, will seem necessary tomorrow to slow population growth."

The report goes on to say that the "main cost of such growth, borne principally by the poor in developing countries has been and will be faltering progress against what is still high mortality, and lost opportunities for improving people's lives."

Today, the majority of couples in developing countries still do not have access to family planning services enabling them to control their own fertility. The consequences are serious for individuals, countries and the global community:

Women bearing large numbers of children spaced closely together are themselves high mortality risks, and their children are twice as likely to die as children spaced at least two years apart.

Countries undergoing rapid population growth are susceptible to famine, uncontrolled migration and environmental deterioration, which in turn can result in widespread death, disease, civil disorder and degradation of human life.

Within the next two or three decades, the projected addition of over two billion people to the earth's population can result in a negative impact on the world's land, climate and food supply.

This grim situation is a problem as far reaching as any confronting humanity.

But there is hope. we can and are having an impact on the population growth problem.

As evidenced at the International Conference on Population in Mexico City last year, the overwhelmingly majority of the leadership in the developing countries recognizes that countries with uncontrolled population growth will find it difficult or impossible to attain their social and economic objectives.

All large developing countries are attempting to implement population programs that include family planning services. Every developing country has invited the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to assist in addressing its population problems.

Currently, for every $1 contributed by the international community, developing countries are committing $4 of their own scarce resources for family planning activities.

Advances have been made in the quality and variety of contraceptive options available to those desiring such services.

Major declines in birth and population growth rates have been achieved in some developing countries, even while death rates continue to fall.

The difficulties, however, are still of enormous proportions.

The current crisis in Africa dramatizes the potential for demographic catastrophe. At present growth rates, that continent's population will increase twenty-fold in the next century. Unless the population problem is addressed, efforts at short term relief and long term development will be overwhelmed, with tragic human consequences.

In large parts of the developing world, in addition to Africa, we see the ravages of deforestation, desertification and the extinction of plant and animal species. It will be difficult to halt, let along reverse, these trends.

International resources provided for family planning activities, including funds from the United States, are not keeping pace with increased requests for such assistance.

Family planning services are currently unavailable to 400 million couples who desire to plan the size of their families and the spacing of their children. Within the next 15 years, 355 million more women already born in the developing world will have reached childbearing age and be starting their own families.

Even seemingly small delays in making family planning service available can have staggering consequences. For example, Middle America's population, currently 104 million, would stabilize at an ultimate population of 200 million if a two-child family norm can be reached over the next 20 years. A delay of 10 years in providing the family planning services needed to reach that goal would instead imply a population stabilizing at over 245 million, a difference nearly equal to twice today's population on Central America.

Within the United States, individuals and organizations opposed to family planning have mounted political attacks against such assistance. These attacks often distort reality. For example, although not a single country in the world promotes abortion as a method of family planning, and although legislation has for years prohibited any use of U.S. government funds for overseas abortion activities, this issue is continually brought up in the family planning context. Ironically, it is the lack of family planning services that leads to increased infant mortality and to a high incidence of abortion.

The Population Institute firmly believes that all the world's couples must be given the ability to protect their own lives and those of their children.

We cannot, as a compassionate nation, tolerate a position of careless neglect. The world expects more of us. Each time a couple is denied the opportunity to plan its own family size and spacing, the life of the mother and unplanned child is put at risk. Cumulatively, the inability of couples to obtain family planning services threatens the lives of many people in the developing countries, and the quality of life of all the world's citizens.

The Population Institute urges this committee and the United States Congress to take the following actions:

1. A total of $320 million should be made available for international population assistance. This is the same amount authorized by the House of Representatives last year. In view of the unprecedented 85 million people now being added annually to the world's numbers, under no circumstances should program levels drop below the current $290 million. The amount we recommend will only modestly increase the availability of family planning services to the 400 million couples in the developing world desiring to plan the size of their families and the spacing of their children, but who lack the education and the means to do so. The absence of such services greatly increases the incidences of abortion and maternal and infant mortality.

2. The U.S. government should continue to support the efforts of nongovernmental organizations that provide cost effective, expeditious and flexible family planning services. Our government should not discriminate against NGOs for activities they conduct overseas with funds not provided by the U.S. government, so long as such activities are consistent with U.S. domestic laws. In particular, the Congress should mandate the restoration of funding for the International Planned Parenthood Federation.

3. Congress should maintain the earmark for the United Nations Fund for Population Activities of 16 percent of the funds made available for international population assistance. The rationale for the earmark is UNFPA's unique ability to provide assistance for population related activities to all developing countries. The UNFPA has voluntarily opened its books to U.S. government agencies, provided repeated written assurances that none of its funds support abortion activities, and strictly adheres to all applicable provisions contained in U.S. law. Capricious impoundment of U.S. contributions to UNFPA should cease.

4. The Institute supports the Agency for International Development's current policy on population assistance requiring that private agencies receiving AID funds must "include a description of the effectiveness and risks of all major methods of family planning and an agreement either to provide other family planning methods if requested or to refer couples to programs offering other methods as appropriate." This policy is important so that individuals can be assured the ability to choose a means of preventing unwanted pregnancies best suited to their own personal needs and beliefs.

5. The U.S. government, in funding its own and other family planning programs, should support and encourage increased involvement of women in the design and administration of family planning programs.

6. The U.S. government should increase its financing, both through domestic health programs and international family planning funds, of basic and applied biomedical research into new and improved methods of contraception, to help assure that a full range of simple, safe and effective contraceptive methods can be made available to all those desiring such services.

7. In designing and administering its population programs, the U.S. government should be guided by the principle, agreed to by all governments that participated in the 1984 International Conference on Population, that all couples and individuals should be able to "exercise their basic human right to decide freely, responsibly and without coercion, the number and spacing of their children and to have the information, education and means to do so."

In the six years I have been appearing before you, I have described the agonizing consequences of continuing rapid population growth in the poorest nations of the world. Today we are witnessing one of the most frightening portents of overpopulation become a reality—a living nightmare of hunger, starvation and death in Africa. Although Ethiopia has been the country hardest hit by the Sahel famine, the lives of more than 140 million Africans in 22 countries are still threatened by this devastating drought.

The current Sahel famine was predicted in a classified National Security Council report of December 10, 1974. Had we heeded this report's recommendations, there is little doubt that the cost in human lives would not have been nearly as severe as it is today. To say nothing to the monetary cost of emergency relief: the United States and other donor countries provided $1 billion in food aid to Africa in 1984; at least another $500 million will be required this year to alleviate the current crisis. If half or even a third of that amount had been spent on population assistance in Africa over the past decade, I am certain you would have seen a vastly different situation in the Sahel today.

In conclusion, I am compelled to remind the committee that this is not the first time drought and famine have taken their tragic toll in Sahel. Africa is threatened and other regions of the developing world—every region where population growth is vastly outpacing food production—are threatened as well. Unless we take immediate and positive steps to accelerate family planning service delivery in the Third World, where 92 percent of world population growth is occurring, the Sahel famine will not be the last. I am reminded of the words of the philosopher, George Santayana, that strike at the very heart of this matter: "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

THE EMBASSY OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA,
Washington, DC, March 9, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE SHULTZ,
Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY SHULTZ: It is my great pleasure to write to you with a view of promoting our mutual understanding. Here I wish to bring to your attention an issue of our common concern: the U.S. Agency for International Development has decided to withhold its contribution to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities on the ground that it wants to ensure "not a single U.S. dollar going toward abortion in China." I would like to point out that this reasoning is mainly based on the lopsided, distorted and exaggerated reports on China's cases of "abortion" and "infanticide" by certain American newspapers and these reports by no means tally with facts. I wish to make clear the following points:

1. The policy of the Chinese Government is that it is opposed to force and coercion of any form in the family planning program and it puts emphasis on publicity and education, and that the program should be carried out on a voluntary basis. Contraception is the first and foremost means of family planning, whereas abortions are only performed in instances of contraceptive failure and at the woman's request as a remedial measure. What is more, it is stipulated in our country that no abortions should be performed at the third month of pregnancy of thereafter. The afore-said policy of the Chinese Government has long been made public and was elaborated on by Minister Wang Wei and Vice Minister Zhou Boping of China's State Family Planning Council during their separate trips to the United States.

2. Though infanticide did occur occasionally, the Chinese Government has taken such cases very seriously which were promptly investigated and dealt with—according to law as soon as discovered. Moreover, Chinese press publicly expose and criticize these repulsive actions. Such cases are diminishing. After their China trips, many Americans confirmed that the policy of the Chinese Government is not to encourage, but rather to put an end to such cases. The few cases blown out of proportion by some American reporters do not present a true picture of China's family planning. As you know, Article 49 of China's Constitution stipulates in explicit terms that "children are protected by the state and that maltreatment of old people, women and children is prohibited." Furthermore, Article 15 of the Martial Law states that "infanticide by drowning and any other actions causing serious harm to infants are prohibited. On behalf of the Chinese Government, Premier Zhao Ziyang vigorously denounced such acts at the 5th Session of the Fifth National People's Congress in November, 1982. He said "the whole society should resolutely condemn the criminal activities of female infanticide and maltreatment of the mothers, the judicial departments should resolutely punish the offenders according to law."

3. The departments concerned of the Chinese Government have declared on a number of occasions that not a single dollar contributed by the UNFPA has been used by China in support of abortions. The UNFPA has also pledged not to use any of its fund to support abortions. Under such circumstances, it is obviously unjustifiable for the U.S. to withhold its contributions to the UNFPA on the ground of allegations of abortions. The "Mexico City Declaration of Population and Development" adopted at the U.N. Conference on World's Population last August requires that the international community actively support the world's population activities. The American delegates to the Conference expressed their approval of the Declaration and repeatedly pledged their support to the world's population activities. It is hoped that this positive statement will be put into practice by the U.S. authorities concerned.

I appreciate your concern for the Chinese people. If you have any questions regarding the above points, I will be only too glad to provide further explanations.

With very best regards,

Yours sincerely,

ZHANG WENJIN,
Ambassador of the PRC.●

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

FIRST BUDGET RESOLUTION FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business before the Senate.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 and revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal year 1985.

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I am pleased that our negotiations concerning the continuation of the REA Program have been fruitful. Much work has been done to achieve this result. I congratulate Senator ABDNOR on the role he has played and I am glad that I have also had the opportunity to make known my concerns and I thank the distinguished majority leader and the chairman of the Budget Committee for their attentiveness and responsiveness regarding this vital program and to the concerns all of us have expressed. Each of these Senators have a well known and well established record of support for the REA Program.

I do have a question of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee about one or two areas of the agreement affecting the telephone program which I believe may need some further clarification. Mr. Chairman, the exchange of letters between WRECA, Majority Leader DOLE, and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget make no reference to the telephone portion of the REA Program. However, I assume that the agreements reached concerning the removal of the phaseout assumption and removal of the assumption of an increase in program interest rates applies equally to the telephone segment of the program. Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. Under the agreement worked out by the leadership on REA, the Dole amendment has been modified to assume reductions in loan levels. It no longer assumes the terms in the Senate-White House agreement that would phase out REA programs and increase interest rates on direct loans to Treasury's cost of borrowing plus 1⅛ percent. These modifications apply to both the telephone and electric loan programs.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the Senator for that assurance. Additionally, it is my understanding that the fiscal year 1985 rescission of lending authority and the reduction in lending authority from the current baseline in fiscal year 1986 in the insured and guaranteed loan programs apply just to the electric side of the program and that telephone loan levels for fiscal year 1985 will remain unchanged and for fiscal year 1986 loan levels in the insured, guaranteed and rural telephone bank programs will be frozen at the fiscal year 1985 authorized levels. Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. As the Senator knows, the budget resolution does not set individual loan levels. However, the reductions in loan levels contained in this modification were worked out in the context of electric loan levels, not telephone loan levels. The assumed loan levels for the telephone program for fiscal year 1985 will remain unchanged and for fiscal year 1986 will be frozen at 1985 authorized levels.

Mr. ANDREWS. One of the key considerations in reaching this accommodation relates to an agreement between the administration and the majority leader that the administration withhold final approval of any proposed rules or making administrative changes which would restrict the ability of systems to obtain loan funds until the appropriate congressional committees of jurisdiction have had a full opportunity for review, oversight, and comment in the process. I want to be certain that the terms of this understanding would apply to rules affecting both the electric and telephone programs or either of them. Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. Certainly, the understanding also applies to telephone programs. It was our intention to exclude the telephone portion of the program from the operation of the agreement.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the chairman for these assurances regarding the REA Telephone Program. I understand also that the REA administrator presently has under consideration a number of other proposals adversely affecting both electric and telephone programs. I hope that the administrator would not implement any of these either until the appropriate congressional oversight committees have been fully informed as to the effects of these proposals on the program and have an opportunity to comment or hold hearings. Mr. President, we are all aware of the fine record of the REA and the continuing job it is doing in providing quality electric and telephone service to rural areas. Everyone in the country benefits from this program. Good telecommunications and quality electric service are essential national resources to the well-being of our country as a whole. Again, I want to thank all of those concerned for their cooperation and understanding in reaching this accommodation which will by its terms effect significant budget savings without adversely impacting the operation of either program.

RECESS UNTIL 3:15 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand that a number of Senators on each side are contemplating amendments but are not prepared to offer those amendments. It seems to me, rather than having a quorum call equally divided, it would be in our best interests, because most of us on each side have meetings going on right now, we stand in recess until 3:15 p.m. with the time to be equally charged to each side.

Thereupon, at 1:13 p.m., the Senate recessed until 3:15 p.m., whereupon the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. GOLDWATER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 and revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal year 1985.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, when we recessed at 1:15 p.m., it was my hope, and it is still my hope, that Members would be flocking to the floor to offer amendments. We think there may be one struggling to get here now, and there may be amendments from the other side of the aisle.

In the meantime, while this particular Member is making his way to the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 54

Mr. NICKLES. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, I will shortly send to the desk a resolution which would urge the Senate, and basically show the support of the Senate, to modify the Walsh-Healey Act.

The Walsh-Healey Act basically mandates that in work performed for the Government, time and a half be paid above 8 hours.

The purpose of our resolution is to say that Government work being done would conform basically to the Fair Labor Standards Act, which mandates that time and a half be paid for work over 40 hours a week instead of 8 hours a day. The effect of this is to say that you can do work for the Federal Government under the same rules that you can do work in the private sector; and, as a result, you can save a lot of money.

Right now, if you want to have some flexibility in your work force—incidentally, there is a lot of management and a lot of labor that would like to have this opportunity. They would like to work, say, four 10-hour days. Right now, you cannot do that without paying a premium, because you have to pay time and a half above 8 hours a day.

If you are going to work four 10-hour days, you will have to pay time and a half for 2 hours each of those 4 days. If you figure that up, it will be an additional premium of an hour a day. So the cost of complying with Walsh-Healey, if you are going to work four 10-hour days, is a 10-percent increase. That is ridiculous.

Many contractors and many individuals working for contractors have said, "Give us the flexibility, because we want to have the opportunity to work other than a 5-day, 8-hour-a-day week. Give us that opportunity so that we can have 3 days off. We want to go fishing or camping or want to travel around, and would like to have that flexibility."

Management likes it because they do not have to open their plant on the last day and can save on energy and management costs.

All we are saying is that they would have the flexibility in order to take advantage of that saving.

Our amendment is basically a sense of the Senate. We are not changing the outlay figures. We have had substantial reduction in budget authority for defense of other functions. If we adopt this resolution, we will be directing the various committees, primarily the defense authorization committee, to say, "Here is a place where you can save money."

The Presiding Officer [Mr. GOLDWATER] knows that you can save this money and would not lose one missile or one thing in defense.

You would be giving them the opportunity to build more and save the taxpayers' money. This would not cut anything but would give an opportunity to save money. It would direct the various committees, including the Armed Services Committee, to say, "You can save a substantial amount of money."

It was estimated by CBO that, by changing the Walsh-Healey overtime requirement, we could save $1.9 billion in budget authority over 3 years—$600 million in 1986, $600 million in 1987, and $600 million in 1988. They said that in outlays we could save $100 million in 1986, $300 million in 1987, and $600 million in 1988, for total outlay saving of $1 billion.

So we can save in budget authority $1.9 billion; we can save outlays of $1 billion, and not reduce the quality of services in the military, DOD, or any other major function where we are doing Government contract work.

So I hope the Senate will agree to the resolution. It would be giving some guidance to the Armed Services Committee and other committees that this is a place where you can save some money without jeopardizing jobs or contracts.

Mr. President, I have a list of construction collective bargaining agreements that contain provisions for four 10-hour work weeks. All of these contracts are with union shops where they have four 10-hour work weeks right now. These union contractors and union workers right now are prohibited from doing Government work unless they are willing to incur the 10-percent wage penalty. I think we should give them the opportunity to do Government work and not prohibit it, as is presently the case with Walsh-Healey.

I hope the Senate will concur with this resolution. I think we can save some money. People all the time are saying, "Hey, cut some waste out of the Defense Department." This is one area where we can do it.

I have talked to Secretary Cap Weinberger about it. He said, yes; he does not like this requirement.

This way we would be freeing up something like a half billion dollars a year in budget authority just for Defense alone.

This is one area where we can save some money. I think it makes sense, and I hope that the Senate will concur with the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of construction collective bargaining agreements containing provisions for four 10-hour-day work weeks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTRUCTION COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS CONTAINING PROVISIONS FOR FOUR 10-HOUR-DAY WORKWEEKS [1]

[1] This list does not include the many project agreements which have been negotiated which provide for 4-10 hour workweeks.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I will state the resolution so those who might be listening in their offices might know what it is.

At the appropriate place in the amendment add the following:

"It is the sense of the Congress that overall Federal outlays should be reduced and it is assumed that legislation should be enacted to conform the overtime requirements under the Walsh-Healey Act and the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act with the Fair Labor Standards Act and it is further assumed that the resulting outlay reductions shall be utilized to achieve the previously agreed-upon program and outlay savings."

Again, I repeat that we are talking about $1.9 billion in budget authority and $1 billion in budget outlays.

AMENDMENT NO. 54

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk for myself and Mr. ABDNOR and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] proposes an amendment numbered 54 to amendment No. 43.

At the appropriate place in the amendment add the following:

"It is the sense of the Congress that overall Federal outlays should be reduced and it is assumed that legislation should be enacted to conform the overtime requirements under the Walsh-Healey Act and the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act with the Fair Labor Standards Act and it is further assumed that the resulting outlay reductions shall be utilized to achieve the previously agreed-upon program and outlay savings."

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I favor the amendment. But is it correct, then, that the time in opposition goes to the minority leader?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Therefore, the half hour that we have is in the control of the proponent Senator, the junior Senator from Oklahoma; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? If neither side yields time, time shall run equally.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABDNOR). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NICKLES. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-one minutes to the proponents.

Mr. NICKLES. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I believe the only other speaker on this side who wants to be heard is Senator ARMSTRONG, a cosponsor of the resolution, and who has also been a leader in trying to make some reforms on Government contracting. I will ask that the time be equally charged on the amendment and wait until the Senator from Colorado appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If neither side yields time, time will be equally charged.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield the floor.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma, who I understand has control of the time on this resolution, yield to me?

Mr. NICKLES. I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Colorado, who is a cosponsor of this resolution, whatever time he may need.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank my colleague for doing so.

Mr. President, I rise first to congratulate the Senator from Oklahoma for bringing this amendment to the attention of the Senate. It is not very often that we have a chance to go on record in favor of something which will not only save money, but which will make life more interesting and better for employees, make it possible for employees throughout the country to be more productive. It is not one of those no-win situations and, having been a part of a number of no-win situations in the past few days where, no matter what you did, you were bound to make somebody mad, I think this is really commendable. It is an important idea, and I think the Senator from Oklahoma has done us a great favor by bringing it to our attention.

Mr. President, I do not think I need to belabor the issue, but I want to be sure our colleagues understand fully what we are trying to do. The Walsh-Healey Act applies to Federal contractors supplying goods to the Government in excess of $10,000. This includes manufacturers supplying army blankets, repair shops servicing Government vehicles, or industrial companies supplying various products to the armed services, and so on. The proposed change would require statutory enactment, which is not included in this amendment, but the statutory enactment would amend existing law to eliminate the present requirement for overtime compensation for hours of employment in excess of 8 hours a day. I believe it was 5 years ago that Congress moved to permit this kind of flexible schedule for Federal workers but, at the time, we neglected to do so for workers in the private sector who are employees of Federal contracting companies. So this would, in essence, conform, if enacted, the requirements on these companies and their employees to that of the Federal Government itself.

What is the payoff for adopting such an amendment? According to the Grace Commission, we might be talking about saving as much as $1 billion between now and the next decade. The CBO estimates that such reform could save $550 million a year. So, we have something that really does have substantial cost implications and which, I am very pleased to report, is extremely popular not only among companies but among working men and women with whom I have talked about this matter. A lot of companies, those who are not Federal contractors within the meaning of the law, have already bargained with their employees to establish different kinds of work schedules—4-day workweeks, or in some instances, even 3-day workweeks. It has proven to be very economical and, in some cases, very popular.

We understand it will not require employees to do this or require certain work schedules, it simply makes it available as an option for those who are most affected in the private sector.

I am told the administration is in favor of this resolution and it has been warmly endorsed by a number of individual companies, trade associations, and labor organizations throughout the country. So, I see no reason not to go forward with it.

In fact, Senators may recall that on at least one occasion, the Senate has actually passed legislation to this effect, only to see it lost in conference. So, I think the Senator's suggestion that we express as a part of this budget resolution our support for this commonsense, cost-saving idea is a very good one and I am very proud to join him in cosponsoring this proposal.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time expires at 5:06 p.m.

All time on the amendment has expired. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be charged equally. Even though no time is supposed to be charged at all in a situation like this, there is some impression around that there might not be a rollcall vote for a little while, at least.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOSCHWITZ). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, may we have order? I think we are going to move forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts may proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Oklahoma relates to a sense-of-the-Senate resolution directing that it is the sense that the Congress——

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, could we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, the Senate is still not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is still not in order.

The Senator may proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, just a brief comment on the specific resolution. The resolution of the Senator from Oklahoma states:

> It is the sense of the Congress that overall Federal outlays should be reduced and it is assumed that legislation should be enacted to conform the overtime requirements under the Walsh-Healey Act and the Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Act with the Fair Labor Standards Act and it is further assumed that the resulting outlay reductions shall be utilized to achieve the previously agreed-upon program and outlay savings.

With regard to Walsh-Healey resolution, I would make several points. First, the Walsh-Healey issue has been before our committee for several years. We held hearings in 1981. We've never held a markup on a bill, however. And the minority has never obstructed or objected to committee consideration of a Walsh-Healey amendment.

Second, I seriously question the outlay savings assumed in the CBO analysis prepared for Senator NICKLES. That analysis admits that Walsh-Healey savings is, in part, "guesswork." I will want to explore this issue in committee.

It is my understanding that the Senator from Oklahoma intends to schedule a markup in the Labor Subcommittee in the near future. At that time I will want to explore a number of issues before voting on final passage, including the extent to which employees truly favor so-called flexible work arrangements, as proponents of this measure claim and that they are not being coerced to participate in these programs.

I also want to provide for an effective date that protects existing collective-bargaining agreements and ensures that employers who honor such agreements are not placed at a competitive disadvantage.

With the understanding that there will be an opportunity to address these issues in committee I have no objection to, and intend to support the resolution.

Mr. President, we have had legislation to do exactly what is expressed in the sense-of-the-Senate resolution before the Human Resources Committee for a number of years. I am not familiar with the time that it has actually been considered by that committee. I do believe that the studies that I have seen, Mr. President, particularly the most recent GAO study, would indicate—and the GAO study actually stated—that any savings was really a matter of guesswork as to what actually could be saved if we implement this legislation.

But, nonetheless, I think that that committee ought to have an opportunity to consider the legislation. I would certainly work with the Senator from Oklahoma in ensuring that the committee does review that legislation.

I would certainly think that in any kind of consideration we would want to provide at least some way and means, if it is the will of the Senate, to adopt this approach so that those contracts which are in existence at the present time that have been signed in good faith would not put employers at a competitive disadvantage.

Mr. President, there are other issues, as well, which I would think that the committee would want to consider. But I certainly feel that we would urge our colleagues to support this amendment, and then I will look forward to working with the Senator from Oklahoma and the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Utah, in addressing this issue, and hopefully we will be able to bring it back to the membership in a way which could have the broadest degree of support.

So I would hope we could move toward a vote and accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired on the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, on this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS]. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." Therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST] is absent due to illness.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] is absent because of illness.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 86, nays 5, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 42 Leg.]

PRESENT AND GIVING A LIVE PAIR, AS PREVIOUSLY RECORDED—1 STEVENS, AGAINST

So the amendment (No. 54) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if I could have the attention of my colleagues, one of the objectives today has been to chip away at the clock. We have now used 4 hours 41 minutes. I hope that we could get at least 7 hours. I have discussed with the distinguished minority leader that we each take 1 hour off the resolution. That would be 6 hours 41 minutes. That is close enough to 7 for me.

Mr. President, there will be no more votes today.

Shall I make that request?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, that request is excellent. That would leave this side with 8 hours 45 minutes and leave the other side with 4 hours 52 minutes. Is that correct, may I ask the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is correct.

Mr. BYRD. The distinguished ranking member on this side is agreeable.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on each side on the resolution be reduced by 1 hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if there are any amendments on the other side, I would be happy to at least lay one down. If not, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] has an amendment he would lay down and then we can go off the resolution and finish up with morning business.

Mr. BYRD. There will be no more rollcall votes?

Mr. DOLE. There will be no more rollcall votes this evening.

Are there amendments on that side of the aisle?

Mr. BYRD. There will be some amendments. I do not know if anyone is prepared to lay one down now.

Mr. DOLE. If there is no objection, if the distinguished Senator from South Dakota can lay one down, I do not believe it will be very controversial.

AMENDMENT NO. 56

(Purpose: Sense of the Senate that the amount of nonfarm income that can be offset by tax losses from farming should be limited and revenues derived should be used to reduce individual tax rates)

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR], for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 56.

At the end of the pending amendment add the following:

It is the sense of the Senate that revenues should be increased and it is assumed that tax legislation will be enacted to limit to the national median family income the amount of farm loss which may be deducted against nonfarm income, and it is further assumed that revenues derived from enactment of such legislation be used to reduce individual income tax rates and to assure that full-time, family-size farm operators will not be disadvantaged by unfair competition from high-income taxpayers with substantial nonfarm income.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this is an amendment that is just being laid down tonight and will be discussed tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with discussing the amendment at this time and I will discuss it tomorrow at the proper time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONFEREES ON AUTHORIZATION OF NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to H.R. 1617, the National Bureau of Standards authorization, passed by the Senate on April 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1617) to authorize appropriations to the Secretary of Commerce for the programs of the National Bureau of Standards for fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. GORTON, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. RIEGLE conferees on the part of the Senate.

GALLUP POLL: BUDGET CUTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, while we are waiting for the distinguished Senator from Florida to bring up a matter, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the recent Gallup poll results on how the deficit is viewed by the American people. Fifty-eight percent characterize the current deficit as very serious; an additional 23 percent see it as fairly serious, while only 5 percent perceive the deficit as not a serious problem, and 14 percent say they have not given the matter much thought.

It suggests that 81 percent of the American people polled see the deficit as very serious or fairly serious. That is a rather sharp change in the past 12 months. I think it is an indication that, in the final analysis, there will be a deficit reduction package passed by the Senate, hopefully a bipartisan package.

I ask unanimous consent to have that clipping printed in the RECORD at this point. It has more details on the poll.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GALLUP POLL: BUDGET CUTS

PRINCETON, NJ.—Congressional debate on the 1986 federal budget begins at a time of growing public perception that the current deficit poses a very serious threat to the nation. The public increasingly is giving highest priority to cuts in defense spending to reduce the deficit.

In the latest (mid-April) Gallup Poll, 58 percent characterize the current deficit as a "very serious" national problem and an additional 23 percent see it as a "fairly serious problem:" Only 5 percent perceive the deficit as "not a serious problem," while 14 percent say they haven't given the matter much thought or don't express an opinion.

The new survey also finds two-thirds of Americans (66 percent) favoring cuts in defense spending, up from 61 percent last December and 57 percent in January, 1983. On the other hand, public support for each of three other deficit-reduction measures has fallen or remained static since the earlier surveys.

Currently, 39 percent favor cuts in government spending for social programs, not significantly changed from the 41 percent recorded in both 1984 and 1983. Raising income taxes is now favored by 18 percent, a significant reduction from 23 percent in December, but unchanged from 1983.

By far the least popular means of reducing the deficit, cutting entitlement programs, has steadily declined in public favor, from 12 percent in 1983 to 11 percent last year to 9 percent at present.

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,525 adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period April 12-15. For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction.

CONDEMNATION OF ACTIONS OF ETHIOPIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 155 has been held at the desk. It was introduced by me on Friday.

I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be added as cosponsors: Mr. LUGAR, Mr. DOLE, and Mrs. KASSEBAUM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, my understanding is that this resolution has been cleared.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield, I have been advised that it has been cleared by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. LUGAR] and the subcommittee chairperson [Mrs. KASSEBAUM].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 155) to condemn the actions of the Ethiopian Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, this is a resolution that condemns the Ethiopian Government for the burning of the Ibnet refugee camp and the deaths that resulted therefrom. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 155) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

Whereas the current extended drought in more than twenty African countries has placed ten million or more people at risk of starvation; and

Whereas the United States and other donors around the world are engaging in an unprecedented campaign to curb further deaths in Ethiopia and other African countries; and

Whereas the success of these emergency assistance efforts depends largely on the cooperation and support of the authorities within each country receiving assistance; and

Whereas there remains continuing evidence of widespread brutality, diversion of food assistance, and disruption of relief efforts by the Government of Ethiopia, including destroying numerous villages and farms; and

Whereas the Government of Ethiopia has brutally removed people from the famine relief camp at Ibnet, forcing more than fifty thousand famine victims, including thousands of young children, into what can be described as a "death march": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) condemns the actions of the Ethiopian Government in the forced evacuation of the Ibnet refugee camp; and

(2) condemns the continuing actions of the Ethiopian Government to disrupt and divert international relief efforts to help the needy in Ethiopia.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, MAY 7, 1985

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, May 7, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE AND SENATOR MOYNIHAN

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent that there be a special order in favor of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] be afforded a special order on tomorrow for not to exceed 15 minutes following the special order by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following that, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to exceed the hour of 10 a.m., with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicate with the amendment (No. 56) just laid down, that will be the pending business when we go back to Senate Concurrent Resolution 32 at 10 a.m. We hope to have 2 hours running off the clock between 10 o'clock and noon.

ORDER FOR RECESS FROM 12 NOON UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 12 noon on tomorrow, the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RESUMPTION OF BUDGET RESOLUTION; CONSIDERATION OF S. 484

Mr. DOLE. Following the recess, the Senate will resume the budget resolution. As I have indicated previously, at approximately 4 p.m., it will be the intention of the majority leader to turn to S. 484, the Saccharin Labeling Act, hopefully under a time agreement. That involves the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] and the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH]. I understand they have worked out some kind of time agreement where there will be a couple of votes. I hope we will have those two votes, but no votes on the resolution after 4 p.m. tomorrow.

I have just stated my intention.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

If we cannot get a unanimous-consent agreement on S. 484, then following disposition of S. 484, whatever it may be, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes each: Senators DURENBERGER, PRESSLER, COCHRAN, and ANDREWS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. I asked unanimous consent that four Senators be recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have no objection. I just wondered if the Senator would be good enough to yield for a question.

Mr. DOLE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. METZENBAUM. As I understood it, he said he wanted to take up S. 484 at 4 o'clock.

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. It is my understanding that there will be at least one vote, maybe two votes, in connection with that.

At the same time, the majority leader indicated there would not be any votes after 4 o'clock. Is it his intention to debate S. 484 at 4 o'clock and have the vote the following day? I do not really care, Mr. President, but I would like to be informed.

Mr. DOLE. I indicated previously that there would be no votes after 4 p.m. I meant to limit that to the budget resolution. I understand there will be one vote; I hope we would have it before 4 p.m.

Mr. METZENBAUM. So the other votes on S. 484 would be after 4 o'clock.

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unanimous-consent request for recognition of four Senators is agreed to.

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move the Senate recess until 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 6:46 p.m., the Senate recessed until Tuesday, May 7, 1985, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, alcoholism and other forms of drug dependence are being identified increasingly as the fundamental causes of a growing list of national social and individual health problems.

Some of the most exciting and sensitive work in understanding and preventing the growth of these problems is being done in the Detroit metropolitan area.

I had the privilege of meeting this week with one of the pioneers in this work, Sis Wenger, an alcohol/drug education consultant from Birmingham, MI, in my congressional district prior to her testimony before the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families.

Ms. Wenger is convinced that alcoholism and drug abuse are the keys to solving the problems of juvenile delinquency, child abuse, neglect, sexual abuse, and other forms of family violence.

As many as one of five or six students in every classroom lives in a home with an alcoholic or drug addicted parent, she says. Further, two-thirds of all incidents of family violence occur in those homes.

As manager of a community education program run in conjunction with the Junior League of Birmingham and Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit, Ms. Wenger has helped reach over 70,000 people in the Detroit area since 1981.

Mr. Speaker, Government can provide help and encouragement. But the real solution to the epidemic growth of these tragic personal and family crises lies in the dedicated and caring work of people like Sis Wenger. I commend her testimony which follow for your consideration.

PREVENTION OF ALCOHOL ABUSE IN AMERICAN FAMILIES

Thank you for the invitation to address you this morning. I am grateful for this opportunity to share with you some of the insights I have gained in the past eight years as I have worked with school professionals in developing progrms related to alcohol and other drug abuse, its impact on families and appropriate school system responses to it.

I work in the area of alcohol/drug abuse prevention on three fronts: (1) as a consultant to school systems in the development of prevention programs; (2) as a professional educator running workshops and seminars for administrators, counselors and other school professionals; and (3) as the manager of a community education program jointly sponsored by Henry Ford Hospital, its residential chemical dependency treatment center Maplegrove, and by the Junior League of Birmingham, Michigan.

Since 1981, this latter program has reached over 70,000 people through community education presentations given by trained volunteers on a wide variety of alcohol/drug related topics. Volunteers receive an extensive education over a six-month period and then present between 25 and 60 individual programs per week throughout the greater Detroit area as a public service. They reach teachers, students beginning in Grade one, parents and community groups. Their work has resulted in an increasing demand for more information and in hundreds of families getting assistance for their pain. Last week, the Junior League of Detroit voted to add its volunteer and financial backing to this program, and we expect that the number of programs per week and people reached will escalate accordingly.

Why am I committed to teaching about alcoholism and about children who are growing up in families affected by it? In the mid-seventies, I was involved with the Junior League of Birmingham, Michigan, in several community projects which had been designed, in cooperation with area courts and agencies, as juvenile delinquency prevention programs and child abuse and neglect prevention progi ams. What became increasingly apparent was that alcoholism was clearly in the background of most of the clients being served through all of these "prevention" programs. Equally clear was the fact that alcoholism was not seen as a primary cause or precipitating factor in these serious family, judicial and societal problems, but rather as a related issue at best or, more commonly, as an additional result of the stresses which appeared to cause the abuse, neglect and/or delinquency.

Intelligent, well-educated and caring professionals in all of these programs were often making inappropriate decisions and designing ineffective policies and procedures because they did not understand the nature of addiction and its impact on children. I believed then—and am more convinced now—that, until there is widespread understanding of this disease and its devastating effect on families, schools and communities, uninformed and inappropriate decisions will continue to be made in our criminal justice system, our family relations courts, our medical facilities and our educational systems.

I believe that we must dispel the myths and defuse the stigma that continue to attach so doggedly to this perfectly blameless disease. Only then will we be able to effect attitudinal and behaviorial changes in the adults who have power and influence over our children so that those at highest risk—both genetically and environmentally—of becoming abusers of alcohol and other drugs are helped to understand their reality and given permission to ask for help. Every week, I am reinforced in that conviction; let me cite a few recent examples:

Greg, age 16, is in a Detroit-area training school for assault and battery. Greg broke his alcoholic step-father's leg in a rage over the step-father's sexual abuse of Greg's younger sister. The step-father left the state and was followed by Greg's mother who is co-dependent as a result of her husband's alcoholism. Greg's sister was placed in a foster home. No one in the family is being treated for the family's primary problem—alcoholism. Greg's life, however, has been consistent: he has been beaten, punished, prosecuted and incarcerated for what he has done to fight back against his alcoholic stepfather's cruel drinking-related behavior. The adults in the systems which have touched Greg's life have followed procedures; but, because those adults did not understand the nature of addiction, the many opportunities to intervene in Greg's life throughout his earlier years were missed, and he has never received the help he needed. (Over sixty percent of the boys in Greg's hall at the training school have at least one alcoholic parent.) We are building more prisons in Michigan to accommodate our Gregs.

Teddy is five years old; he has visible scars from the beatings he has received from his marijuana-addicted father. Last week, Protective Services investigated Teddy's lot. The mother is not present as a result of her addiction to other drugs and an impeding divorce. She also found that Teddy is groggy until late morning in Kindergarten because he is inhaling the marijuana smoke from his father and his friends well into the night. Teddy was relieved when he was removed from his home and placed with a grandmother whom he loves and trusts. The next day, Teddy's father promised the worker that he would stop smoking pot and beating his son, so she returned Teddy to his father and asked the teacher to call if Teddy comes to school bearing evidence of any further abuse. All of the systems worked according to established procedures. Yet, Teddy is afraid to go home, and one of my colleagues is teaching him how to dial the police. The Protective Services worker cares about Teddy and wants to believe his father, but she doesn't understand the nature of addiction. Teddy has learned at age five that he can't trust the adults in his life to keep him safe.

Jenny, age 12, lives in a beautiful neighborhood; a few years ago, the courts awarded custody of Jenny to her alcoholic mother, whose drinking was not an official issue in the divorce proceedings. Jenny's mother works and drinks; often, she does not come home until the middle of the night. When she's sober, she's a lovely lady. Jenny confided in a neighbor, who contacted the school in an effort to bring additional support to Jenny. The concerned but uneducated principal confronted Jenny and her mother about the report. Jenny is now forbidden to contact the neighbor, who is the only person who has tried to give her some validation and support. She sits alone many nights, waiting and praying that her mother arrives unharmed, because a principal doesn't understand the disease of addiction and, therefore, couldn't understand that Jenny's first allegiance was to her mother whom she loves despite her disease.

I believe that there will be no genuine prevention of juvenile delinquency, child abuse, neglect, sexual abuse and other forms of family violence until the powerful alcohol/drug abuse connection—especially the parental alcoholism connection—to these major family and societal problems is acknowledged and addressed in prevention programs. Further, I believe that prevention of alcohol abuse (and its shadow, the disease of addiction) will remain an illusion until we deal with it in the context of the family system and understand that primary prevention means intervention as early as possible, with education and support, for children who live in homes with a chemically dependent parent, other adult, or older sibling.

Estimates vary, but at least one of every five or six students in every classroom in America lives in a home with an alcoholic (or other drug-addicted) parent. These children usually "look good" to the outside world and, consequently, seldom get their confusing—often nightmarish—reality validated and almost never get help for their deep emotional pain. Only about 15 to 20 percent of them will surface in the school setting as an "acting-out" child; in their cases, the usual result will be that the behavior will be addressed, the real problem—alcoholism—will go unacknowledged, the pain will continue, and they will begin to show up in our juvenile justice system and traffic courts.

The majority of children from families affected by chemical dependency will do what these children have done for generations—keep their fear, pain and emotional isolation to themselves. They will not even share it with their nonalcoholic parent or other siblings. Often, they do not know that alcoholism/chemical dependency is the name of what is happening in their homes because they have not been given accurate, age-appropriate information about this disease. They don't know that there are millions of children just like them and that they have a right to talk about what is happening to them and to ask for help. Let me give you one last recent illustration:

Last month, a middle school counselor in one of my workshops told me about Susan. Susan is 11 years old and is showing signs of emotional and social immaturity. Her academic work has been slipping for the past two years, and her mother had come in to discuss the possibility of holding her back. Susan is generally a quiet, cooperative student, seldom drawing attention to herself. Because of what the counselor was learning about family alcoholism in the workshop and the increased risks for abuse and incest faced by these families, she asked different questions than had been asked in the past. When Susan blurted out "I hate my father!", the counselor was able to help her to talk. Today, Susan and her parents are receiving therapy for the alcoholism in their family, and Susan is getting help for the devastating trauma she has suffered as the victim of incest at the hands of her alcoholic father. We know that—when incest victims first reach out tentatively for help—if the cry for help is not heard, they will generally not ask again for at least five to seven years. Because the school counselor did understand about the nature of addiction, she has saved Susan at least five to seven years of humiliation, shame and powerlessness; she may also have saved her from being driven into alcohol or other drug abuse to escape her pain and from depression and/or suicide later in life.

Dr. Claudia Black, this nation's most widely respected expert on children of alcoholics, has found in her research that mothers in alcoholic homes are four times more likely to be violent and fathers ten times more likely than other parents. Sibling abuse is twice as likely in children of alcoholics as in the general population. When the teenager is the chemically dependent person in the family, teen-to-parent abuse and sibling abuse rises dramatically.

L.J. West, MD, reporting in the Annals of Internal Medicine, 1984, stated that two-thirds of all incidents of domestic violence are found to be related to alcohol. Dr. Black and Dr. West's findings correlate with similar statistics when the right questions are asked. Yet, the final report of the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence, published in September 1984, mentions alcohol only twice in its 155 pages. The report's preface states that "the problem of family violence is a very human one, and it is amenable to human solution." The problem of family alcoholism is also a very human one. Family violence is too often related to family alcoholism, and the relatonship is tragically ignored in some of our most important research. The results are predictable: policies and procedures are established which ignore a prinicipal precipitant in many domestic violence cases, the disease of alcoholism. The disease goes unaddressed, and the families continue to suffer.

Dr. Ian MacDonald, ADAMHA Administrator, testified before this committee in March that "the rate of separation and divorce among alcoholics is seven times that of the general populations; and two out of five domestic relations court cases involve alcohol." It is also important to note that adults who once grew up in an alcoholic home and do not become alcoholic are still over-represented in our divorce courts because they have often been emotionally deprived by not receiving love in their childhood and, consequently, did not learn how to give it. Additionally, they learned not to trust as children and not to express their feelings. Carried into adulthood and marriage, these deficits in establishing healthy relationships are devastating.

We know instinctively that all children deserve to have a secure and nurturing home, free from the stresses that can inhibit their growth and development. We also know that the children who grow up in alcoholic homes are deprived of the emotional security and nurturing they need, at the very least. Many are also not physically secure. These children are at highest risk of becoming chemical abusers and chemically dependent themselves—for heriditary and environmental reasons—and are over-represented in pediatrician offices with stress-related disorders and in run-away shelters across the country. They develop a very high tolerance for inappropriate, often bizarre, behavior, which makes them most likely to marry another person who grew up in a similar home and, therefore, most likely to marry a person who becomes chemically dependent. They live in a world filled with broken promises, dishonesty, unpredictability, blaming and shame. Most of them develop sophisticated survival skills in order to endure.

Until decision and policy makers in the systems with affect the lives of children clearly understand the nature of addiction and its impact on families, we will not be doing genuine prevention work—in the area of alcohol and other drug abuse, or in delinquency, child and spouse abuse, incest and divorce.

What have we learned in the Detroit area about prevention, and what have other school systems and communities around the country learned? We have learned that:

Education about alcohol and other drugs must begin with the adults who have power and influence over children, and that such education must include (1) a thorough understanding of the disease of addiction, how to teach about it so that children living with it feel they are being given permission to label their reality for what it is and to ask for help; and (2) how to recognize young people who are abusers of alcohol and other drugs and assist them and their parents to get the help they need;

School systems must have student assistance programs to which the child from an alcoholic family can be referred for guidance and support, and where students in trouble because of their own use can get help. We know that these programs should include support groups beginning in early elementary school;

Accurate, age-appropriate information on the disease of addiction, its family dynamics and its early warning signs should be given to children beginning in the early grades so that, when applicable, they can name what they live with and learn that they are not to blame and have resources available to them to help them cope. We have spent millions of dollars in determining the early warning signs of cancer and other fatal diseases and in educational programs to interrupt and prevent these diseases. I believe we should do no less for this fatal disease;

Excellent educational materials have been developed and made available to schools—many with the assistance of NIAAA—and that results are still questionable when one reviews the evaluation literature, even when these materials have been accompanied by quality technical training for teachers in the use of the materials; and Adults who have not been prepared emotionally to respond to children who surface during alcohol education classes with information about their home life will often become emotionally paralyzed and unable to give these children the direction or support they need.

We are increasingly convinced that, in order to have genuine prevention programs, we must change the way in which systems relate to children by providing them with loving responses to their pain and education and support at the youngest possible age.

What I am espousing is long-term attitudinal and systems changes with outcome measurements that will be different from the commonly stated short-term goal of reducing alcohol/drug use by teenagers in a specified number of years. I believe that real prevention does not entail "quick fixes" and will not be effected by piece-meal educational programs which exist separate from the context of family life and family chemical dependency. Real prevention will involve ongoing education and intervention, from the top down, in any system which hopes to make a difference.

I once heard Abigail J. Healy, who has worked in recent years as the Alcohol Issues Liaison in the White House Drug Abuse Policy Office, say that "children of alcoholics feel like a chalk mark on a black board and that all the adults around them have erasers." In the greater Detroit area, we are working on changing the educational systems so that some of those erasers will disappear, and thousands of children will learn that they can hold the chalk that will write their own script for their life by talking about their pain and asking for help.

We hope to begin having the same impact soon on the judicial system and in the social welfare system. Community Interventions of Minneapolis has worked in many other communities to start the same process of intervention to prevention. I have a dream that the process will roll across this country—and that you will help.

Thank you.●

THE 1985 FARM BILL, PART THREE: LIMITATIONS ON U.S. AGRICULTURAL TRADE ABROAD

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the export demand for U.S. agriculture abroad grew so rapidly during the seventies it is difficult for policymakers and farmers to imagine anything less than a consistently stimulated international market. After all, this demand for U.S. agriculture grew from $7.8 billion in 1970 to $44 billion in 1981. Furthermore, this unprecedented growth necessitated the cultivation of an additional 70 million acres of American farmland.

Most significantly, this surge inspired thousands of economically aware and cost efficient "could be" farmers. I emphasize "could be" only because many of our farmers who are experiencing financial trouble today were yesterday's "could be" farmers who, in spite of the staggering costs of capital investment, were urged by the Government and local lending institutions to "cash in" on this opportunity.

Unfortunately, this opportunity has evolved into something short of sustaining for the farmer. In fact, over the past 4 years, the volume of U.S. exports fell by more than 20 million tons while the value of those exports decreased from $43.78 billion in 1980 to $38 billion in 1984. The market over which we once held the upper hand has introduced capable competitors. Our competitive edge for many commodities has been diminished.

In designing the 1985 farm bill, we, the architects, must realize this trade shift and, if it is to be at all effective, we must identify the problems which continue to plague our marketability abroad. Thus, at this formative point in the development of a new farm bill, the focus of our attention ought not to be so much on whether or not it's possible to regain the short term prosperity that ag trade brought us in the seventies but, rather, on trying to understand the complicated changes in the agricultural world market which have permanently altered our agricultural export potential. A brief examination of the political and economic shifts worldwide will make this point painfully obvious.

In the seventies, for example, the deflated dollar ensured an edge for our farmers. Today, in fact, the opposite is true. Of all our handicaps abroad, the inflated dollar is presently the most crippling. In simple terms, the cost of American agricultural products has risen in the world market beyond competitive limits. Countries importing American corn were paying 40 percent more in 1983 than in 1980. The cost of soybean and wheat rose 60 percent in the same period. This economic impact has had far-reaching implications.

For countries capable of developing their own produce, high import costs have justified internal production. Since 1980, for example, the Chinese have increased their grain and cotton production by 25 and 75 percent respectively. Furthermore, for many countries, this increased production has resulted in commodity surpluses which are being introduced into an already flooded international market. For other countries in search of cheaper commodities, the flooded world market provides almost limitless alternatives.

Domestically, cheap import prices have compounded the problem. Many businesses, in order to compete at home, are buying parts abroad in the hopes of manufacturing a less expensive product. However, this import increase has further funded our $70 billion trade deficit which has ballooned to $130 billion last year.

Additionally, domestic support factors in many respects further our disadvantage abroad. Price support systems, although necessary to maintain the American farmer in the costs of an American economy, are still in excess of international market levels. One of the best examples of our present lack of international price competitiveness lies in my State's indigenous dairy industry. Last year, the U.S. price per pound for butter was $1.57 compared to a world price of no more than 92 cents. Cheese sold domestically for $1.40 per pound, yet abroad it brought less than half that amount. Finally, nonfat dry milk sold for 92 cents per pound at home. It brough 42 cents per pound abroad.

This differential has led the administration to believe that a reduction in support prices for dairy and target prices for other commodities will enhance our marketability abroad. Despite the immediate international trade benefits from this strategy, the implicit hardships are borne completely by the farmer who simply cannot forego income for increased sales.

Aside from the ill impact of an inflated dollar, other domestic factors prevail which continue to undermine our export potential. Production costs are accelerating more rapidly for the American farmer than ever before. According to USDA, in 1950 about 55 cents of each farmer's dollar went to factors of production. By 1982, that amount had risen to nearly 80 cents on the dollar. Relative to the cost of production in competing countries, the American farm product typically "loses out."

Argentina and Brazil are significant grain competitors not because of product superiority, but rather because they are able to pass considerable savings to the importer. This increased production of less expensive commodities has reinforced the world surplus into which expanded American exports are not well received.

Strong trade barriers have all but crippled U.S. potential for successful world trade. Presently 90 percent of all countries buying grain have either tariffs, import subsidies for their farm products, or import restrictions. Our current concern regarding Japanese trade practices are a prime example for, despite our imports of Japanese products being at an all-time high, the administration estimates that at least $10 billion of U.S. commodities are being kept out of Japan. "Fair trade" in our present world economy is, at best, a questionable concept.

American foreign policy has done little to assist our efforts abroad. Trade embargoes against the Soviet Union in 1980 and repeated embargoes against China have not only limited our market and indirectly subsidized competitive economies vying for the export opportunity but have also ultimately undermined the American farmer's credibility. Obviously, an unreliable supplier is a less variable one.

Finally, we should realize that incomes in the lesser developed countries are growing half as rapidly as they grew during the seventies. During this period these countries continued, at unprecedented rates, to import American commodities. This recent decline in growth has led to a corresponding decline in demand.

Much of this is the result of the international liquidity crisis provoked in August 1982 when Mexico announced it could not meet interest payment due on nearly $85 billion in foreign credit. The Mexican crisis compelled banks in developed countries to cut back on new lending to heavily indebted countries. In response, many lesser developed countries have not only reduced imports in order to conserve funds, but have also increased exports in order to gain hard currencies. Since 1981, for example, wheat production in developing countries has increased 7.1 percent. At the same time, lesser developed countries have decreased their imports from the United States by over 14 percent. In Latin America alone, U.S. agricultural exports have declined by nearly $2 billion from 1981 to 1982.

This diminishing rate of consumption shows little sign of changing. Although export demand for American farm goods will no doubt continue, the American farmer can no longer rely on increased exports for exclusive relief of his agriculture surplus.

The inflated dollar, high production cost, and recent Government intervention are but a few of our internal handicaps. Trade restrictions, waning import demands, and increased commodity surpluses are factors abroad over which we exert little control. Whether domestically induced or internationally imposed, these handicaps are unique to the eighties and, unfortunately, they represent the world in which we must live and conditions to which we must adapt if we are to survive economically.

And, we must adjust quickly. Real farm income has already fallen to near-1930 levels and gross farm income is 16 percent below 1974 levels. Even if American farmers had plotted such an ill-fated course, it is doubtful that they, alone, could have produced such a collective catastrophic end.

Thus, even though the future success of the American farmer will continue to be inextricably linked with international trade, we must come to appreciate not only the immediate opportunities this relationship affords but also the inherent limitations it imposes.

Clearly, merely accommodating a temporarily inflated export demand in the future—as we did in the seventies—could again be the American farmer's undoing. There are international markets for American agricultural commodities. We simply must be realistic about their use and limitations.●

AIRBAGS

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents on Tuesday provided eloquent, moving, and convincing testimony—borne of the most tragic firsthand experience—on the compelling need for airbags in American automobiles.

This testimony moved me so much that I include it in the RECORD at this point so that I can share it with my colleagues:

STATEMENT OF ANNETTE PALUSKA, CRASH VICTIM

I almost died from brain damage received in a head-on collision in 1980. Paramedics thought I was dead when they found me.

Only three out of a hundred live through what happened to me. Out of those three who live, only one comes back to reality.

By becoming a crash statistic, I unwillingly cost my insurance companies over $60,000 and my family over $50,000. Taxpayers had to foot some minor expenses as well.

In America, economic costs for motor vehicle trauma victims totals over $22 billion annually in medical care, lost wages, and lost productivity.

In the early 1970s, air bags had been proven nearly 100 percent effective in head-on and front-angle collisions. These collisions account for the majority of all deaths and serious injuries resulting from car accidents. To condemn air bags because they are not effective in side or rear collisions is like saying we should eliminate the polio vaccine because it doesn't prevent cancer.

Learning of the high effectiveness of air bags warranted use of an air bag in my car. So, in 1974, I desperately tried to get an air bag installed in my little General Motors Vega. The government and the automobile industry, however, would not let me buy one. At that time, only big cars like Cadillacs and Toronados could carry air bag safety.

This infuriated me. Small cars could get in wrecks, too.

According to a 1983 New York Times magazine report, Americans had a one in ten chance of being in a car wreck within any one year. This year car crashes will kill 27,000 people—about half the number of Americans killed in Vietnam, the fourth bloodiest war in American history. We are erecting monuments to those who died in Vietnam, but where's the monument to all those killed on the highways?

How could the government allow the automobile industry not to produce lifesaving air bags—the technological vaccine against deaths and serious injuries from automobile accidents?

I believe that intentionally withholding air bags from the American public is premeditated murder. I refuse to be an accomplice to this horrendous crime. That's why I'm speaking out for air bags.

People always ask me, "Why weren't you wearing your seat belt the day of your wreck?" I was wearing my seat belt. But it didn't save me. It was ripped from the floor.

I believe in seat belts. Ever since getting my private pilot's license, I've been programmed to buckle up. It just makes sense to do that every time I get in a car.

The day of my wreck, when the hospital called my parents, they were told, "You better come quickly if you ever want to see your daughter alive again. She's probably going to die." Mom and Dad rushed to that emergency room and watched me lying there attached to all the life support systems. They only knew I was their daughter by the birthmark on my right foot. They talked to me constantly because they wanted me to know they were there, cheering me on. I never responded. Except once. My sister, Kay, was holding my hand. She noticed my heartbeat speed up on the monitor by my bed. "Look," Kay exclaimed, "she knows we're here! She's gonna make it!" That kind of scene kept the fire and hope alive in my family's hearts that I would survive.

I was attached to life support systems because my brain wasn't working. My lungs didn't want to breathe for me. When I came out of the coma, doctors removed my respirator. I had graduated. I was now a vegetable.

People could not recognize me. One day a friend came to see me. He walked right past me sitting hunched over in a wheelchair in the hallway outside my room. He didn't realize it was I who was slobbering, drooling, and spitting out daisy petals from a bouquet I was eating.

Some people thought I'd stay that way for life. But I didn't. My condition improved again. I became a baby. Then I grew into a hyperactive child—with total amnesia.

Lucky for me, Mom and Dad slept in the chairs of my hospital room so they could give me their full attention, 24 hours a day. If they hadn't, my mental confusion and total disorientation would have brought straitjacketing far more often than it did.

No one could communicate with me. I was way out in the ozone. My perception of reality was distorted. I went through all sorts of crazy phases. After my intense pig-out stage, I went on a starvation binge. I refused to take any food or drink—especially medicine. You see, I felt I was being held captive as a guinea pig for the poison research my prison guards were performing on me. At times, I tried escaping in hospital laundry baskets.

Fortunately, my petite, five-foot-tall mother stepped in. She literally forced lithium down my throat. She almost lost a finger in the process. Although I was terribly hurt and a 100-pound weakling, I could still fight. I had managed to break out of three strait jackets at that hospital.

It was that "sanity medicine" Mom gave me that helped me finally come back down to earth.

After I was released from the hospital and had recuperated enough to drive again in 1981, my parents bought a 1978 Cadillac to ease my deathly fear of driving. They thought an air bag could be retrofitted in it. By 1981, however, not even Cadillacs could carry air bags. It was an instant replay of 1974. I couldn't get that protection.

How could General Motors Safety Research and Development Lab report "highly acceptable" air bag effectiveness yet at the same time deny me the opportunity to pay for the lifesaving air bag option? This was particularly frustrating since a 1979 GM survey found that GM customers preferred air bags though consumer cost would be four times that of the most popular style of automatic belt.

I did not understand how in 1981, our elected officials could support the automobile industry's fight against lifesaving air bags.

I don't understand how some legislators can feel the same way in 1985. It appalls me that elected leaders think lives are cheap and do not merit air bag safety. How could anyone put such a low value on human life?

In a recent Los Angeles Times article, I learned the automobile industry will be splitting $415 million of their profit among 13,000 of their executives. It depresses me that they'd rather spend money giving huge bonuses than saving lives—lives of the consumers who make them those profits.

Although reporting record profits, car manufacturers still vehemently oppose the air bag option because of cost. I don't buy the "cost" argument against air bags. Mass-produced air bags are estimated by Breed Corporation of New Jersey to cost $68 at a volume of 1,000,000 units. That consumer cost will be offset by reduced insurance premiums.

Pretty much everything has changed in my life since that wreck. Superficially I know I appear undamaged. I'm thankful for that. But you can't tell a book by its cover. Every move I make reminds me how that air bag I wanted so badly back in 1974 could have prevented the pain and suffering I feel today.

I now have double vision—permanent double vision. There's no cure for the third cranial nerve damage I have. I thought about showing you how weird I could look if I weren't so vain about my eye. I concentrate on making my eyes look normal.

I know it would be highly advantageous to the air bag issue if I didn't look so good and normal. But things that are going on with me are happening internally.

I've become afflicted with a bone disease doctors relate to medications required to keep me alive after the accident. This disease has meant operations and long recuperation which have only added to my financial destruction that started when I had the accident.

I'll never experience the wonderful things I used to do—being a Miami Dolphins cheerleader and working with TV choreographer June Taylor.

I've written off ever winning another tennis tournament. And those glorious five-mile runs on the beach at sunrise and sunset are out of my life forever.

The one thing that hasn't changed for me is this:

I still want an air bag,

but, as you know,

I still cannot get one.

How can Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole be driving around right now in a Lincoln with an air bag while preventing other Americans like me from carrying that same lifesaving protection in our cars? This upsets me. Americans are paying her salary.

There's only one way we Americans can get safer cars. We must demand our rights to air bags. We chose you legislators to represent us and to protect our freedom.

And believe me, when you suffer brain damage like I have, you lose every bit of your freedom.

After what I've been through, I wouldn't wish head injuries like brain damage on my worst enemy. Not even Lee Iacocca. It's people like Iacocca who wished head injuries on me by denying me the air-bag I wanted in 1974.

Head injuries are exactly what the American government and the automobile industry have on the drawing boards for 180,000 Americans each year.

I certainly don't want that happening to my family and loved ones or to you and yours. That's why I'm testifying today. I'm representing all the brain damaged victims who weren't so lucky as I. They can't speak their minds because they're either still out in the ozone where I was, or they're dead.

I am proof that seat belts are not adequate protection. Here's a video that illustrates how seat belt wearers often suffer head, face, and torso injuries—even death—in car accidents.

Picture a loved one—a child—in the victim's seat in these crashes you're going to see. One out of a hundred babies born will die in a wreck. [VIDEO] Pretty ugly, huh? Now maybe you understand why I refuse to remain a victim of the automobile industry.

I demand the air bag option be made available. I didn't have it and that almost cost me my life. I'll be paying for not having that air bag for the rest of my life.

That's a helluva price. That was totally unnecessary.●

POLISH CONSTITUTION DAY

HON. FRANK ANNUNZIO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, May 3 was the 194th anniversary of the first democratic Constitution of Poland, and the Polish National Alliance sponsored 3 days of ceremonies to commemorate this event, including the 94th Annual Polish Constitution Day Parade.

Along with many other public officials, civic and community leaders, and officers of the Polish National Alliance, it was my pleasure and honor to be on the reviewing stand for this year's parade.

The Constitution Day Parade stepped off from Wacker Drive and Dearborn at 12 o'clock noon, and consisted of 135 units with 8,000 marchers, including flag bearers, orchestras, bands, drum and bugle corps, and many colorful floats. This year's floats emphasized the 175th anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest composers of music for the piano, Frederic Chopin; the 125th anniversary of the birth of the great Polish pianist and statesman, Ignacy Jan Paderewski; and the 45th anniversary of the brutal massacre of 10,000 Polish officers and intellectuals in the forests of Katyn. The grand marshal of this year's parade was Lt. Gen. John L. Piotrowski, commander of the 9th Air Force Base in South Carolina.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my good friend of many years, Aloysius Mazewski, president of the Polish American Congress and the Polish National Alliance, along with all the officers and members of these organizations on their many fine contributions to the Polish-American community, helping to make our country strong. I would like also to extend my congratulations to Helen M. Szymanowicz, vice-president of the Polish National Alliance, and chairman of these May 3 observances, for her hard work and diligent efforts which helped to ensure the great success of this anniversary celebration.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of Chicagoans viewed the parade in person in commemoration of the heroic struggle of the Polish people to uphold the principles of freedom in the 1791 Polish Constitution, and at this point in the RECORD, I would like to insert the 3-day program which took place in Chicago to celebrate Polish Constitution Day. This program follows:

THE NINETY-FOURTH ANNUAL PARADE COMMEMORATING POLAND'S CONSTITUTION OF MAY 3, 1791

FRIDAY, MAY 3

10:30 a.m.—Wreath laying ceremony at Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko monument in proximity of Adler Planetarium, 13th Brief program.

SATURDAY, MAY 4

12:10 p.m.—Parade steps off from Wacker and Dearborn, marches South on Dearborn to Adams and disbands. Reviewing stand located on West side of Dearborn at Washington, (Daley Center Plaza area).

135 units 8,000 marchers—bands, drum and bugle corps—floats.

SUNDAY, MAY 5

10:00 a.m.—Offering of Mass at Holy Trinity church, 1118 N. Noble street.

Principal Celebrant: Rev. Casimar Tadla.

Con-Celebrants: Rev. M. Pawelko, Rev. Kazimierz Wronka.

Deacon: Rev. Dr. Edward Rozanski.

Homilist: Rev. Kazimierz Wronka.

Choir under direction of: Joseph Labuda.

IMMEDIATELY AFTER MASS, IN CHURCH, PATRIOTIC PROGRAM

Welcome.—Casimir Jasinski, Commissioner District 12, Polish National Alliance.

Poem—Alfred Karwowski and Waclaw Jasiak, Rycerze Niepokolanej.

Remarks.—Aloysius A. Mazewski, President, Polish National Alliance and Polish American Congress.

Remarks.—Edward Derwinski, Counselor of State Department and former U.S. Representative.

The Polish Constitution of 1791, adopted only a few short years after our own Constitution stands out not only as one of the greatest achievements in Polish history, but also as a milestone in the history of mankind. It peacefully transformed, without bloodshed, revolution, or disorder, a repressive government of a select few into a representative Government of all the people. This extraordinary document enunciated and echoed many of our own country's most cherised freedoms, such as majority rule through elections by secret ballot, religious tolerations, and equal justice under the law. More importantly, this Polish proclamation marked the beginning of democratic advances into Central and Eastern Europe.

For weeks after the Constitution was approved, celebrations were held in the cities and towns through Poland, and expressions of enthusiasm flowed in from all freedom-loving people in all corners of the world. It is therefore, fitting that parades, like the Chicago Constitution Day Parade, still be held in honor of this momentous triumph in the struggle to achieve representative government and self-determination.

Sadly, before the Poles had any chance to enjoy the benefits of this Constitution their homeland was divided among the autocrats of Austria, Prussia, and Russia. Having thus lost their sovereign existence and national independence, Poles became subjects of the alien governments in their homeland, and for almost 200 years continue to live under oppressive foreign regimes, except for a brief period at the end of World War I, when the birth of the Republic of Poland in 1918, signified the resurgence of the spirit embodied in the Polish Constitution of 1791.

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of our country's existence, millions of men, women, and children of Polish ancestry have come to our shores, bringing with them the same spirit of human dignity and freedom embodied in the Polish Constitution of 1791, as well as the rich heritage of their own culture. Their presence and constributions to America have helped shape our country into the great democracy it is today.

I am honored to join with Americans of Polish ancestry in my own city of Chicago, and all over the country who pause to pay tribute to those who have bravely struggled and sacrificed so much to achieve liberty, and to those who continue today to carry on this same effort against overwhelming odds with the desire to decide the course of their own destiny. Let us never forget the timeless guiding principle in the 1791 Constitution which states, "All power in civil society should be derived from the will of the people," and let us always be prepared to defend ourselves against those who would deprive us of this most cherished right.●

HEALTH SERVICES AMENDMENTS OF 1985

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I am today joined by my distinguished colleague from the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Mr. BLILEY, in the introduction of the Health Services Amendments of 1985. This legislation embodies the recommendations of the Reagan administration for the health programs covered in the bill.

So that the House might be better informed of the substance of the proposal, I am inserting at the end of these remarks a copy of the letter of transmittal to the Speaker from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, together with a section-by-section summary of the proposed legislation.

The views of the administration on these health programs deserve serious consideration and our support if we are serious about making Federal programs more efficient and more effective.

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,
Washington, DC, May 3, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Enclosed for consideration by the Congress is a draft bill "To extend various health services authorities, and for other purposes."

The draft bill would extend through fiscal year 1988 appropriation authorizations for the National Health Service Corps and adolescent family life demonstration projects. In addition, the draft bill would combine current authorities for community health centers, migrant health, family planning, and health services to coal miners into a unified primary care block grant with minimal conditions imposed upon the States. Rather than having several different and unrelated federally supported grantees providing primary care services within each State, States would be able to provide individuals in need of health care a comprehensive system designed to meet the highest priority health needs in each State. This would further the Administration's efforts to provide greater State flexibility and control over health services programs. The draft bill would also repeal our health planning authorities. These authorities have not proved effective and are unnecessarily regulatory. A competitive approach is preferable. Finally, the draft bill would enact a number of proposals designed to assist the Department of Health and Human Services in carrying out its health responsibilities as effectively and efficiently as possible.

We urge the Congress to give the draft bill its prompt and favorable consideration.

We are advised by the Office of Management and Budget that enactment of this draft bill would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

MARGARET M. HECKLER,
Secretary.

SUMMARY OF PROPOSED HEALTH SERVICES AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Section 1 would assign the draft bill the short title "Health Services Amendments of 1985."

Section 2 would make clear that receipt of Federal treatment for Hansen's disease is voluntary, would permit treatment outside of Public Health Service facilities, and would revise the archaic language of the current provisions concerned with this disease.

Section 3 would repeal the authority of the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide medical examinations to seamen and longshoremen. These provisions are obsolete, as the Department of Health and Human Services is no longer responsible for providing health care to seamen and no longer operates Public Health Service facilities.

Section 4 would authorize appropriations of $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, $50,400,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $50,800,000 for fiscal year 1988 for the National Health Service Corps (NHSC).

Section 5 would eliminate the maximum annual limit of $125 for licensing fees for clinical laboratories. This change would permit the fees collected to include the costs of proficiency testing, which is required by law as part of the licensing process. The section would also assign the amounts collected, to the extent specified in appropriation acts, to the Department's clinical laboratory activities, rather than have the amounts placed in the Treasury's miscellaneous funds.

Section 6 would repeal the health planning authorities in the Public Health Service Act. These authorities have not proved effective and are unnecessarily regulatory. A competitive approach is preferable.

Section 7 would expand the scope of the primary care block grant to include (in addition to the current program for community health centers) the current programs for migrant health, family planning, and health services for respiratory and pulmonary impairments in coal miners. The section would authorize appropriations of $550,100,000 for fiscal year 1986, $573,204,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $596,132,000 for fiscal year 1988 for the entire block grant. Distribution of funds among the States would be based on the distribution that occurred in fiscal year 1985 under all the programs included in the expanded block grant. States could make grants to for-profit entities. A State could transfer up to 10 percent of its funds to other block grants administered by the Secretary. Various specific requirements in current legislation relating to community health centers, including a requirement for the provision of State matching funds, would be eliminated. Up to 10 percent of the Federal funds provided under the block grant could be used for administration or for the planning of health services, adjusted to take into account fund transfers among block grants and funds held over from a preceding fiscal year. A State would be required to expend for family planning and for migrant health in fiscal year 1986 a percentage proportion equal to at least 80 percent, and in fiscal year 1987 a percentage proportion equal to at least 50 percent, of the percentage proportion received by the State (or by entities in the State) for family planning and for migrant health from fiscal year 1985 appropriations for all the programs subsumed by the block grant. A State would be permitted to satisfy various requirements through officials other than the governor, and the form and content of applications and reports would be determined by the State rather than by the Secretary. A State would be required, in its annual description of the intended use of funds, to include a statement of goals and objectives, information on the types of activities to be supported, geographic areas to be served, and categories or characteristics of individuals to be served, and the criteria and method to be used for distributing the funds. The annual activities report would have to explain how the previously stated goals and objectives had been met. The requirement for State legislative hearings on the use of funds would be eliminated; instead, an opportunity for public comment would be required. State audits would be required only every two years, not annually (if the Single Audit Act of 1984 did not apply). The requirement for annual investigations by the Secretary of the use of funds in various States would be repealed, as would the requirement for evaluations by the Comptroller General of State expenditures (the Comptroller General has authority under other provisions of law to conduct evaluations as needed). The Secretary would no longer be required to promulgate separate regulations for this specific block grant. A State could begin to participate in the block grant during any calendar quarter in fiscal year 1986; the Secretary would continue to provide funds under the categorical programs subsumed by the block in those quarters in fiscal year 1986 during which the State chose not to participate. The Secretary could not provide categorical funding after fiscal year 1986. The statutory requirements that there be an Office of Population Affairs and a Deputy Assistant Secretary for Population Affairs would be repealed. This section would provide States greater flexibility and control over health services programs and would provide for more efficient and integrated management of the programs.

Section 8 would authorize appropriations of $14,706,000 for fiscal year 1986, $15,206,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $15,784,000 for fiscal year 1988 for adolescent family life demonstration projects.

Section 9 would permit the Secretary to contract with public and private entities to process bills, make payments, and perform related functions with respect to health services furnished by outside health professionals and others to Public Health Service beneficiaries.

Section 10 would eliminate the requirement, under the Maternal and Child Health Services Block Grant, that a State expend funds by the end of the fiscal year following the fiscal year for which an allotment was made. This change would give States additional flexibility as already provided in other health block grant programs.

Section 11 would give the Secretary the discretion to determine how much (if any) additional special pay (up to $9,000 annually, or up to $10,000 annually for physicians with ten or more years of service) to grant to Public Health Service Commissioned Corps physicians. Under current law, all physicians in the uniformed services not in training are entitled to this additional special pay. The Secretary would be required to take into consideration the recruitment and retention problems of the Public Health Service, the level of performance of the physician concerned, and provisions of law providing for additional pay for Government physicians not in the uniformed services. Commissioned Corps physicians fulfilling a service obligation under the National Health Service Corps Scholarship Program could not receive this additional special pay. Finally, the additional special pay for any uniformed services officer could be paid either annually or monthly; under current law, the amount must be paid annually in advance.

Section 12 would permit commissioned officers of the Public Health Service to receive cash awards for specific suggestions, inventions, or scientific achievements which are of benefit to the Government. Members of other uniformed services are currently eligible for such awards, and civilian employees are eligible for similar awards, but Public Health Service commissioned officers are not.

Section 13 would permit the Secretary to provide for health care for an involuntarily separated commissioned officer (or dependent) for up to one year after separation if the officer (or dependent) was receiving health care at the expense of the Public Health Service at the time of separation and if the Secretary found that the officer (or dependent) could not obtain appropriate insurance for the condition for which he was receiving health care. Federal civilian employees have insurance conversion rights, and separated military personnel may be provided health care for a short period of time. No such authority currently exists for separated Public Health Service commissioned officers, who may suddenly find themselves (and their dependents) unable to obtain coverage for an existing condition.

Section 14 would repeal provisions providing for the civil commitment to the Secretary by United States district courts of narcotics addicts and provisions authorizing the Secretary to provide services to narcotic addicts. These provisions are no longer used and deal with functions best performed on the State level.

Section 15 would repeal the authorities for the Federal Hospital Council and the National Advisory Council on Regional Medical Programs, bodies that no longer serve a useful purpose, and would repeal obsolete provisions concerned with construction of medical facilities and with regional medical programs.

Section 16 would make for-profit entities eligible for grants for sexually transmitted disease prevention and control, and for grants for adolescent family life demonstrations; and would permit States to make grants to for-profit entities from preventive health and health services and alcohol and drug abuse and mental health services block grant funds, and from maternal and child health services block grant funds, and from maternal and child health services block grant funds for research and training. This section would promote competition and the most effective use of the private sector.

Section 17 would eliminate a number of unnecessary reports, as follows:

Subsection (a) would eliminate the requirement that the Secretary submit an annual report on disease control activities.

Subsection (b) would eliminate the requirement that the Secretary submit an annual report on the NHSC.

Subsection (c) would eliminate the requirement that the Secretary report annually on the administration of the functions of the Public Health Service.

Subsection (d) would eliminate the requirement that the Secretary and the Secretary of Defense each submit an annual report on the continuation pay program for dentists in the uniformed services.

Subsection (e) would eliminate the requirement that the Secretary and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency report annually on conflicts of interest involving employees of the Department of Health and Human Services or of the Environmental Protection Agency who perform functions under the Toxic Substances Control Act.

These reports cost an estimated $37,000 annually.

Section 18 would enact technical amendments.●

FREEDOM FIGHTER HONORED

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, last Friday, April 29, 1985, almost 200 leaders of the Hungarian-American community in the United States and Canada met to honor the 250th anniversary of the death of a great Hungarian patriot and freedom fighter, Prince Francis Rakoczi. One of the high points of that evening was an address by Dr. Elemer Bako, a specialist in Finno-Ugaric Area Studies, at the Library of Congress. Since most Americans have never heard of Prince Rakoczi and his experiences, I would like to share this excellent discussion with my colleagues. Like Louis Kossuth, another freedom fighter who visited this country in the 19th century, Rakoczi was not immediately successful, but he left a legacy of inspiration to his countrymen which has never been forgotten. I am pleased to place Dr. Bako's statement in the RECORD.

RÁKÓCZI AND AMERICA

The first 14 years of 18th century European history are occupied by the War of Spanish Succession. For England, her colonies and allies, the most essential task was to prevent the unification of the French and Spanish fleets under the same command. In order to counterbalance the eventual emergence of such an overwhelming seapower, England had to employ the enormous territorial forces of the German Roman (i.e. Habsburg) Empire for an attack against France. The Habsburg Emperor (simultaneously the king of Hungary) whose House appeared to lose the throne of Spain after the death of Spain's king Charles II, of Habsburg, was ready to join Britain supposing that he would receive enough in material and financial aid to improve the combat readiness of his armies after the long wars against the Turkish Empire.

The two warring camps, the British and the French, were nearly of equal strength both in territory and the number of soldiery. Consequently, any sudden change in the political or military situation of either one of the adversaries could bring about an eventually fatal disadvantage. Such a danger threatened in the Hungarian lands (Hungary and Transylvania) when a popular movement under the leadership of young, talented Francis Rákóczi II (March 27, 1676-April 8, 1735) who came from an ancestry greatly admired at home and highly respected in all of Europe, and who was also heir to Hungary's largest family estates totaling more than 3 million acres, turned against the Emperor who let his Hungarian subjects be oppressed, exploited and persecuted. Suddenly, the anti-French alliance found itself facing the most serious possibility of losing not only the numerous Hungarian regiments serving with the Imperial army but also a number of others, from the German lands, which, in the case of an imminent siege of Vienna, the Imperial capital city, had to be ordered to its defense, away from the battlefields in Western Europe.

For England, there was another complicating matter: the fact that the anti-Habsburg movement of Rákóczi (who was a Catholic) was greatly supported by a number of prominent Hungarian Protestants. No wonder: they had been persecuted by the Emperor's civilian and military authorities as well as by the Roman Catholic clergy (mostly non-Hungarians) which moved Queen Anne, a defender of Protestantism, as it did several of her predecessors on the British throne, to issue repeatedly most serious protestations at the Court of Vienna.

This situation demanded that the overwhelmingly Protestant population both in England and her colonies should be served with a flow of information about the true intents and actions of the British government and its representatives, particularly with the foremost Catholic power in Europe. Since the Hungarian situation represented one of the key problems to be solved in time (excelled in importance only by securing Austria's military assistance for England), the press in England was served with a variety of news about Rákóczi, his armies, their initial successes, the demands of the Hungarian Protestants and the like. The American colonies still being without a newspaper, a new weekly was launched in April, 1704, under the title The Boston

News-Letter, the material of which was dated, however (at least the items originating in Europe), from the previous year.

London's attitude which was basically sympathetic to the Hungarian cause, came to expression in the Boston paper. Its reports reflected the instructions under which the British envoys, particularly Sir George Stepney, one of contemporary England's eminent Latin scholars and poets, operated. As mentioned already, he was supposed to work out a settlement between the Emperor and his enraged Hungarian subjects. Such a settlement has to include the Imperial guarantees of the rights of freedom of worship, learning, teaching, and publishing, the right of assembly, autonomous legislation and local administration, with special emphasis on the rights of the protestants in Hungary and Transylvania. Ambassador Stepney, himself a great supporter of Queen Anne's policies, did his utmost to bring about such a settlement, despite the unending difficulties caused by the ministers of the Emperor. Also, the publication of such reports and other new items favoring the Hungarian cause offered a rather welcome involvement for the publishers and printers in England and America alike. The Boston News-Letter carried a wealth of such information, at least in the first years of its publication while the concentrated British diplomatic effort was able to produce some results in the form of ceasefires, tentative agreements, modified positions in reformulated proposals and the like. Also, the reader in America received reports from battlefields referring to locations the names of which have never been heard of before, both from Hungary and Transylvania, as well as some interesting "personalia," with dozens of names of prominent Hungarians of all walks of life, even outright rumors, and other interesting reading matter about the cultural, religious, economic, etc. conditions of the Hungarians. Such items were frequently enhanced by comments originating with some British or other European authority.

The contemporary reader could also be informed about Rákóczi and his movement by publications coming from the French side, like Rákóczi's biographies, the first of which was written by Eustache Le Noble in 1707. Also, his posthumously printed memoirs, entitled Histoire des révolutions de Hongrie (La Hague, 1739) in which he discussed, among other important aspects of the long history of the Hungarian struggle against Habsburg oppression, that the constitutional right of the Hungarian nation which originated with the recognition (by king Andrew II in 1222, in the "Hungarian Magna Carta" called "Bulla Aurea") of the "ius resistendi", in English, "right of resistance" against unlawful acts on the part of the ruler, is still in effect. It is known that Thomas Jefferson who phrased the American Declaration of Independence had a copy of this work by Rákóczi.

Long after the conclusion of the War of Spanish Succession and the formal dissolution of Rákóczi's decimated army, and even after his death in exile in Turkey on April 8, 1735 (the 250th anniversary of which is the subject of our present commemoration), The Boston News-Letter, and a number of other American newspapers, which were founded following that first American paper in Boston, were still reporting the exploits of the exiled Hungarian cavalry leaders who were employed mainly as Hussar commanders in the various European armies. Their number included the first Hussar Marechal of France, Count László Bercsényi, son of Rákóczi's commander-in-chief, whose name is still carried on by a regiment of the French army, now, however, a regiment of paratroopers.

The documentation containing innumerable reports, letters, notes, maps, and other important materials related to the British diplomatic effort at Vienna, including the ones tied with the Rákóczi movement, was collected carefully by the Hungarian scholar Ernö Simonyi from various English and other European archives, and published by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest, in the 1870s. Although not referred to very often, these sources were known to be available to those interested.

What was not known, however, was that most of the same events and other matters of interest had also been reported by the first newspaper in America, The Boston News-Letter, to the colonialists who later fought for their own freedom and independence in the same spirit.

Beyond the probable influence exercised by the contemporary reports on the thinking of the populations in England's colonies, infused in American life were the actions of military representatives of second and third generation descendants of the Rákóczi era; they included the famous defender of Charleston, South Carolina, in 1779, the Hussar Colonel Michael Kováts de Fabricy, Commandant of the Pulaski Legion, and the Hussar Major John Polereczki, of the Lauzun Legion, a unit in Count Rochambeau's army, who became the first American citizen of Hungarian extraction. Both Kováts and Polereczki were grandsons of officers who served under Rákóczi's flags.

The image of Prince Rákóczi was kept in the memory of America by the great Louis Kossuth who recalled Rákóczi merits and his political heritage to his American audiences when he was touring the United States in 1851 and 1852.

In 1906, when Rákóczi's earthly remains were returned to Hungary from his grave in Turkey, and he was reburied at the beautiful Gothic cathedral at Kassa (now Košice, Czechoslovakia), American Hungarians joined the grateful nation in their "old country" in the commemoration. Soon after the "Rákóczi Fraternal Aid Society" was founded by a group of Hungarian immigrants at Bridgeport, Connecticut. It is now merged with the Hungarian-founded William Penn Fraternal Society of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

In our times, a group of Hungarian emigres in Canada (who were joined recently by a number of Hungarians in this country) organized The Rákóczi Foundation to perpetuate the Rákóczi tradition by promoting the political ideas of freedom and independence and the cultural heritage left us by that era of great Hungarians.●

THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION'S HARVEST OF SHAME

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, for 13 years, OSHA has studied whether agricultural employers should be required to provide toilets and clean drinking water to the hundreds of thousands of farm workers who labor in the fields. Recently, under court order, OSHA published a proposed health standard which would have required certain agricultural employers to provide 1 toilet for every 20 employees, and access to clean drinking water and handwashing facilities. Employers which might be burdened by this requirement, such as livestock or logging operations, and small farms with 10 employees or fewer, were exempted from the standard. Nevertheless, the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Council of Agricultural Employers opposed the standard. The Farm Bureau testified that the cost of providing toilets, which they estimated at $60 per month, including maintenance, was too high and that most farm workers would not use toilets even if they were provided.

The expert medical testimony OSHA received was, however, unanimous in its support of the standard. OSHA retained Dr. Eugene Gangarosa, the director of the Master of Public Health Program at the Emory School of Medicine, to analyze the medical and scientific evidence in the rulemaking record. Dr. Gangarosa found the evidence to be:

> So compelling as to leave no doubt whatsoever that (1) there is an urgent need for the proposed standards . . . and (2) substantial benefit will accrue when these standards are adopted.

Dr. Gangarosa's analysis of the evidence before OSHA should be read by every Member of Congress. It shows that farm workers are subjected to inhuman working conditions, conditions we would not tolerate in any other part of our society, conditions which cause Third World disease rates among farm workers. The following excerpt from Dr. Gangarosa's report is instructive:

> Excess risks have been documented in the testimony by a parade of expert witnesses. One expert after another underscored the same points leaving no doubt that FW have unacceptably high incidence of infectious diseases of the intestine, respiratory system, and skin; heat-related illnesses; urinary tract infections; and acute and chronic exposures to toxic chemicals, especially the organophosphorus insecticides.
> I searched the record carefully and could not find expert testimony against the proposed standards. The absence of expert testimony against the proposed standards was indeed conspicuous and itself significant.
> Evidence in the record makes it clear that the proposed standards for readily accessible potable water should substantially reduce the risk of diseases caused by heat stress and will lessen the risk of urinary tract infections. The provision of hand washing facilities will break the chain of transmission of the infectious diseases of the intestine and will reduce transmission of other infectious agents especially those of the respiratory system, eyes, and skin. Hand washing facilities will enable field workers to minimize their risk to acute and chronic chemical poisonings. The availability of toilets that are maintained and used will substantially reduce the risk of urinary tract infections and their sequelae including including hypertension and chronic kidney diseases. Toilets equipped with toilet tissue will reduce the risk of chronic chemical poisonings by providing field workers an alternative to the use of chemically-tainted leaves for personal hygiene after defecation.

Besides reducing these acute and chronic health risks, the proposed standards are important for healthy physical and mental growth and development of the children of farmworkers—those that are unborn, their infants who suffer most from the communicable diseases, and the older children who work in the fields. Adoption of the standards will substantially reduce lost time, will reduce medical costs, and will increase life expectancy. Those tragic and totally unnecessary deaths from heat stress and acute poisonings, examples of which are part of the record, will be prevented. Other benefits will accrue that are difficult to quantitate—the avoidance of needless suffering and pain, dignity in having toilets to use instead of open fields, and freedom from the exploitation that requires purchase of overpriced alcoholic or sugared drinks when, in fact, water is wanted and needed to satisfy thirst. The proposed standards mean an improvement in quality of life, the kind of improvement workers in other industries already have because of workplace standards similar to those proposed. Farmers, themselves should benefit from increased worker productivity and improved morale. The public will benefit by the elimination of the risk to community health resulting from contamination of water supplies from uncontained feces deposited in the field. Adoption of the proposed standards means everyone benefits and at a modest cost.

The chart which follows as Table 4 summarizes the quantitative data in the record. My analysis in this summary table is an attempt to provide a quantitative risk assessment, insofar as possible. Where gaps exist, I relied on professional judgment to give the best possible estimates of risk and of expected reductions of risk that would be made possible by adoption of the proposed standards. In some instances, it was not feasible to specify a specific number to indicate a risk or expected reduction of risk. The text qualifies these instances and wherever possible provides qualitative estimates.

The summary table quantifies the excess risk to farmworkers for the parastic diseases (7-26 times), diarrhea (9-85 times), heat stress (1½ to nearly 2 times that seen in other high-risk industries), chemical exposures (about 3 times), and skin rashes (5 times). The expected risk reductions from the availability of water for either drinking or hand washing are 30-45 percent for the infectious diseases as a group, 80-90 percent for illness due to heat stress, 20-30 percent for urinary tract infections, 30-50 percent for acute exposures to toxic chemicals, and 25-40 percent for skin rashes. The use of toilets that are maintained, used, and provided with toilet tissue should reduce parasitic infections from 5-10 percent, diarrhea from 10-20 percent, urinary tract infections from 20-30 percent, and acute chemical exposures from 10-20 percent.

The combination of work place facilities provided by the proposed standards and facilities that would be available in farmworker homes, if existing regulations were enforced, would reduce these risks even more. Risks associated with the communicable diseases could be reduced to levels comparable to those prevailing in the general population. The point is that to achieve risk levels prevailing in other industries and in the general population, healthy work conditions and healthy home conditions must be available to the farmworker to the extent that these are available to workers in other industries.

Despite the incontestable medical evidence in the rulemaking record and the negligible cost to employers of the standard—53 to 77 cents per worker per day—Assistant Secretary Robert A. Rowland, whom Mr. Reagan appointed last year, refused to issue the proposed standard.

The Washington Times published a column about Mr. Rowland's decision not to issue the field sanitation standard which is accurate, thoughtful, and succinct. I ask that the column, which was written by Robert Walters, be printed in the RECORD.

DIRTY DECISION BY OSHA ON AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

(By Robert Walters)

Already, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration has firmly established itself as the leader in the competition for the most meanspirited government action of 1985.

OSHA has achieved that dubious distinction by refusing to issue federal regulations requiring that basic sanitation measures—toilets, clean drinking water, and handwashing facilities—be made available to agricultural fieldworkers.

In reaching that decision, the political appointees who head OSHA rejected the advice of both their own professional staff members and the country's most prestigious medical societies.

The Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 requires that all employees be provided with rudimentary sanitation facilities at or near their workplaces, but in the early 1970s OSHA excluded agricultural workers from that standard by regulatory fiat.

Efforts to extend the protection of the law to fieldworkers date back to 1972, but that 13-year-long campaign on behalf of powerless seasonal and migrant farm workers has been ceaselessly opposed by influential agribusiness interests.

A lack of drinking water for those in the fields can cause severe dehydration, heat cramps, and heat stroke. A lack of washing facilities prevents farm workers from removing toxic pesticides from their skin, eyes, and clothing.

A lack of toilet facilities can lead to bladder diseases, gastrointestinal problems, and urinary tract infections. Poor field sanitation generally can result in cholera, hepatitis, typhoid, dysentery, hookworm, and other parasitic diseases.

Recognizing those problems, the U.S. surgeon general, the American Medical Association, the American Public Health Association, and the American Nurses Association all have called for federally mandated field-sanitation facilities.

Although almost 5 million persons work as agricultural field laborers, advocates of sanitary protection have recognized that it would be unreasonable to require an employer to provide a full range of services for only a few workers.

Thus, the proposed—but now abandoned—OSHA standard would have been applicable only to employers of more than 10 workers. Under that formula, coverage would have been extended to an estimated 530,000 to 765,000 employees.

OSHA has consistently emphasized the potential costs to be borne by employers rather than the benefits likely to accrue to them and their workers as a result of reduced illness and increased productivity.

But one elaborate OSHA-financed study estimated that the proposed rules would cost 53 cents to 77 cents per worker per day. That's hardly an outrageous price for access to facilities routinely provided in every other industry.

When OSHA officials recently decided not to issue the proposed regulations, five agency employees who had been assigned the task of assessing the thousands of pages of medical and legal evidence publicly protested that the action "can only bring discredit to the agency and ourselves."

Finally, for those middle-class persons who view OSHA's recent action as unfortunate for the hapless, distant farm workers but irrelevant to their own lives, here's some disquieting information:

A continued lack of sanitation facilities will mean the millions of field laborers will perpetuate the practice of relieving themselves wherever they can, turning fruit and vegetable farms into open toilets.

The untreated urine and feces can either directly contaminate the crops or attract flies and other insects which, in turn, spread parasitic and contagious diseases resistant to conventional industry washing procedures.

That's worth considering the next time you approach a restaurant salad bar or visit the fresh produce section of the neighborhood super market.●

NO DEPLETION TAX BREAK BEFORE DEPLETION

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, on March 5, 1984, I introduced H.R. 5022 which would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that percentage depletion shall not be allowable for lease bonuses, advance royalties, or similar payments with respect to oil and gas properties. Introduction of this bill was a direct result of a January 10, 1984, Supreme Court decision which held that independent oil producers may claim percentage depletion allowances on Federal tax returns for years during which no production takes place (Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Petitioner v. Fred L. Engle et ux). I disagree with the logic behind that ruling and am therefore today reintroducing H.R. 5022.

Percentage depletion allowances let producers deduct a set proportion of income from Federal income tax. The logic here is that this untaxed revenue is necessary to encourage investment and expansion in energy production. But in effect, the tax break provided by the Supreme Court decision is a subsidy to owners which offers no incentive to produce let alone expand. Justice Blackmun pointed out in dissent,

With due respect, this analysis simply ignores the terms and structure of the statute that it purports to construe. Section 613A(c) [of the Internal Revenue Service Code] cannot have been meant to increase production by independent producers over pre-existing levels; it did not create a new tax subsidy but merely preserved an old one. More importantly, that subsidy was not preserved intact but rather was deliberately scaled back * * * When read as a whole, section 613A not only does not increase incentives for independent producers but actually reduces them.

In dissenting from the 1984 Court decision, Justice Blackmun asserted that the Court misinterpreted the congressional mandate of the Tax Reduction Act of 1975. The misunderstanding arose over whether the act tied depletion allowances to annual production. As policy, the Internal Revenue Service insisted that depletion allowances could be claimed only when production had taken place—that is, when some depletion had occured. The Court ruling, however, allows producers to claim a set percentage deduction regardless of any depletion occuring.

In its decision, the Court majority insisted that the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 indicated clear intent by Congress to retain depletion rules for small producers. The act repealed the depletion allowance for major oil companies. In dissent, Justice Blackmun said the legislative history was more ambiguous than the majority suggested. Lacking clarity, he argued the Court ought to leave the interpretation of tax law to the Internal Revenue Service. In dissent, Justice Blackmun wrote,

The Court purports to accept the principle that the "choice among reasonable interpretations [of federal tax laws] is for the Commissioner, not the courts." National Muffler Dealerships Assn., Inc. v. United States, 440 U.S. 472, 488 (1979). Ante, at 17. However, given the compatability of the language of section 613A with the Commissioner's views, the record of legislative compromise that lies behind the statute, the extent to which section 613A restricts percentage depletion for independent producers and royalty owners as well as for major integrated oil and gas companies, and the conceded practical complications caused by attempts to graft Herring's depletions rule onto the new provision, the Court's rejection of the Commissioner's interpretation of section 613A is impossible to square with that principle. The Court's decision therefore concerns me not simply as an interpretation of a discrete section of the Internal Revenue Service Code but as a sign of the Court's willingness to displace the Commissioner's interpretation of the tax laws with its own views of tax policy.

I feel Justice Blackmun is right on the mark. The Court misinterpreted the intent of the use of percentage depletion from the Tax Reduction Act of 1975. Percentage depletion offers no incentive for increased production or expansion, it is simply a gratuitous tax break. For the court to rule otherwise defies all logic.

My bill would help restore the integrity of the Commissioner's job and bring an end to the absurdity of percentage depletion allowances for oil fields where no drilling is underway.●

MRS. JANET M. MAKRAUER HONORED

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to take this opportunity to recognize an outstanding constituent. Being honored here, as the Ohio Small Business Person of the Year is Mrs Janet M. Makrauer of Cincinnati, OH. This week, May 6 to 11 is National Small Business Week. She will be honored at activities sponsored by the Small Business Administration.

Janet Makrauer, cofounded Amko Plastics, a manufacturer of polyethylene drawstring and handle specialty bags and display banners, in 1966 with her late husband. As in many small businesses, the family represented one-half of the six original employees when Amko opened for business without a single order lined up. Today, they employ 360 people and have projected sales of over $19 million for 1984.

Mrs. Makrauer is the embodiment of all the positive characteristics an entrepreneur should have: a deep concern for the development and health of her employees and their families, a dedicated commitment to the betterment of her community, and the foresight, knowledge, innovation and perservance to direct a prosperous, growing business in an extremely competitive market.

The steady growth of Amko is a result of the innovative nature of its leaders. From its beginnings Amko has pursued a fundamental corporate policy of developing and testing new raw materials and new machinery and techniques. Mrs. Makrauer showed her determination several years ago when the Environmental Protection Agency issued "technology forcing" regulations requiring the industry to reduce printing emissions by reducing the use of solvent-based inks and replace these with water-based inks. At that time the inks and printing technology did not even exist. Amko performed the research necessary to develop the new inks, thus meeting the new EPA requirement.

Employee well-being is a major concern of Amko Plastics management. During recent recessions when numerous layoffs were necessary at other companies, Amko employees were retained and kept busy performing other work at the plant. Employees cleaned, painted, and did general maintenance at the plant. When all other plant work had been completed, Amko employees were encouraged to plant and attend vegetable gardens on the plant property with the harvest distributed among all the employees.

Mrs. Makrauer finds time from her role as president and treasurer of Amko Plastics to contribute her skills as a volunteer in the community. Her work with the blind is admirable. As you can see, Janet Makrauer is truly an example of the finest type of business leader, exhibiting dedication and concern for community and employees. I welcome the chance to congratulate her on her well-deserved award as Ohio Small Business Person of the Year.●

VETERANS HEALTH CARE BUDGET CANNOT BE REDUCED FURTHER

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, within the next few weeks, the House and Senate will be making major decisions on the budget for fiscal year 1986. Many Federal programs will be affected. The decisions we must make will not be easy. We all have different priorities.

A very high priority of mine is veterans health care. I want my colleagues to fully understand the impact of any budget reductions in funds to operate the VA's health care system. Who is better able to relate the problems in the field than the people in the field?

According to the chiefs of staff at VA hospitals nationwide who responded to a recent survey, inadequate budgets are already taking their toll. More cuts in the budget will mean longer waiting lists, the turning away of certain nonservice-connected veterans, and delays in many surgical procedures.

There follows a report from the chief of staff at the VA Medical Center in Cincinnati, OH:

VETERAN'S ADMINISTRATION,
Cincinnati OH, February 26, 1985.

In Reply Refer to: 539/11.

Mr. HOWARD GREEN, M.D.,
Chief of Staff (11), VA Medical Center, White River Junction, VT.

DEAR DR. GREEN: I would like to provide you with some information from the Cincinnati VAMC. This is in response to the information or letter from Dr. Mark Wolcott.

The Cincinnati VAMC is a 354 bed general hospital with a 206 bed nursing home located at Fort Thomas, Kentucky. The hospital is strongly affiliated with the University of Cincinnati Medical School. Both are close together so there is easy access to staff and residents.

Our projected deficit as of January 1, 1985, was $670,000; Personnel Services $300,000 and All Other $370,000. The impact of this deficit has resulted in a lag of hiring of six to seven weeks. For some critical positions we shorten this time frame. We have had to be careful in ordering supplies depending on the money available.

In the past two years we have had a significant clinical addition, i.e., Laboratory, Radiology and Surgery, so the system has provided large amounts of equipment but at times without resources to operate it and without funds to service it.

Enclosed is the information you requesterd concerning activity in Surgery.

In terms of solutions, we have just "had to go with what we got" and we react by "crisis intervention.

As funds become smaller, we feel we will have to cut back on the services we offer.

I hope this will be of help, but I imagine you will get the same information from each facility.

Sincerely,

SCOVELL M. HOPKINS, M.D.,
Chief of Staff.

Enclosure.

[Memorandum]

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION.

Date: February 15, 1985.
To: Mark Doskocil.
From: Surgical Service/112.
Subject: Questionnaire—Surgical Scheduling.

The following information reflects the backlog of scheduling for operative procedures (elective) and the outpatient clinics for the Surgical Specialties.

Specialty, surgery, and outpatient clinic:

General surgery (T-1), major cases—2 weeks, minor cases—6 weeks, 3 weeks.

General surgery (T-2), 3 weeks.

Plastic surgery, 1 to 2 weeks, 2 weeks.

Urology, 6 to 7 weeks, 5 weeks, specialty clinics, 8 weeks.

Orthopedics, 6 to 7 weeks, 10 weeks.

Ophthalmology, 25 weeks, 16 weeks.

Neurosurgery, 3 weeks, 5 weeks.

Otolaryngology (ENT) 2 to 3 weeks, 5 weeks, specialty clinics, 5 to 6 weeks.

If additional information is required, please contact me.

Technical Assistant.●

BRONX GETS PIECE OF SILICON VALLEY

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, a clear example of the revival of the Bronx is illustrated by the opening and relocation of businesses in the area. The Bronx has untapped resources that can be used by the businesses which choose to locate to the area.

Mr. Morales and Mr. Collado of Protocom Devices, Inc., outline the advantages when they state, "for this technology, the Bronx is better. Not only is it near a number of universities, but it is a subway ride from major users, such as Wall Street and publishing." The Bronx also has major accessibility to the New Jersey area and major highways. The Bronx also complements itself by having, "plenty, of parking space, an advantage somehow overlooked by most companies." Mr. Morales and Mr. Collado are businessmen who have clearly realized the potential of the Bronx and have used it to their advantage. They have helped revive the area by providing jobs as well as a glimmer of hope for our residents. It is quite apparent that with increased numbers of businesses moving to the Bronx, that the restoration of the area is finally a sustained phenomenon.

With these thoughts in mind, I would like to present the following article to my colleagues.

[From the New York Times, Apr. 29, 1985]

BRONX GETS PIECE OF SILICON VALLEY

(By Sandra Salmans)

Few people would confuse the South Bronx with Silicon Valley, and Rafael Collado and Ramon Morales agree that the differences are clear: for high technology, they say, the Bronx is better. Not only is it near a number of universities, but it is a subway ride from major users, such as Wall Street and publishing. "It amazes me that this didn't become the high-tech center," Mr. Collado said.

That is an oversight that Mr. Collado, a 31-year-old engineer who has worked for the likes of the GTE Corporation and the ITT Corporation, and Mr. Morales, a 32-year-old with a degree in sociology and economics from Harvard University, are trying to correct. They are the top executives and two of the six partners of Protocom Devices, a small company that has refined a device allowing otherwise incompatible mainframe computers to communicate with each other. Customers include Boeing Computer Systems, the Paradyne Corporation and Citibank.

Since October, Protocom has been turning out its leading-edge hardware from headquarters near Bruckner Boulevard and 137th Street, just a couple of blocks from Mr. Collado's first home. Mr. Morales was born in Puerto Rico, but his family stopped off in the Bronx before settling in East Harlem. The two met in sixth grade at Monsignor Kelly Junior High School, then a school for bright but disadvantaged boys on the Upper West Side.

VARIED BACKGROUNDS

After Harvard, Mr. Morales worked as a consultant to various city and state agencies, and returned to East Harlem to do community organizing. By 1983, he was in operations at the Prudential Insurance Company of America.

Mr. Collado went to Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, then to a series of jobs in Silicon Valley and Arizona. It should have been a software engineer's dream. "I had my company car and my stock options," he said. At ITT in Scottsdale, "They told me, 'You're in God's country.' "

But like many New Yorkers, Mr. Collado felt there was something fundamentally wrong with a town where "you couldn't get lunch delivered," he said. "You couldn't get a good bagel or a good Chinese meal."

ADVANTAGES OF SOUTH BRONX

To listen to Mr. Collado and Mr. Morales is to hear the kind of boosterism that, like high technology, is most often found in California. They like to point out that the South Bronx is an easy commute from middle-class enclaves in New Jersey and elsewhere. They note that the neighborhood has plenty of parking spaces, an advantage somehow overlooked by most companies. Even the climate is better. "When we get off a plane from California, we breathe the air," Mr. Collado said. Their wives think they are crazy, the men said.

By early 1983, Mr. Collado had moved to New Jersey and Timeplex Inc., a manufacturer of telecommunications equipment. He and two other engineers, who are also now partners in Protocom, began work on a "pad"—a packet assembler/disassembler that packages information in a form that can be transmitted through a computer network between computers made by different manufacturers.

According to a venture capitalist who is familiar with the company, the potential market for pads could be in the billions of dollars. If Protocom does well, the company could achieve sales of $100 million or more, according to this source.

At the moment, that seems light-years away. In the fiscal year ended last January, Protocom had a payroll of 13 employees in the Bronx, sales of about $1.3 million and a profit of $80,000. This looks like a $7 million year, and the company will need 55 employees, management said.

TOLERANT VENDORS

Protocom's first offices, improbably, were in borrowed quarters on Putnam Avenue in Greenwich, Conn., just down the street from the Ann Taylor, a fashionable women's clothing store. ("Very hotsy-totsy," said Mr. Collado.) Initially, Protocom depended for its cash flow on tolerant vendors, who forgave late payments because they had confidence in the product—not because the company's minority ownership appealed to their conscience, Mr. Collado said.

The partners wanted to move to the Bronx, but Protocom needed Government assistance and someone expert at untangling the red tape. So Mr. Collado called Mr. Morales, his old friend from Monsignor Kelly.

"Ralph told me, 'We've got to show the world that people like us come out of the South Bronx,' " Mr. Morales recalled.

"He didn't scare easily," said Mr. Collado.

Why a high-technology company would want to be in the South Bronx was a puzzlement to most people. One investment banker told them, "You guys have a good thing," but warned that it would come to grief in the South Bronx. Others recommended Boston's Route 128.

Even executives at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey expressed surprise. When Mr. Morales approached the Port Authority about financing a move, "One had to ask, 'Why?' " recalled Anthony Giordano, chief of industrial parks development.

ANOTHER MOVE SOON

In the end, the Port Authority loaned Protocom $4.4 million. The company rented incubator space from the South Bronx Development Organization. Next spring, it is scheduled to move to Bathgate Industrial Park, the new industrial complex being erected in the South Bronx by the Port Authority and the Public Development Corporation. "We fully expect they'll create 200 jobs," said Mr. Giordano.

In the meantime, the company is doing what it can to bring together minorities and technology. It is training some students at Cooper Union and Manhattan College in Protocom technology. Mr. Collado has had discussions—"interfaces," he calls them—with a handful of other small businesses about relocating to the South Bronx. Although Monsignor Kelly closed in 1972, a successor was opened last autumn. Protocom designated the new school as its "official" charity, and donated hardware and computers worth $50,000, Mr. Collado said.

The hope is to provide "a new model for success," Mr. Morales said. "It's not to grow up to be Walt Frazier, but to get on a plane and service a client, or to start your own company."●

VOICE OF DEMOCRACY WINNER

HON. DICK CHENEY

OF WYOMING

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues, the following essay, composed by Marsha Isbell, the Wyoming State winner of the Veterans of Foreign Wars' Voice of Democracy contest.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in commending the more than 300,000 individuals who participated in this contest for their outstanding commitment to their country. By expressing their "Pledges to America" through these compositions, these young men and women emphasize the responsibility they realize is essential to citizenship.

MY PLEDGE TO AMERICA

What is my personal pledge to America? Only in knowing the full meaning of the word "pledge" can one understand my pledge to America. Pledge means commitment, honor, bond, obligation and respect. In short, a pledge demonstrates allegiance to someone or something. Because as an American I am free to choose to whom my allegiance will be directed, my pledge to America involves many different parts of my life. It is not a subject to be taken lightly.

My commitment and honor should be directed in a manner that upholds America's moral principles. Our great nation was founded on the search for religious freedom. The United States Constitution was written with the good of the people in mind. Our forefathers fought to attain the freedom we now enjoy, and countless numbers of Americans have given their lives to maintain that same freedom. So I as an American ought to be willing to serve in the armed forces or related services if duty calls. After all, Andre Gide, a poet, once wrote, "Man's happiness does not lie in freedom, but in the acceptance of duty." I pledge to accept this duty both to myself and to my country.

Along with my commitment and honor to America there is a bond which I feel to the land. It has provided me with plenty of food and a place to call my home. I should consciously work to preserve its beauty and resources. A very practical way to do this would be to dispose of my trash properly. Also, America's limited suppy of water in lakes and streams should be kept free from pollution of wastes. Choosing to use renewable resources instead of exhaustible ones will help conserve the environment's balance. My America is a treasure house of resources, and I pledge to do my part to keep it that way.

In addition to my bond with the land, I feel there is an obligation to obey the laws set up by the government. After all, the American govenment is set up by and for the people. The people are directly responsible for the authority they put in government offices. So I individually pledge to vote in this year's and future elections. Voting is of "primary importance." As Sir Francis Bacon said, "God hangs the greatest weights on the smallest wires."

Pledge also means respect, which I can show in honoring the American Flag. One way is by using proper flag etiquette when raising or lowering the flag. As a citizen I can observe national holidays by displaying the flag to demonstrate patriotic spirit. This same spirit was shown in the past as the flag flew high and proudly over our nation during wars, depressions, and fruitful times. This symbol of American freedom has remained true to me, so I pledge my allegiance to it in return.

The world pledge sums up commitment, honor, bond, obligation and respect. A heartfelt pledge to America involves all of these aspects. It is my privilege to give my allegiance to a country so truly wonderful. In closing, I proudly dedicate myself to my country in a poem that I wrote:

"MY PLEDGE"

"I pledge allegiance . . ."
This is a phrase I often quote.
Looking at the flag flowing and free,
Some inspiring thoughts come to me.
Kids recite it before they can spell their name.
Everyone says it preceding a sports game.
It is an honor I can proclaim
That I am associated with America's name.
This is the time to think and reflect
On "America the beautiful" which I respect
I am bonded to this land so strong
My forefathers fought to right the wrong
They fought for freedom in this land
To accomplish this feat they took a stand
That is precisely what I want to do
This is a pledge I make to you
My America, so strong and true,
I pledge my allegiance especially to you.●

FIGHTING FOR TRADE FAIRNESS WITH JAPAN, NOT PROTECTION

HON. BILL ALEXANDER

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I don't know if our distinguished colleague from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR], has ever been on a farm in Arkansas, but her leadership in seeking fairness in international trade has greatly benefited the people of my home State. She has been an active participant on the Democratic Task Force on Trade, and an outspoken supporter of American manufacturers who are suffering the disastrous effects of the inflated American dollar. The farmers of Arkansas are suffering as well, and we are grateful for her persistent demands for a fair deal for those in this country who depend on the export of American products.

Recently, the Kansas City Star published an article by the gentlelady from Ohio entitled "Fighting for Trade Fairness With Japan, Not Protection." I found her comments most useful and I commend them to my colleagues.

[From the Kansas City Star, Apr. 7, 1985]

FIGHTING FOR TRADE FAIRNESS WITH JAPAN, NOT PROTECTION

(By Representative Marcy Kaptur)

During the 1950s in America's heartland, the big debate among kids being hauled to school in yellow buses was whether your family drove a Ford or a Chevy. Folk culture. Midwestern boys are born with innate mechanical abilities; girls get temporary drivers' licenses at 16.

In Toledo, where I was born, the old Kaiser Jeep Corporation manufactured the Jeep that helped win World War II. Jeep was synonymous with America. In 1985, Jeep—now renamed American Motors—is a 49 percent French-owned firm in partnership with Renault.

When I travel from Toledo to Washington, I pass through Toledo Express Airport where a Chevy is on display. On its nameplate are the words "Made in Japan." When I arrive in Washington and stroll through the D.C. airport parking lot reserved for members of Congress, or the parking lot where I live in the nation's capital, I read the nameplates of Toyota, Nissan, Honda, Peugeot, Volvo, Volkswagen. These nameplates have begun to transform America's industrial heartland.

Though Chrysler, Ford and General Motors have component plants in my district, they are downsized to meet the obvious "new market realities." For example, the Saturn project GM plans to build in America is a modest scale plant of about 200,000 compacts per year, costing $450 million. This, however, is a minimal amount as compared with GM's 1984 profits of $4.5 billion.

In fact, GM, Ford, and Chrysler intend to invest capital abroad again this year to meet the competition. The big three auto firms have adopted an invest international posture, as well as the "Korean connection strategy" to import low-priced sub-compacts from Korea rather than tool up their own production in the U.S. As a result the America of the 1980's is drastically changing.

Voluntary restraints, imposed in 1981, were meant to limit the number of Japanese imported cars allowed in the U.S. to give the U.S. auto industry the needed time to bounce back. In 1984, Japanese auto imports were restricted to 1.85 million cars (it actually totalled 2.2 million), a $19 billion share of the U.S. market.

In 1984, therefore, about 20 percent of the 8 million cars sold in the U.S. were of Japanese origin. The VRA, although an imperfect mechanism because it was not specifically linked to U.S. investment and wage agreements, was imposed.

The Reagan administration has determined that higher after-tax profits of $10 billion earned by U.S. auto companies in 1984 are reason enough to lift the voluntary restraints. Will lifting the VRA contribute to the long-term health of the U.S. auto industry, or to America? I think not. The lifting of the restraints, absent any alternative, will serve only to exacerbate the decline of the U.S. auto industry.

The removal of the VRA will serve only to further open U.S. markets to world competition at a time when the fragile U.S. auto industry is still in a struggle to remain on American soil. The industry has made steady progress regaining competitiveness, but has a long way to go.

First, U.S. production volume is down. In 1978, 9.1 million U.S.-made cars were sold in America; in 1984, 7.9 million U.S.-made cars were sold in America. For some time, the U.S. production trend has been down and that means an erosion of the U.S. auto-producing base.

Second, recent higher U.S. corporate profits in autos were the result of the mix of sales as the market moved in the short term to larger models since gas prices have temporarily moved down. Accordingly, profits are less the result of increased sales volume than of changes in product mix.

Third, the U.S. auto industry is making strides to become more competitive. Productivity is up 35 percent. The number of things wrong per 100 vehicles has decreased by 55 percent. And, since 1980, nearly $60 billion has been invested in capital improvement and research and development. This despite the fact that the recession of 1982 cost the industry $20 billion in cash flow. Finally, over the last four years, U.S. car price increases have consistently trailed inflation.

Lifting of the VRA will force U.S. corporate investment abroad, and cost us jobs in America. Since 1974, $110 billion was invested by all U.S. companies abroad, including auto companies; by 1984, that amount doubled to a level of $221 billion. International companies do not need America anymore. In truth, they only need to sell in America.

Because of market uncertainty, U.S. manufacturers have had to put recent profits into the "cash-in-hand category" or to acquire new-cash holdings, rather than make the type of massive investment in America that would spell fundamental change in the industry.

The U.S. trade negotiators should not give up on autos and the VRA as a powerful lever to get trade fairness with Japan. The fact is that the U.S. trade deficit in 1984 with Japan is over $36 billion, of which $19 billion is autos. Outside GATT, Japan has erected trade barriers (over 2,500 of them) to U.S. products and services.

Though the voluntary quota idea may not have been the wisest course to pursue to achieve auto trade equity with Japan, it was the only lever this country had. It resulted in predictable import penetration levels, as well as spurred over $2 billion of Japanese investment in America (a strong indication of the willingness of Japan to take steps to keep their part of the American market). Any change in the current auto agreement should be predicated on opening Japanese markets to American products and services where barriers have been erected over two decades.

Fighting for trade fairness is not protection. It is common sense. Because the Japanese auto industry has an excess capacity of more than 2 million units, there will be tremendous competitive pressures within Japan not to exercise self-restraint in its exports to America. The U.S. sub-compact market—3.5 million cars last year—is the largest in the world. Why give it away? Let's get something for that valuable commodity.●

UNIFORMED SERVICES FORMER SPOUSE RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT DETAILED

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Uniformed Services Former Spouse Retirement Equity Act. Many military spouses find themselves without retirement benefits after a divorce. Although current law allows courts to consider the military retirement pay in divorce settlements, many courts fail to recognize the contributions and sacrifices of the spouse to a military career. Due to frequent moves, a military spouse is unable to establish a pension based on years worked with a single employer. In addition, it is ususally the spouse who resettle the family in a new neigborhood with each assignment.

Current law allows courts to consider the division of retired or retainer pay subject to certain restrictions. Because these restrictions allow the member to withhold taxes and other liabilities from the annuity before division, the spouse often does not receive a fair share of the retirement benefits. In addition, the Department of Defense has difficulty interpreting some of the formulas created by the courts to divide military retired pay.

In 1980 and 1982 Congress passed laws for CIA and Foreign Service spouses allowing them to claim a portion of retirement benefits based on years contributed to the career, subject to court review. This policy should be extended to military spouses.

The major provisions of the Uniformed Services Former Spouse Retirement Equity Act are:

I. RETIREMENT PAY

Representative SCHROEDER's bill, the Uniformed Services Former Spouse Retirement Equity Act, would establish a pro rata presumption to the retirement pay for former spouses, the same as is available to the CIA and Foreign Service spouses. The division would be subject to court review and would simplify annuity division.

FORMULA

Number of years of marriage during creditable service, times 0.50 times total equals former spouse.

Number of years of employment times retirement annuity equals retirement annuity.

(Note: As a result of pro rata division, each spouse would pay taxes based only on the portion of the retirement annuity he or she receives.)

II. SURVIVOR BENEFITS

This bill expands options available to those members and spouses who want to participate in the military survivor benefit plan.

At the time of retirement a member can choose to participate in SBP to provide financial protection for a survivor upon the member's death. If a member chooses to participate in the plan, a portion of his or her monthly retirement check will be withheld to provide the coverage.

A. Spousal sign-off: Currently, it is the sole decision of the member to decide whether to provide a survivor benefit for the spouse. This bill would provide joint spousal agreement when deciding whether to participate in the plan or to waive the election.

B. Category selection: The military member chooses the SBP beneficiary by the following categories: spouse, spouse and child or children, child or children, insurable interest. The different categories require different amounts to be withheld from the monthly check.

Under current law, former spouses are covered under the "insurable interest" category only, which is the most expensive benefit category. This bill would allow the couple to continue coverage of the former spouse under the less-expensive "spouse" category, subject to its rules, loss of survivior benefit coverage if the beneficiary remarries before age 60, or to select coverage under the insurable interest category.

In addition, this bill would:

First. Change the remarriage restriction from age 60 to age 55, bringing it in line with civil service survivor benefits.

Second. Establish a 2-year period in which military members already divorced, whose former spouses are not covered by SBP, can choose survivor benefit protection in either category.

Third. Allow members who chose SBP for former spouses under the insurable interest category, the only category available for former spouses under current law, to switch back to the spouse category, subject to written agreement of the former spouse.●

INDIA TURNS THE TIDE

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, India's Prime Minister, Rajiv Gandhi, has begun a revolution that may well be destined to change the course of his nation and other developing nations economically and politically in the next generation.

Ever since World War II, India has been in the vanguard of the struggling new nations which have felt themselves caught up in the struggle between the West and the socialist bloc. India encouraged socialism for many years; other neutral nations followed her lead.

Launched with such fanfare, socialism has been an economic catastrophe in India—and everywhere else. Holding aside the divisive politics of socialism, there is not one nation in the world today that can claim that socialism has created and distributed wealth, jobs, and prosperity to its people.

It takes a great political leader to admit a grand failure and move on to something else. Rajiv Gandhi is a great political leader. He has turned to the approach that restored America's prosperity, cutting his nation's very high marginal tax rates and deregulating portions of the private sector. Much remains to be done, but I am convinced that if India pursues the policies of freedom, opportunity, incentives, and economic growth on which it has been set, the world will soon see another "Asian miracle."

I recommend Don Lambro's article on India to my fellow members.

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 29, 1985]

SUPPLY-SIDE INDIA TURNS THE TIDE

(By Donald Lambro)

Will the profund economic reforms being implemented by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi make India the next economic miracle?

Though it has gotten relatively little notice in the news media, what Mr. Gandhi is doing to India's economy could have far-reaching effects not only among his own people, but among other Third World nations in Asia and throughout the world.

Moving away from the socialist and trade-protectionist policies followed by his mother, Indira Gandhi, and his grandfather, Jawaharlal Nehru, young Mr. Gandhi believes that private initiative and increased foreign investment hold the key to leading his nation of some 750 million persons into a new era of economic prosperity.

Indeed, in some ways Mr. Gandhi is becoming a practitioner of supply-side economics, cautiously testing some of its prescriptions for economic growth without abandoning India's mixed economy.

Under Mr. Gandhi, personal taxes have been slashed. Estate taxes have been abolished. Licensing requirements and regulations—which have posed obstacles to new business expansion—have been sharply reduced.

Speaking this month to a conference in New Delhi of industrialists from 27 nations, Mr. Gandhi said that India represented an untapped market for consumer goods, and invited the world's corporations to begin investing in India and taking advantage of its huge manpower pool.

To encourage new investment in such core industries as agricultural technology, communications, and energy, Mr. Gandhi has begun to remove regulations that have impeded foreign investment, and has lifted import duties on computers and other electronic equipment.

After decades of relatively poor-to-modest economic growth, he is trying to position his country to begin following in the footsteps of its successful eastern neighbors: South Korea, Japan, Hong Kong, and Taiwan.

India still has a highly regulated economy and has a long way to go before it can even approach the economic dynamism of those enterprising economies. However, if India stays on its present deregulatory course, it could very likely become Asia's next economic miracle. If it does, it will be largely because of Mr. Gandhi's open-mindedness and his ability to change and to adapt to a new era of enterprise.

India long ago demonstrated its ability to depart from its rigid economic controls to deal with what was once its foremost problem: its inability to feed itself. Once plagued by famines, India solved its food problems in the mid-1960s with capitalist solutions that starving Marxist and socialist nations in Africa and elsewhere would do well to emulate.

For one thing, agricultural income in India is exempt from taxes. The result has been substantially increased food production and fairer prices paid to farmers.

Thus, notes Malcolm S. Forbes Jr. in a recent issue of Forbes magazine, India can better feed 750 million today "than it could 350 million people at the time of its independence."

Through their own wits and entrepreneurial spirit, much Western aid, and the rise of economic growth in the region generally, large numbers of Indians have lifted themselves out of poverty into what Mr. Gandhi calls the "take-off stage."

Mr. Gandhi's bold vision: to open up India's vast untapped market to a multitude of consumer goods that, in turn, will create new businesses and jobs for his people. He does not talk of competing with exporting nations like Taiwan and Japan—although that, too, may come one day—but, rather, he emphasizes the growing purchasing power of India's consumers. "We can depend on our own market," he says.

However, much more is riding on Rajiv Gandhi's latest free-market initiatives than the economic future of the world's largest democracy.

For if Mr. Gandhi's bold reforms succeed in India, they can succeed in Third World nations in Africa, the Middle East, Southeast Asia, and in Latin America.

And if that begins to happen, the Soviet Union's disastrous socialist experiment will cease to be a model for the impoverished nations of the world.●

NEW YORK POST LOOKS AHEAD ON OUR NICARAGUAN POLICY

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the votes on aid to the Contras may be over for the time being, but the problems the Nicaraguan regime presents to its people, to the country's neighbors, and to the United States, will remain. For an assessment of the immediate future of U.S. policy toward Nicaragua, I recommend to my colleagues the following worthy editorial by the New York Post.

[From the New York Post, May 2, 1985]

ONLY FEAR OF LOSING WILL BRING SANDINISTAS TO TERMS

An epidemic of second thoughts over Nicaragua seems to have broken out in Congress. Last week the Senate narrowly voted to supply the anticommunist guerrillas there with $14 million worth of bandages, food stamps, parasols and other forms of humanitarian aid.

This tentative proposal was then overturned by the liberal majority, mainly but not exclusively Democrats, in the House of Representatives. Congressmen took the view that humanitarian aid, even when distributed by the Red Cross, was altogether too bellicose and Reaganite to stomach.

That was last week. This week a mood of patriotic alarm set in. On Monday the Senate voted without dissent to condemn the Sandinista government in Nicaragua for "militarization, oppression and interference in the affairs of its neighbors." It seems that the learned senators had learned that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega was in Moscow and received Soviet promises of increased aid. They were thunderstruck—"Holy mackeral, these Sandinistas are Communists! Why did nobody tell us."

Hard on the heels of their conversion, the President belatedly decided to impose a trade embargo on Nicaragua.

While diplomatic relations with the Sandinista regime will be maintained, Nicaraguan ships and airplanes will be denied entry to the U.S. and all trade will be cut off. Incredibly, this has been opposed inside the White House so far, in case it might provoke "reprisals" from the Europeans.

Such reasoning is both feeble and unrealistic. European reprisals would be strictly verbal since European economies could not withstand a light sea-breeze. And no diplomatic adviser should have to be told that.

But, if the Administration is now ready to embark on a more sustained anti-Sandinista campaign it cannot stop at a trade cut-off.

It must publish—and publicize—evidence that the Sandinistas are assisting revolutionary subversion in neighboring countries. Seven Nicaraguan agents assisting leftist guerrillas were captured last month in Honduras. They should star in every speech by Reagan, Secretary Shultz and other foreign policy spokesmen in case the new realism dissipates.

It must lay clear policy aims before the public.

First, the Sandinistas must call off their "revolution without frontiers" against neighboring states.

Second, they must democratize and demilitarize their own society. These aims depend upon each other. However peaceful it professes to be, a heavily armed and closed totalitarian Nicaragua would not be a convincing good neighbor.

The Sandinistas, of course, will regard a demand for democratization as equivalent to surrendering power—something no Marxist regime has ever done voluntarily. So the prospect for a genuinely peaceful resolution of the Central American crisis is slight. All that sanctions and other such pressures can achieve is to slow the Sandinistas' push for total control and to make them more cautious about promoting subversion next door.

In the long term, given sufficiently generous Soviet aid—and Moscow seems to have promised Ortega all he needs—sanctions may not manage even that.

It is essential to maintain local military pressure.

Aid for the contras must be brought back onto the political agenda on a generous enough scale to pose a credible threat to Sandinista power.

Only one thing will persuade them to share power democratically with the Nicaraguan people—the prospect of losing it altogether.●

MTSU BASKETBALL TEAMS BRING HONOR TO TENNESSEE

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, it is my desire to bring to the attention of the 99th Congress the outstanding achievements of the MTSU basketball teams, from the Sixth District of Tennessee.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the team members of the MTSU Blue Raiders and Lady Raiders basketball teams, as well as their coaches, on their accomplishments this season. Both teams showed that with the combination of hard work, perseverance, and skill, any goal is attainable, even the goal of playing in the NCAA tournament.

The MTSU Blue Raiders finished fifth in the Ohio Valley Conference regular season this year. The team, led by Coach Bruce Stewart, then pushed up from behind to earn their way into the NCAA playoffs. They defeated Murray State, Tennessee Tech, and Youngstown State to capture the OVC tournament victory. This outstanding display of perseverance by the Blue Raiders showed that, despite incredible odds, victory can be won if a team is willing to push themselves to their limits. The Blue Raiders battled their way to the NCAA tournament and in doing so brought much honor to themselves and to all Tennesseans.

The accomplishments of the MTSU Lady Raiders are no less astounding this year. The Lady Raiders, coached by Larry Inman, went to the NCAA tournament for the third straight year in row. The Lady Raiders captured both the OVC regular season and the OVC tournament titles this year. This is also the third year that these young ladies have won these two titles; and on the way to reaching these victories, they set or tied a total of 10 school records. Like their counterparts, the Blue Raiders, the Lady Raiders demonstrated superb skill and perseverance. They have gone beyond their tremendous showings of hard work and devotion of the past, and have brought even more honor to themselves and their school.

I commend these two teams and their coaches on the fine job they've done this season. I congratulate the Blue Raiders and the Lady Raiders for their victories and I thank them for the pride and honor that they have brought to themselves, their school, their parents, and the great and sovereign State of Tennessee.●

SODIUM BROMINE

HON. BERYL ANTHONY, JR.

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the Free Trade Agreement in the House Ways and Means Committee, I was assured by Trade Representative Brock that any bromine compound found import-sensitive by the ITC would not be immediately available for duty-free importation into the United States. Several of these compounds, including sodium bromine, were found to be import sensitive and under the Free Trade Agreement would be frozen for 5 years. However, now it is my understanding that Mr. Brock has recommended to the President that sodium bromine be included under the GSP Program. This of course would allow it to enter the United States immediately—duty free.

When this situation was brought to my attention, I immediately contacted the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative reminding him of the commitment given to the Ways and Means Committee. I was informed sodium bromine was added to the GSP Program because of a decline in 1984 sales.

While I am not satisfied with his arguments or his decision to renege on his commitment, he did assure me that he would monitor the imports of sodium bromine closely, and should a surge occur in the imports of this compound, he would immediately reconsider his decision.

Since Mr. Brock has left the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, I would like to include in today's RECORD two letters. The first is a letter from Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI to Mr. Brock regarding the commitments made to the Ways and Means Committee on sodium bromine, and the second is a letter from Mr. Brock to me outlining his intentions to monitor imports of this compound. I would hope these assurances by the now Secretary of Labor would be binding, regardless of any further changes in the Office of U.S. Trade Representative.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, April 18, 1985.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BROCK,
U.S. Trade Representative,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BILL: It has come to my attention that you are seriously considering recommending to the President that he waive the competitive need limits and thereby retain duty-free treatment under the Generalized System of Preferences on imports of sodium bromide from Israel.

I am very concerned about the implications of such an action in view of the commitments made by you to this Committee in the context of the U.S.-Israel Free Trade Area Agreement negotiations and the draft implementing legislation to maintain duties on this and other import-sensitive items for at least the next five years.

Sincerely yours,

DAN ROSTENKOWSKI,
Chairman.

U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, DC, April 22, 1985.

Hon. BERYL ANTHONY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BERYL: Thank you for the phone call today regarding the de mininis waiver for sodium bromide under our GSP program.

Beryl, we reached a decision to leave sodium bromide on the GSP list, as it has been in the past, basically because there was a decline in the 1984 sales into our market. The Interagency group which met on this subject, during its review of the total GSP program, was simply unable to argue for removal in the face of declining imports. The amounts were so small as, in our judgement, represent no threat of any serious consequences to the U.S. industry.

While I understand both the ITC decision and your own concerns, it is important to restate that we have to operate the GSP program both ethically as well as legally consistent. We have tried very hard to respond to both, in part by taking four additional products off the GSP list in the bromine category. However, in that area of sodium bromide we felt there was no adequate justification to change the rules.

Let me assure you again that we will keep this matter under constant review. Should a surge occur which significantly reverse the pattern, offers a prospect of injury, or removes the logic of the de mininis waiver, we will reconsider that decision. As I told you last fall, and again today, we want to make absolutely certain that our program does not abrogate the commitments made to you during this discission over the last several months.

Thank you again for the opportunity to work with you. It is a pleasure. I wish you well.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.●

TENNESSEE TECH ATHLETES BRING HONOR TO TENNESSEE

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to note an important occasion which has come to pass in the Sixth Congressional District of Tennessee. Tennessee has been witness to an outstanding display of courage and perseverance by the Golden Eagles basketball team from Tennessee Technological University. The fact that this group of young men won the Ohio Valley Conference regular season victory and then went on to make their first appearance in the National Invitational Tournament, not only brings me great pride, but brings great pride to all Tennesseans.

The Golden Eagles set a lofty goal for themselves this year and they attained it. Their participation in the NIT marks their first national tournament in 22 years. It was a great reward for their hard work and determination to be selected to play in the NIT, where they competed with the University of Tennessee Volunteers for the first time since the 1949-50 season. The Golden Eagles finished their season with a 19-7 record.

It is only fitting that, at this time I also commend Tech's coach, Tom Deaton, on his fine job of coaching the Golden Eagles this year. My sincerest congratulations go out to Tom, who in addition to leading the Golden Eagles to the NIT, was himself named the 1985 OVC Coach of the Year. He is only the second Golden Eagle coach to win this honor.

The Golden Eagles of Tennessee Tech displayed perseverance and much skill this basketball season. They battled their way to the top and in doing so, brought great pride upon themselves, their school, their parents, and the great and sovereign State of Tennessee.●

DR. ARCH CHILTON SCURLOCK

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention and the attention of the Members of this body a very special man from my State of Virginia. Over the years I have had the privilege of knowing him and his outstanding accomplishments.

Dr. Arch Chilton Scurlock's story not only reflects on the opportunities Virginia offers its citizens but also on the man and his ability as an engineer-scientist and inventor, entrepreneur, venture capitalist, and president and/or chairman of the board of several important companies in Virginia and in other parts of the United States.

Dr. Scurlock was born in Texas and attended the University of Texas earning a B.S. degree in chemical engineering and a B.A. in physics in 1941. In 1943, he received an M.S. and in 1948 a Sc.D. in chemical engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

During World War II, he served for 3½ years as a naval officer, a year and a half of that time in the Pacific and 1 year in the Office of Naval Research, Washington, DC.

In 1949, he cofounded Atlantic Research Corp., which is headquartered in Alexandria, VA. He served as president and chief executive officer of this fine public firm from 1948 to 1962 and as chairman and a director from 1962 to 1967. Atlantic Research is the granddaddy of advanced technology organizations in Greater Washington metropolitan area with revenues last year of $176 million.

Dr. Scurlock was also one of the founders and first president of Greater Washington Investors. Greater Washington is a respected public venture capital organization with net assets at the end of last year of over $23 million.

Dr. Scurlock was also a founder in 1968 of Research Industries, Inc., which is headquartered in Alexandria, VA, and is president and chairman of the board of this substantial private investment and venture capital company. Assets of Research Industries are presently in the neighborhood of $40 million.

Dr. Scurlock has for the last 10 years served on the board of directors and was recently elected chairman of Halifax Engineering, Inc., headquartered in Alexandria, VA. Halifax, which first offered shares to the public in 1983, is an engineering services company that provides employment for several hundred Virginians and residents of the Greater Washington area. Halifax revenues this year are expected to be in the neighborhood of $30 million.

In 1969, through Research Industries, Inc., Dr. Scurlock made an investment in TransTechnology Corp.; and with Dan McBride, also a former Atlantic Research officer, took over the management of this small, failing west coast company. While maintaining his office in Old Town Alexandria, Dr. Scurlock assumed the office of chairman of the board of TransTechnology. Mr. McBride was appointed president and chief executive officer. Since Dr. Scurlock became responsible for the management of TransTechnology, revenues have increased at a compound rate of 28 percent per year from $2.7 million to over $115 million. During these 16 years, employment has grown to 1,700 and manufacturing operations have been expanded to locations in seven States.

TransTechnology is engaged in the design, manufacture, and sale of products in the aerospace-defense and industrial products industries. Aerospace-defense products include: First, cargo restraint and control products, which include helicopter rescue hoists and external hook systems; second, high-reliability devices containing solid propellants, high explosives, or pyrotechnic materials; and law enforcement products; third, custom electrical-interconnection systems; and fourth, weather instruments. Industrial products include: First, textile-finishing machinery and related supplies; second, worm-drive fasteners; and third, crane accessories and other construction-related equipment. The company is either a leader or an important factor in most of its product lines.

From his headquarters office in Sherman Oaks, CA, Mr. Dan McBride, an early associate of Dr. Scurlock, serves TransTechnology with great skill as its president.

Another management milestone and honor TransTechnology has recently achieved is its inclusion in the Forbes November 1984 annual Up and Comer 300, a group comprising the aristocracy of medium-sized public companies. This is the second consecutive year TransTechnology has been included in this select list. To earn a spot this year a company needed to have a 5-year return on equity of at least 14.3 percent and return on equity for the latest 12 months of at least 10 percent. For consideration, corporate revenues must be between $1 million and $250 million. Forbes reported that TransTechnology's return on equity for the last 5 years was a robust 27 percent.

As a constituent of mine, I am proud of the fact that Arch Scurlock has found Virginia an excellent State for his entrepreneurial skills and a State that offers unlimited opportunities for economic development.

I would also like to point out that Dr. Scurlock's outstanding career offers our young people an example of how, with ability and hard work, one can attain success in our great State. They do not have to seek greener pastures elsewhere, but have the opportunities right here.

I am proud that this extraordinary man resides in my State. His success story serves as an inspiration to others that we in Virginia welcome the person with the pioneering spirit.●

A TRIBUTE TO AIR SYSTEMS, INC.

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend a company recognized today by the President for providing jobs to disabled workers.

The company is called Air Systems, Inc., and it manufactures cargo nets in Wilson, NC, a city lying in the congressional district which I represent.

The president of the company, Mr. George Arapage, was selected to receive an award from the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped at its annual meeting in Washington tonight. The award honors his company as the Small Employer of the Year.

Air Systems, Inc., follows a policy of hiring qualified disabled workers and promoting them on an equal basis with other employees. Almost half of its work force is made up of disabled persons.

The company grants personalized, one-on-one instruction to mentally and physically disabled persons in order to integrate them as well as possible into production activities.

I am proud of Mr. Arapage and his company. They have reminded us that our definition of the human community must include everyone, at the workplace no less than anywhere else. The people who lead and operate the company bring home a simple and powerful fact: We are all a part of one human community. We all have imperfections in our thinking and acting: Everyone has mental and physical limits. In this sense, all human beings are disabled, and no one can be justly excluded from human activity merely because of a mental or physical imperfection.

For all these reasons, the people of Wilson and the rest of North Carolina can take pride in this exemplary product of the progressive thinking rapidly making our State a leader in American business.●

MY PLEDGE TO AMERICA

HON. BERYL ANTHONY, JR

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, we hear a lot about rights and what our country owes us. Today, I'd like to take a moment and read to you an essay written by Richard C. Sanford, about our duty to our country.

Richard, I'm proud to say, is a constituent of mine. He lives in Prescott, AR, and is a senior at Prescot High School. With this essay, he won the Voice of Democracy Scholarship Program in Arkansas this year. I think Richard's words will have meaning for all of us.

The essay follows:

MY PLEDGE TO AMERICA

"He loves his country best who strives to make it best." These words from R.G. Ingersoll on the 1882 Decoration Day Oration sum up my idea of what made this country a great nation. It is the cooperation of devoted American people to sustain its most valuable asset . . . freedom.

I believe it is my duty to my country to love it. After all, it is the love of freedom that compels me to desire to do more for my country. Freedom is a treasure enjoyed by not enough people in this world; it is my feeling that once tasted, freedom spawns a perpetual feeling of responsibility within one to do everything he can to preserve it.

I pledge myself to uphold my country's constitution and obey its laws. Our Founding Fathers worked hard in the long shadow of a revolution and short shadows of the lesser revolts that followed. If these troubles had taught them anything, it was that government belongs to people.

Lovers of freedom often overlook this paradox: There is no true freedom without discipline. An ordered and disciplined life gives us freedom to do the things we want to do . . .

Life offers us a choice between self-discipline and imposed discipline. The advocates of dictators would have all discipline imposed by outside force to produce efficient lives. But those of us who love the feedom of democracy do not care to have our lives regulated by some dictator.

Yet discipline is essential. Have it we must, whether we like it or not. If w do not want dictators, we must impose upon ourselves discipline to bring order out of social chaos.

Most Americans accept with enthusiasm, the laws set forth by out National leaders. I consider it a blessing to live in a country where the people rule by representation.

I pledge my respect to the American soldiers who gave their lives in war to save the American nation from the corruption of totalitarianism. Those who went willingly to far away lands went not merely to inflict pain upon the enemy, but to fight for the causes of freedom, peace, and democracy. From the first shot fired at Lexington to the invasion of Granada, American soldiers have displayed unmatched devotion to their country and deserve the utmost honor and expression of regard from the people of the United States.

I respect the American Flag and for what it stands. I think that every American citizen should relate to the flag with a sense of patriotism and responsibility. I know the flag of the United States is not just a colorful piece of cloth, but it is a symbol of a people unified for the causes of freedom.

After the British had ruthlessly attacked Fort McHenry on the night of September 14, 1814, Francis Scott Key saw the battered flag still waving the next morning as a ray of hope and was so moved by its glory that he wrote the words of our national anthem.

Finally, I pledge myself to the protection of my country and to all worthy causes, no matter how difficult the task may be, which may be beneficial in the preservation of the United States of America.●

SOLIDARITY SUNDAY FOR SOVIET JEWS

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, May 5, I had the privilege of walking hand in hand with over 100,000 concerned people in New York City in the 14th annual "Solidarity Sunday for Soviet Jewry." I would like to join my colleagues in focusing attention on this and other concurrent demonstrations of support for the courageous Jewish citizens of the Soviet Union who continue to fight oppression and hardships in an effort to secure their basic human rights.

In recent years, the number of Jews allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union has fallen to abysmally low levels. The irony of this restricted emigration policy is that though the Soviet Government is virulently anti-Semitic, it continues to insist that the Soviet Union contains a Jewish homeland. Those who are forced to remain must endure the inhumane treatment of the Soviet authorities—treatment that includes forced institutionalization in mental hospitals, prohibition from working in the fields in which they were trained, and an absence of religious freedom.

Let me relate to you briefly the story of one refusenik whom I have adopted. His name is Boris Chernobilsky and he applied for an emigration visa in 1975, for himself and his wife. As a result of his application, which was of course denied, Boris lost his job. He protested the Government's action, which landed him in jail for 15 days. Mrs. Chernobilsky has been a Hebrew teacher, despite the perils that this action carries with it. Boris and his wife Elena have a strong commitment to carrying on their heritage, even though it is hazardous to do so in the Soviet Union.

During a gathering of activists in the Opalikha woods, Boris was arrested on trumped-up charges of beating a policeman. He refused to participate in the travesty of justice known as the Soviet court system and conveyed his refusal in a letter to President Brezhnev. Boris was convicted without appearing at trial, and sentenced to 1 year in a labor camp. He was released in 1983, and has since returned to Moscow.

Boris and Elena Chernobilsky have continued to apply for exit visas, and have not ceased in their efforts to adhere to their faith and traditions. They have paid dearly for their convictions. In the winter of 1983 Boris was refused a telephone for reasons well known to him. The same year, the Chernobilskys received no letters, a fact which strongly suggests that the state is cutting off their mail.

The Chernobilskys are not alone in their suffering. Thousands of other tragic cases have been documented.

The atmosphere of state sponsored anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union is a pervasive one, working not only to wear down the resistance of individual dissidents, but also to effectively weaken the morale of all Jews who want to leave the Soviet Union.

Rallies such as the one in New York City are crucial to the fight to free Soviet Jewry. They show the Soviet leadership that we will not forget those who are fighting oppression in the Soviet Union. It is this message of support which we must continue to send, not only to the Soviet leaders, but also to the refuseniks themselves as a beacon of hope and strength to those who are kept prisoners in that country.

We are cautiously optimistic that with the changes in Soviet leadership and with the slight increase in visas granted during April, we may see somewhat better times for Soviet Jews. But until this actually happens we cannot let up in our fight. This issue will not fade in importance nor will it be reconciled through empty promises.

The Soviets cannot merely brush our criticism aside by saying that issue of Soviet Jewry is an internal affair of the Soviet Government. Through its signing of the Helsinki accords, the U.N. Charter, and other international agreements, the Soviet Union has implicitly acknowledged that human rights is a proper subject for debate by the international community.

As the Soviet authorities continue to restrict the freedoms of its Jewish citizens in an attempt to crush their remaining resistance, it is only demonstrations of international support that keep the hopes of these Jews alive. I believe Martin Gilbert said it most eloquently in his recent book "The Jews of Hope":

Cut off from the world, the Jews of hope refuse to bow down to superior force, or to accept the threat of never being allowed to leave the Soviet Union. A few are crushed by the pressure imposed upon them. Others are forced into silence and isolation. But most of them continue to struggle, against the odds, waiting for the day, which they continue to believe will eventually come, when they will be allowed to leave.●

GLOBAL ECONOMIC GROWTH NEEDS A GLOBAL TAX CUT

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan will confer with several world political leaders this week on monetary and trade issues. The President likes to make homespun analogies, and so he might remind the heads of state that water does not flow from lower to higher levels, and capital does not flow from low tax regions to those with high marginal tax rates.

The following article by Warren Brookes shows that the net capital income to the United States since the Reagan economic recovery began has not been the result so much of additional new capital inflows from overseas as it is the result of less capital leaving the United States. U.S. investment is now far more attractive than it used to be before the Reagan tax rate cuts. And with the tax reforms to come, which will further reduce marginal tax rates, the disparity will only increase.

The world's leaders must quickly learn that there is no artificial device yet conceived, no protectionist measure known, that in the long run can stop people from saving and investing where incentives are strongest. Rajiv Gandhi in India is now following the policy of increasing prosperity and creating employment with tax cuts. Indonesia is looking at this approach as well. Europe should also follow America's lead. Reducing the enormous marginal tax rates most Europeans labor under is the only effective way Europe's leaders have to convince their own investors not to seek economic growth elsewhere in the world. It's also the only effective way of making sure that every European shares in prosperity tomorrow just as most Americans are sharing in our prosperity today.

The article follows:

A TAX CUT SHOW-AND-TELL FOR BONN

When President Reagan goes to Bonn this week, he will carry a message the Canadians and Europeans may not want to hear—but it is in their self-interest to listen.

That message is: If you want to keep pace with American growth and hang on to your capital, you has better cut your marginal income-tax rates—now. Because when we get through with tax reform, the United States will become the capital mecca of the world.

As proof of his thesis, Mr. Reagan can point to two major developments: the rising "net inflow" of capital to the United States since our top marginal tax rates were cut to 50 percent in 1981-82. (This was caused mainly by U.S. capital staying home, instead of being exported.); and the parallel experience of Canada, whose own sluggish economic growth and soaring deficits have resulted from rising tax rates in the same period.

Contrary to popular misconceptions, the "net inflow" of capital to the United States has not been caused by excessive capital flows from overseas. In fact, in constant dollars, the 1984 inflow was the same as in 1978 and 1981, when the dollar was 40 percent lower than today.

The big difference is this: U.S. capital outflows overseas have dropped 58 percent in constant dollars since 1981. They are now 41 percent below 1978, principally because since 1978 U.S. capital gains tax rates have been cut from a top of 49 percent to 20 percent.

The huge drop in capital outflow has come during a period when American credit markets have expanded by a record 32 percent in real dollars, That means soaring U.S. capital is now staying home with a vengeance and expanding.

This is why the U.S. economy has created more than 8 million jobs since December 1982, and nearly 1.8 million since last October—more jobs than the Common Market countries have created in the last 12 years!

It is also why the United States now has the highest employment ratio in its history, and the highest labor force participation rate—almost 65 percent of all adults.

Relative to the supposedly "booming '60s" the "constant" base unemployment rate is now 40 percent lower than during the record year of 1966.

All this at a time when the Common Market countries and the United Kingdom have an average unemployment rate of more than 11 percent and rising. And Canada's sluggish economy still has a rate above 11 percent.

Canada, for example, dares not lecture the United States about budget deficits and the need for higher U.S. taxes. That high-tax nation just posted its biggest deficit ever—$34.8 billion, which amounts to more than $1,400 per capita, nearly double the U.S. figure of less than $800.

Worse, Canada posted this deficit in the third year of a weak recovery which has been attenuated by a substantial rise in Canada's average marginal tax rates (from inflation). Its overall tax burden has soared from 32.9 percent of gross national product in 1981 to nearly 34 percent in 1984. The U.S. burden has fallen from 32.4 to 30.9 percent in that period.

The same pattern holds true for virtually all the Common Market countries, where much higher tax rates have produced very slow economic recovery. Several of these countries have produced deficits in excess of 6 percent of GNP, compared with less than 5 percent in the United States.

Both Italy and Sweden already have reached the point where every tax increase makes their deficits larger and their economies more sluggish. Italy's 90 percent 1981 tax increase succeeded only in increasing its relative deficit burden nearly 70 percent, from 10 to 17 percent of GNP.

In short, the United States has every right to warn these countries that unless they get their tax rates and burdens down, they are in for even bigger trouble, especially with serious tax reform now looming on the U.S. horizon.

Top marginal tax rates in Europe now average more than 65 percent—and in some countries rise to as much as 80 or 90 percent. One does not have to be an economist to know that if the United States cuts its top rates to the 30-35 percent range, the rate of capital flow into the United States will quickly double.

President Reagan has no need to apologize to any of the summit conferees—and every right to instruct them on how to grow.●

ARNETTE AND RUSHING MAKE HISTORIC JOURNEY

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the 99th Congress the accomplishment of two of my constituents. These two men, Mr. C.B. Arnette and Mr. Elvis Rushing, of Murfreesboro, have undertaken a 2,100-mile, 21-day journey from Nashville, to Aberdeen, MS., and back in a recreational boat. They sailed via the Tennessee, the Ohio, and the Mississippi Rivers, the Gulf intra-coastal waterway and the new Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway.

Arnette and Rushing are cousins who both turned 67 in March. They began their journey on September 20 in Arnette's 24-by-8 foot pontoon boat; and many days they traveled 125 miles or more. They also weathered three storms between Nashville and Aberdeen. During the course of their journey they even rescued two children form a sailboat which was drifting out to sea.

On behalf of the people of the Sixth District of Tennessee, I would like to congratulate these two men on making this historic voyage. They have proven that the spirit of adventure is not only found in Mark Twain's, "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn." The spirit of adventure is very much alive and well in Tennessee. I take great pride in the accomplishments of my fellow Tennesseans, especially when their accomplishments demonstrate such courage and ingenuity. Mr. Arnette and Mr. Rushing have shown that high goals can be reached when people are willing to work hard.

Following is an account of their journey, as published in the Nashville Tennessean on March 6, 1985:

OLD SALTS END HISTORIC VOYAGE

(By Laura Milner)

Huck Finn's life on the Mississippi inspired two Murfreesboro retirees to plunk their flat-bottomed boat into the Cumberland River and log 2,100 miles before dropping anchor for good yesterday in Nashville.

C.B. Arnette and Elvis Rushing, third cousins who both turn 67 this month, docked their pontoon at Riverfront Park, ending the last of a two-legged voyage that totaled 19 days.

"Next, we ought to try the Amazon or the Susquehannah," Rushing said after stepping ashore.

Their weathered faces told of trials aboard the "LuceeBee," where they opened their cots nightly on the deck, slept under the stars and awakened at sunrise to either sail smoothly onward or fight 5-foot waves in storms that threatened to capsize their boat.

They left Nashville in Arnette's 24- by 8-foot pontoon boat, packed with food and supplies, on Sept. 20 and sailed the Cumberland River to the Land Between the Lakes, where they entered the Tennessee River. They followed it some 40 miles to the Ohio, headed west on the Ohio for 45 miles, and—like young Huck Finn—joined the Mississippi river at Cairo, Ill.

"They have found a fragment of a lumber raft (it is high water and dead summer time), and are floating down the river by night, and hiding in the willows by day—bound for Cairo—whence the negro will seek freedom in the heart of the free States. But in a fog, they pass Cairo without knowing it."—from "Keelboat Talk and Manners," published in 1883 in Mark Twain's Life on the Mississippi.

Unlike Huck and Jim, the Murfreesboro buddies easily found their way from Cairo to New Orleans—some 900 miles—along the Mississippi, they refueled every day and a half, but spent most of their time aboard the LuceeBee, named after C.B. and his wife, Louise.

At New Orleans they entered the 35-mile Intracoastal Waterway Canal, crossed the Gulf of Mexico to Mobile, followed the Mobile River to the Tombigbee River, and were stopped cold at Aberdeen, Miss., on Oct. 4.

With 1,600 miles behind them and winter on its way, they discovered the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway was not yet navigable.

"That was as far as we could go because the new locks were not completed," Arnette said.

"Since 1969, we've been making all these rivers east of the Mississippi, and this was the only one we had not done."

"I really wanted to go, more than anything else, to see the new waterway for myself," Rushing said.

So the two set out last fall in the pontoon, powered by a 50-hp outboard motor, to "go new places and see new things," he said.

They averaged 125 miles a day and would drop anchor and open their cots at nightfall, going to sleep around 9:30 p.m. They got up at 5 a.m., brewed coffee on their makeshift stove and steered back on course.

They weathered three storms between Nashville and Aberdeen, Miss., and rescued two children from a sailboat slowly drifting out to sea.

They also answered a distress call from a lone, old fisherman, who saw two snakes poised on a tree limb above him. Arnette and Rushing pulled within firing range and shot one of the snakes from the tree.

"My husband fishes all the time, everywhere, and loves to hunt," Louise Arnette said yesterday as she awaited his return.

"I've been on some short trips with him, but not for a million dollars would I have gone on that pontoon boat trip. It's too rough."

Upon reaching Aberdeen and learning they could go no further Arnette and Rushing returned to their homes in Murfreesboro.

Both men grew up and retired in Murfreesboro; Arnette from the antiques business, and Rushing from his grocery and salvage stores.

"We've been friends all our lives," Rushing said. "In fact, we're a little kin—third or fourth cousins."

They were eager to maneuver the Tombigbee Waterway when it opened Jan. 14, but the weather kept them grounded until Friday, when they resumed their journey from Aberdeen.

For Arnette, the most memorable part was Monday's storm, during which his boat was bouncing against 5-foot waves in Kentucky Lake.

"That fourth storm was worse than any," he said. "We had wind gusts up to 50 mph, and the waves were 5 feet and higher. Everything got wet. It took us three hours to go seven miles.

"For two or three minutes, I really thought the boat would go under."

But they arrived yesterday at 12:45 p.m., only 15 minutes behind schedule. They were welcomed by their grandsons, Joe Daniel Rushing and D.B. Sommardahl, who jumped up and down shouting: "There he comes! There he comes!"

They also were welcomed by Lt. Col. Bill Malone, deputy district engineer, Nashville District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

"This is the first time any recreational boat has ever made this trip, from Nashville to Nashville, using the Tenn-Tom Waterway," Malone said, adding that several hundred thousand tons of produce and coal have moved through the waterway in six weeks.

Arnette said they wrote about what they saw along the way, and plan to publish their story. Both laughed and admitted to reading Huckleberry Finn, but Arnette said he favored the late Memphis author, Richard Haliburton.

"He wrote personal accounts of exploring and his No. 1 book was Royal Road to Romance," he said. "He made one trip and got lost or killed around 1936, I think."●

SAVING GRACE

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, on May 1, I introduced with several of my colleagues—Mr. ARMEY, Mr. BOULTER, Mr. DELAY, Mr. DIOGUARDI, and Mr. GROTBERG—H.R. 2297, legislation which would require all Federal agencies to report annually to Congress on the status of implementing the recommendations of the Grace Commission.

The President's "Private Sector Survey on Cost Control," familiarly known as the Grace Commission, has served in a critically useful capacity in drawing attention not only to where wasteful spending exists but also to what actions should be taken to remedy the situation. In January of 1984, the Commission issued its 47-volume final report indicating that $425 billion in budget savings could be realized over 3 years by adoption of 2,478 specific recommendations.

There has been considerable debate in the intervening time about how accurate those savings estimates are and how feasible or desirable many of the recommendations are. Studies have been conducted to verify the Commission's findings. Although not all of the recommendations were analyzed, of those that were, GAO—February 1985—found overall merit in 80 percent; and a joint CBO/GAO review—February 1984—substantiated $98 billion in 3-year savings.

Whether $98 billion or $425 billion, the potential savings are of a magnitude which must not be ignored. And this type of reduction from the deficit is much less painful than major cuts in programs or increasing taxes.

Obviously, not all of the recommendations are practical. But I believe the Federal Government owes it to its citizens to at least consider these recommendations and not merely discard them without adequate scrutiny.

H.R. 2297, then, would require all Federal agencies to report annually to Congress on the status of implementation; this report would include:

First, a list of recommendations under the agency's jurisdiction;

Second, a timetable for implementation;

Third, an analysis of the impact from implementation;

Fourth, an explanation of reasons why any recommendations are not included.

In this way, we seek some sort of accountability so that the American people—who overwhelmingly seek an end to waste and mismanagement as the step toward reducing budget deficits—can monitor progress made in combating excess Federal spending.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to include the following letter from the PPSSCC, which indicates support for our efforts.

FOUNDATION FOR THE PRESIDENT'S PRIVATE SECTOR SURVEY ON COST CONTROL, INC.,

Washington, DC, April 25, 1985.

Hon. BILL DANNEMEYER,
Longworth House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BILL: Thank you very much for your letter of March 15, 1985, and the copy of your draft bill to require agencies to report on the implementation status of Grace Commission recommendations pertaining to them.

Such a bill would have considerable merit, in our estimation. Although the Office of Management and Budget has attempted to provide some information on the implementation status of the Grace Commission recommendations (as required by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984) in its recent management report (pp. 93-106) accompanying the President's fiscal year 1986 budget, the level of detail provided is unfortunately too general and meager to permit an accurate determination of exactly what has been implemented and where. Your bill would make this kind of determination possible. Another positive feature of your bill is that it would likely lead to a better perception of the obstacles that may be blocking the implementation of some of the recommendations. Please let us know when it will be introduced and if there is anything we can do to be of help.

I am delighted that you have chosen to work with the "Grace Commission Caucus" in the House. We have very high hopes for this group. Enclosed for your reference is a copy of the statement J. Peter Grace made at the April 2, 1985 kick-off meeting of the Caucus—just in case you do not already have one.

Thanks once again for all your terrific support!

Sincerely,

J. P. BOLDUC.●

TRIBUTE TO HORIZON DISTRICT NATIONAL CAPITOL AREA COUNCIL—BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

HON. JACK BROOKS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, there is a rich soil and poor. There are good neighborhoods and those less fortunate. We tend to think of achievement as coming out of the "better" places. However, sometimes the richest soil is found in less "fashionable" sections. Sometimes an old neighborhood shows cohesion and character; and then its people plant of seeds of faith in that Earth.

It is a pleasure for me to bring to the attention of the House the deeds and accomplishments of one such remarkable group. The more than 300 volunteers of the Horizon District, National Capitol Area Council, of the Boy Scouts of America are involved with the cultivation of talent and citizenship in Anacostia one of the oldest and often one of the most troubled neighborhoods in the Nation's Capital. They are hard workers in a selfless cause—to raise the level of consciousness and spirit of young men. And they have succeeded—scouting generation after scouting generation—in character building and leadership training from which Anacostia, the District and the Nation continue to benefit. Today some 2,600 young people are in their program.

One of their graduates—a former Horizon District Cub Scout—is a U.S. Air Force astronaut, Col. Frederick D. Gregory, who is now in space commanding Spacelab III. Gregory takes his Scouting legacy as part of his personal and professional foundation. In a recent interview he credited the Scouting programs with having a "definite positive impact on my career." He acknowledges its lasting impact noting, "Once a Scout always a Scout." Significantly, Colonel Gregory is carrying with him a Horizon District Boy Scout Neckerchief with a special design commemorating both Spacelab III and adherence to Scouting ideals. The neckerchief bears the emblem of the space flight he will pilot and his quote, "Once a Scout always a Scout."

The Horizon District has operated under the sage and courageous leadership of an executive council headed by Col. Andrew D. Perkins of the DC National Guard. Under his stewardship the executive council has tapped a vast resource of talent and energy: Community, business and professional leaders, school principals, guidance counselors, churches, fraternal organizations, and other volunteers. There have been others, too.

The DC Police Department's 7th Precinct, under Deputy Police Chief Joyce Leland, sponsors an Explorer Scout post. This post, a security unit, is a major source of pride for young people in the Horizon District, and a role-model vehicle for boys and young men in the community.

Maj. Gen. Calvin Franklin, Commanding General of the DC National Guard, has extended the facilities of the DC Guard to the Horizon District Executive Council. He has helped establish a Guard Community Service Program, including the Scouts, and has even offered his conference room for executive council meetings.

Mr. Speaker, on May 10, 1985, Horizon District's Executive Council will meet to recognize and present awards to a number of people and organizations who have assisted in developing some of Anacostia's finest young people. Significantly, the awards will be made at a dinner meeting on the House grounds, in the Caucus Room of the Cannon House Office Building. These Horizon District volunteers have honored Scouting and this city. I know my colleagues on both sides of the aisle join me in commending the Horizon District of a job "Well done," and wish the volunteers and their charges continued success in the days ahead.●

SOVIET JEWRY—A CONTINUING TRAGEDY

HON. STEVE BARTLETT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I address the House today on the issue of Soviet Jewry, a continuing tragedy whose dimensions have not, as of yet, been substantially mitigated by Mr. Gorbachev's rise to power. According to Israeli officials, 97 people received visas in March of this year, only marginally more than in most recent months. Ths state-organized crackdown on Jewish culture persists.

Officially sanctioned anti-Semitism has intensified to the point that the Soviet mass media, including newspapers and television, regularly malign Jews in tones reminiscent of Czarist pogroms. For instance, a recent Tass article claimed that "Zionists" had aided the ascendency of the Third Reich. Harassment of Jewish activists, in particular, has become far more brutal. In the past 8 months, 11 Soviet Jews were arrested and 4 sentenced to labor camps in a Moscow-centered persecution of Hebrew teachers and other Jewish cultural activists. This campaign, which began in late July 1984, has been characterized by State Department officials as "a deliberate and ongoing campaign of arrests and intimidation targeted at the Jewish community in the Soviet Union by Soviet authorities."

The case of Aleksandr Kholmyansky (Alexander Cole-mi-an-ski) is typical. Very interested in his Jewish heritage, Mr. Kholmyansky was one of the handful of Jews left in the Soviet Union who attempted to keep alive the teaching of Hebrew. On July 25, 1984, he was arrested and charged with stepping on flowers in a public park in Moscow. For this "offense," he was sentenced to 10 days in jail. However, Mr. Kholmyansky was detained for longer than that period, having been held on the vague charge of "hooliganism," which inexplicably involved the charge of tampering with a mailbox. In August 1984, police searched the apartment of friends of Mr. Kholmyansky and seized Hebrew books and teaching materials. Later that month, officials searched Mr. Kholmyansky's Moscow apartment, which he shared with his parents, and "found," under a cupboard, various items which had not been there previously, including a revolver and bullets. As a result of trumped up charges stemming from this search, Mr. Kholmyansky was sentenced to 18 months in a labor camp on February 1 of this year.

Of the several other Hebrew teachers arrested in the last year, one individual received 3 years in prison for defaming the Soviet state, while another was sentenced to 4 years in prison for resisting arrest. This man would later lose an eye after a beating. Since October 1983, six unofficial teachers of Hebrew, who hold courses in private apartments, have been arrested and sent to labor camps on charges ranging from possession of narcotics to resisting arrest.

This cruel campaign against the Hebrew teacher reveals that Soviet officials are intent on stifling all Jewish tradition. This latest wave of persecution of Soviet Jews strongly suggests a resurgence of Russian xenophobia, with Soviet officials attempting to eradicate all vestiges of Western influence and instead promoting age-old Russian traditions, including anti-Semitism. Mr. Gorbachev, in style and rhetoric you have conveyed an image of "easing of tensions" with the West. Yet, the bottom line is that actions speak louder than words. Show us, Mr. Gorbachev, that you are serious in seeking a rapprochement with the United States by actually improving the plight of Soviet Jews, who have for so long endured the persecution and harassment of your government. As one Soviet Jew in Moscow remarked, "We will believe he means something different when he does something different, not before." Show us through your efforts, Mr. Gorbachev, and we might be willing to take your words more seriously.●

IN MEMORY OF LARRY HALL

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, when I first became a member of the Missouri Senate in January of 1971, one of the first persons I met was the Associated Press correspondent Larry Hall. During my 6 years as a Missouri State Senator, Larry Hall covered the senate as a reporter and later he worked with the Missouri Senate as the first senate information officer. Since that time, Larry remained a good and warm friend through the years. Mr. Speaker, recently, I learned of Larry Hall's death. I was greatly saddened, as he was truly an outstanding man, as well as a highly respected journalist. I join all of his Jefferson City friends and all who worked with him and knew him in expressing sympathy to the Hall family.

Larry Hall was a rarity. He was rare in that he not only epitomized the best of his profession, but he was a good friend. Even a short visit with Larry would brighten my day. He was a warm and caring individual who commanded the respect of all who knew him.

Larry took special interest in young journalists, particularly those budding journalistic students from the University of Missouri. He taught them the ins and outs of State government. Further, they recognized his ability to communicate. As Bob Debo, his good friend through the years, who delivered the eulogy at Larry's funeral pointed out that words "flew out of Larry's typewriter like swallows at Capistrano". In a word, Larry Hall was good at what he did.

A fellow journalist, Les Pearson of the St. Louis Globe Democrat, said of him, "An absolutely straightaway reporter, he reliably and intelligently wrote of the antics of the Missouri Legislature and of a half dozen administrations, starting 1945."

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to sum up the life of Larry Hall adequately, and I can only say that I am glad that our paths crossed for a period of time. He was a remarkable man.

I express sympathy to his sons John M. Hall and Thomas P. Hall and his daughter Ann Prenger.●

OUTDATED GASOLINE TARIFFS REQUIRES REVISION

HON. BERYL ANTHONY, JR.

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to introduce legislation designed to correct a serious inequity in the tariff schedule of the United States [TSUS], which poses substantial risks to the domestic petroleum refining industry and our Nation's security. The Nation requires a healthy, competitive, and technologically advanced domestic refining industry to fuel its industrial base and to provide a stable supply of environmentally acceptable motor fuels for civilian and military demands.

This country's increasing dependence on foreign refined petroleum products especially motor gasoline, weakens a vital domestic industry and undermines our ability to employ the strategic petroleum reserve [SPR] in the event of a substantial energy supply interruption. A national dependence on imported refined products is rapidly replacing our historical dependence on imported crude oil.

Current motor fuel tariffs were established in 1958 at a level of 1.25 cents per gallon. At that time, wholesale gasoline was priced at 11.55 cents per gallon, yielding an equivalent ad valorem rate of 10.8 percent. In 1984, wholesale gasoline sold for an average of 83.2 cents per gallon, down from the 1981 preconservation high of $106.4. Hence, while crude oil prices have risen ninefold to tenfold and gasoline prices sevenfold to ninefold, the gasoline tariff has remained fixed at $1.25 per gallon and represents one-eighth of the value initially established.

The absence of a self-adjusting ad valorem tariff structure for motor fuels has made the United States the international dumping ground for the world's surplus refined products, seriously threatening the U.S. domestic refining industry. Increasing imports of gasoline and gasoline blendstocks have forced the shutdown of many efficient U.S. refineries.

Effective administrative import barriers or tariffs in Japan and the European Community have forced the diversion of gasoline cargoes from halfway around the globe to U.S. ports. Gasoline imports increased 300 percent in 1984 over 1983 levels, and the distressed pricing of this material lowered nationwide refining margins to razor thin or negative levels.

Motor gasoline is the single largest volume product of the domestic refining industry, and its production and sale are essential to the continued health of that industry. Imported gasoline sales at or below manufacturing cost undermine the industry and have already contributed to plant closures and the direct and indirect loss of skilled U.S. jobs.

OPEC export refineries have added and are about to add to the world's petroleum product surplus. These facilities are owned in whole or in part by nationalized oil companies and will operate regardless of their profit levels. Indeed, since nationalized companies own the crude oil and natural gas feedstocks, their profits cannot be measured by any normal accounting standards. These facilities have the additional significant economic benefit of selling into the U.S. market without incurring U.S. environmental, tax and safety costs.

Our SPR is designed to ensure against crude oil supply interruptions, and its value is predicated on a strong and adequate domestic refining industry. Should there be a significant energy supply interruption today, there is a serious question as to the current ability of the domestic refining industry to respond in a timely manner. Many plants have been permanently shut down, and others will undoubtedly be forced to close if current import trends continue.

While the SPR's maximum design drawdown rate is 4.5 million barrels per day, currently operating U.S. refining capacity is only able to refine our 9.8 million barrels per day of domestic crude oil and natural gas liquids production plus 2.3 to 3.0 million barrels per day of SPR crude oil. Last year's national refined petroleum product consumption was 15.7 million barrels per day.

Mr. Speaker, the Nation's military and civilian energy needs are for motor gasoline, jet fuels, distillates and fuel oils, not crude oil. This country cannot and must not be again held hostage and its hard-won SPR neutralized through misguided and short-sighted policies. Motor fuel import tariffs must be realigned with their historical economic basis and ad valorem rates established to ensure that historical as well as security threatening import levels are addressed in a rational and continuing manner. I am therefore introducing legislation to that end and hope that we act expeditiously on this critical legislation.

The two-stage ad valorem rate for imported gasoline and blendstocks contained in this bill ensures that the country's economic base and energy security is preserved and will not be held captive to the whims of foreign nationalized oil companies. This bill also rationalizes and unifies the tariff classification for motor fuels and related items, creating a straightforward and predictable system in place of today's contradictions and ambiguities. The consolidation of gasoline and gasoline blendstocks at a single duty level is consistent with the International Trade Commission's [ITC] April 15, 1985, recommendations to the Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees. The existing petrochemical naphtha treatment is preserved and an actual use test established for classification purposes, again consistent with the ITC recommendations.●

JEROME V. "JIM" LaBARBERA

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, being that this week, May 5–11, 1985, has been designated as Small Business Week throughout the United States, I would like to take this time to honor a small businessman from my home State of Missouri.

Jim LaBarbera, chairman of the board and chief executive of Engineered Air Systems, Inc., has been selected as Missouri's 1985 Small Business Person of the Year by the Small Business Administration.

In the 3 years, since LaBarbera and partner Michael Shanahan bought Engineered Air, employment has increased from 290 persons to 490, and sales have climbed from $17 million in 1981 to $40 million last year.

Engineered Air makes environmental controls, such as air-conditioning and heating units, and ground support equipment, including chemical and biological warfare decontamination units for the U.S. military.

Acknowledgments of Engineered Air's success have come in numerous forms. Proclamations from both the mayor of the city of St. Louis and from the executive of St. Louis County were received in July 1984, recognizing the accomplishments of both labor and management in establishing and maintaining a harmonious working environment.

Jim and his wife Nancy, have four children, Jim, Janet, Tom and Kathy. The LaBarbera's reside in St. Louis County, MO.

Mr. Speaker, small business is America, and it gives me great pride and pleasure to honor such a successful small businessman as Jim LaBarbera.●

ORTEGA'S SECRET TRIP TO HAVANA

HON. BOB LIVINGSTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, many of our colleagues are justifiably outraged over Commandante Daniel Ortega's trip to Moscow immediately after this House voted to deny humanitarian aid to Nicaragua's progressive democratic opposition. That slap in the face from Ortega continues each day as he hops around the Eastern bloc issuing press releases and seeking replenishments of the Communist aid he has received since 1980, when he made his first trip to the Soviet Union.

But guess what, Mr. Speaker. The good commandante also took another trip—a secret trip—to Havana last month, as reported for the first time in yesterday's New York Times op-ed column written by Tad Szulc, who is in Havana. It's a wonder Ortega had the time to visit his Cuban buddies. He seemed to be completely occupied with his propaganda campaign and congressional lobbying against U.S. aid to the freedom fighters, which we were debating at the time.

Mr. Speaker, let's show that we disapprove of trips to Havana and the Soviet-bloc countries by the Sandinista leadership. Let's support the President at the very first opportunity.●

DR. WALTER J. MOLO, JR., TO RETIRE

HON. HARRIS W. FAWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, at the end of this school year, the superintendent of the Pleasantdale School District 107 in Lyons Township, IL, Dr. Walter J. Molo, Jr., will retire after years of service to public education.

This Friday, a retirement dinner will be held on his behalf to acknowledge his contributions to public education.

Dr. Molo's educational experience has been quite extensive. He served as a teacher for 4 years, an elementary and junior high principal for 8 years, an elementary school superintendent for 18 years, a high school superintendent for 2 years, and a unit district school superintendent for 3 years.

In his capacity as a fine educator of Illinois youth, Dr. Molo has made several contributions to improving the quality of public education. In 1952, he served as chairman of a special committee designed to implement sex education instruction in the public school curriculum in Berkely School District 87—the first Illinois school district to develop such a program. From 1956 to 1960, he advised numerous school districts which sought to establish sex education programs. Dr. Molo has also taught elementary and high school physical education, health and safety, and elementary biological science and mathematics.

Dr. Molo's imprint on education was not only felt in Illinois. In 1973, he established a computer education program at Brentwood High School in Brentwood, MO. Brentwood was the first high school to implement such a program in St. Louis County. The same year, he was listed in the first edition of the State of Missiouri Outstanding Education Who's Who in Education. From 1974 to 1976, Dr. Molo served on the Missouri Commission of Education Advisory Committee on School Finance.

During his years of service to public education, Dr. Molo also was actively involved in the Illinois Principals Association. He assisted in the organization of the IPA. He also was the president of the Lake Shore Division of the Illinois Elementary Principals Association.

There is no doubt that Dr. Molo will be sorely missed by community educators, parents, and students for his years of unselfish service to the cause of public education. I commend Dr. Molo for the exemplary contributions he has made over the years to public education and wish him the best for the future.●

GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN ARE AT RISK

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 in order to once again establish targeted programs directed at the many unique and pressing needs of our Nation's gifted and talented children.

All too often these individuals are overlooked by our Nation's educational policymakers because of a concern that, in an era of budget tightening, they do not need special additional resources. Simply stated, this is not the case, as has been well documented in a number of educational policy reports issued during the past several years.

For example, the National Commission on Excellence in Education, in its report, "A Nation at Risk," stated: "The Federal Government, in cooperation with States and localities, should meet the needs of key groups of students such as gifted and talented, the socioeconomically disadvantaged, minority and language minority students, and the handicapped. In combination these groups include both national resources and the Nation's youth who are most at risk." All of these groups, with the single exception of the gifted and talented, receive significant Federal assistance. Furthermore, this report makes numerous references to the gifted and talented concluding that "over half of the population of gifted students do not match their tested ability with comparable achievement in school" and that "despite widespread publicity about an overpopulation of teachers, severe shortages of certain kinds of teachers exist: * * * among specialists in education for gifted and talented."

The legislation I am proposing today is identical to S. 134, introduced by Senator INOUYE on January 3, 1985. It will again establish the Office of Gifted and Talented within the U.S. Department of Education and, further will authorize that $40 million be expended during the next 5 fiscal years for programs targeted to these future leaders of our Nation.

My proposal also authorizes the Secretary of the Department of Education to begin a modest discretionary grant program which would include demonstration projects. In addition, the bill provides for target programs for gifted and talented Native Americans, who unfortunately, without a special Federal initiative, would not reach their full potential.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that we realize that these students are indeed at risk. A gifted child in a regular classroom has no opportunity; a child with a 140 IQ has as much need of a specialized education as a child with a 60 IQ. We cannot fail in providing for the educational needs of this Nation's youth and our country's future.

It is my pleasure to be joined in introducing this bill by my colleagues, WILLIAM CLAY, MERVYN DYMALLY, CHARLES HAYES, AUSTIN MURPHY, MAJOR OWENS, CHRIS PERKINS, GARY ACKERMAN, HELEN DELICH BENTLEY, WALTER FAUNTROY, ALAN MOLLOHAN, JAMES H. SCHEUR, HARLEY STAGGERS, FOFO SUNIA, ROBERT WISE, DON YOUNG and ROBERT YOUNG. We hope that our colleagues will join us in this effort.●

THE VALIANT MEN OF THE 73D BOMB WING

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me now in paying a much deserved tribute to Mr. Murray Juvelier of Flushing, Queens County, NY, and to all the brave men who fought with him in the 73d Bombardment Wing on Saipan in 1944.

Mr. Juvelier is a member of the 498th Bomb Group, 73d Bomb Wing Association. On May 8, 1985, these admirable veterans will dedicate a plaque to the 1,033 men who did not return from battle. This important and historic commemorative event will take place at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, CO, with many of those veterans who flew or were part of the group in attendance.

The plaque will be installed on the Academy's Military Honor Wall, which was built several years ago to preserve for posterity the feats of those outfits that have demonstrated exceptionally meritorious service. It is altogether appropriate that this wall is situated only a few yards away from the grave of Rosie Emmett O'Donnell, the general who led the 73d Bombardment Wing in its first raid on Tokyo.

Mr. Speaker, the men of the 73d Bomb Wing risked their lives flying B-29's to aid the allied forces in World War II. These courageous patriots fought valiantly right up until the final battle that brought triumph to our Nation and our allies. Their remarkable fortitude contributed significantly to our victory over the forces of tyranny and despotism, and we will always be grateful for the heritage their bravery bestows upon us. It is truly a privilege to be able to honor these great warriors, who continued to fight nobly for the triumph of their ideals, even in the face of death.

I ask all of the Members of the Congress of the United States to join me in paying homage to the men of the 73d Bombardment Wing for their legacy of valor.●

A TRIBUTE TO RICHARD M. THOMPSON

HON. WILLIAM CARNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the House a shining example of the good which one person can accomplish through volunteer service to the community.

Richard M. Thompson, a resident of New York's First Congressional District, is business manager of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 1049, and has extended his concern for the working men and women of this country into voluntary service to the March of Dimes.

Mr. Thompson devotes a significant portion of his spare time to the cause of those less fortunate than himself. He will be recognized for his unselfish contributions during a June 14 fundraising dinner-dance to help the March of Dimes in its continuing fight against birth defects.

I am proud to represent Mr. Thompson, a fellow Long Islander, and I know that my colleagues will join me in congratulating a gentle, thoughtful man whose generosity of spirit can always be counted on in the cause of humanity.●

L. JACK BRADT, PENNSYLVANIA'S SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to congratulate Mr. L. Jack Bradt, chairman and chief executive officer of SI Handling Systems, Inc., of Easton, PA, on his being selected as Pennsylvania's State Small Business Person of the Year.

As vice chairman of the House Republican Task Force on High Technology Initiatives, I believe this recognition is especially significant since it reflects the need to bridge the gap between high tech and traditional industries. Understanding the need for U.S. business to rethink the whole manufacturing process, Mr. Bradt has developed a flexible manufacturing system where materials and parts move between factory work stations at variable high speeds, all under computer control. This type of innovation sets a strong example of what is needed to revive the so-called smokestack industries.

Setting examples in not new to Jack Bradt. He has a long history of setting strong examples. Not only has his company flourished in the difficult world market, with subsidiary companies in Germany and England, as well as a joint venture in Japan, it has been a prime sponsor of the Ben Franklin Advanced Technology Center at Lehigh University. This center was established to help meet the goals of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to create and maintain jobs, improve the productivity of new and existing businesses, and diversify Pennsylvania's economy by creating and attracting firms in advanced technology fields. Mr. Bradt also serves on the board of directors of the Pennsylvania Chamber of Commerce and its small business advocacy group, and is founder of the Greater Easton Technology Enterprise Center which is designed to foster business growth. Clearly, small businesses in the Lehigh Valley benefit greatly from his advice.

I have come to know L. Jack Bradt as a doer as well as a thinker. His nononsense leadership approach to problem solving is something we can all admire. He has given so much of this to his own community, the Lehigh Valley of Pennsylvania.

In reflecting on the successes of Jack Bradt, one cannot omit the contributions of his fine, hard-working wife, Pat. Pat, a professional women in her own right, has been a major source of support to Jack—and visa versa—in the course of his career. Congratulations are indeed in order for this outstanding citizen of Pennsylvania's 15th District.●

SOLIDARITY SUNDAY FOR SOVIET JEWRY

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 2, 1985

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity provided by my distinguished colleagues, the gentlemen from New York [Mr. GILMAN and Mr. RANGEL], who reserved this time for Members of Congress to speak out on behalf of Soviet Jewry. On May 5, 1985, 100,000 people are expected to gather near the United Nations for the 14th annual "Solidarity Sunday for Soviet Jewry." To express my solidarity with Soviet Jews, I would like to share with my colleagues some important facts concerning Soviet Jewish emigration.

It is now a widely known fact that fewer than 1,000 Soviet Jews were permitted to emigrate in 1984. This was the lowest number in over a decade, and a very sharp contrast to the 51,000 who were allowed to emigrate during 1979. What is a less publicized fact is that Soviet authorities are reacting, at least in part, against the mass exodus of Soviet Jews who emigrated between 1968 and 1981 when Soviet policies were comparatively more liberal. More than a quarter million Jews had left the Soviet Union by the early 1980's, and hundreds of thousands more were applying to emigrate. These developments were an embarrassment to the Soviet leadership who promoted the U.S.S.R. as a peoples' paradise.

Experts on the Soviet Union have determined that 1979-1980 appear to have been the years of a turning point in Soviet emigration policy. It was at this juncture that changes were made to restrict the flow of emigrants from the Soviet Union. For example, applicants were then required to submit invitations from first degree relatives—mother/father, husband/wife—living in the nation to which emigration was sought.

Moreover, the reasons for turning down applications for exit visas became both more numerous and less reasonable. In this connection, visa requests have been turned down because an applicant has more relatives in the U.S.S.R. than abroad. Therefore, the Soviet officials argued that emigration would divide, not reunited the family. Some applicants have received no reason at all for the denial of their visa requests.

Mr. Speaker, we, in the United States, and Members of Congress, in particular, must work to loosen the strictures that keep Soviet Jews imprisoned under the arbitrary authority of the Soviet regime.

Past experience has demonstrated that the Soviet Union is capable of exercising a more liberal emigration policy for Soviet Jews when liberalization will bring trade advantages or other benefits to the U.S.S.R. We must not give up hope that change is possible.

Fortunately, there will be a number of opportunities for the United States and the Soviet Union to meet over the coming months, and to include discussions of human rights on the agenda. Renewed discussions on arms control could create an atmosphere conducive to making progress in the human rights area. Also, between now and September 1986, the United States and the Soviet Union are both scheduled to participate in a series of multilateral Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CSCE] meetings that will include the topics of emigration and the treatment of Soviet Jews.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues and all who are working on behalf of Soviet Jews to support legislation and other official initiatives that will open the doors of freedom to those now locked within the Soviet Union. Let us redouble our commitment to keeping the international spotlight on this important issue.●

CINCO DE MAYO

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, once again the calendar has summoned us to pay tribute to a landmark event in mankind's age-old struggle against tyranny. On Cinco de Mayo, 1862 Mexican President Benito Juarez led a group of stouthearted patriots against the French armies and Emperor Maximilian, the puppet they supported. This event is celebrated not only by Hispanic-Americans, who are such a significant part of the ethnic community that is southern California, but by countless other Americans astute enough to realize this historic confrontation is symbolic of what all nations in our continent went through, shaping the defiant and vital character of the New World.

In my beloved home, California, schools, cities, and organizations statewide will be observing this yearly event. This is particularly important there, where Hispanic heritage is, much to our advantage, so inextricably part of our own. We demonstrate our solidarity and affection for our neighbors south of the border, while honoring ourselves at the same time. The remembrance of Cinco de Mayo serves to illuminate the continuing struggle which American society, and particularly Hispanic-Americans, faces against economic and educational deprivation. This is not some event which is fading into the mists of time, because the spirit with which we meet the fresh challenges is as alive today as it was over a century ago in the Battle of Puebla.

While this complicated cultural saga has had its unhappy side, the observance of Cinco de Mayo is more appropriately a time to highlight the way in which the struggle of Hispanics has forged the strength of family, the faith and the compassion with which that people faces the day's new adversities. While the struggle continues, on Cinco de Mayo, 1985, let us witness the continuing advance of a tough and resilient people into their proper place in our legislatures, schools and corporate life. Happily, this vital aspect of the American character is alive and well.●

BITBURG RESOLUTION

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I voted present on House Concurrent Resolution 130 pertaining to President Reagan's upcoming trip to Bitburg, Germany. I voted present because I do not support the honoring of Nazi war criminals. At the same time, I do not want to be a part of any action by this body to unjustly criticize the President.

I believe the President was acting in good faith when he decided to visit the Bitburg Cemetery as a gesture of reconciliation to the Federal Republic of Germany, a country which has taken its place among the community of democratic nations and which is now a friend and ally of the United States. I will not insult one of our strongest democratic allies.

We all know that the President is not anti-Semetic. I applaud the President's decision to visit the Bergen-Belsen Concentration Camp and I hope that this will mitigate the controversy. I further hope that as the President embarks on this important mission of peace that these acts of friendship extended toward the people of Germany are not misinterpreted by others.●

BETHLEHEM BAPTIST CHRISTIAN ACADEMY

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to honor the students in the third-grade class of Bethlehem Baptist Christian Academy from Fairfax, VA. These students visited the U.S. Capitol on April 16, 1985. While they were on the floor of the House Chamber, they recited five verses of the Star Spangled Banner. It was very moving to hear the earnestness in their voices as they said the words which express the greatness of the United States.

I am proud of these young people and their teachers, for their character and dedication to the American spirit of love and goodwill. It is a privilege to serve in this great body and be able to uphold the values of liberty. These youngsters represent our future and our work here will guarantee them the freedoms of America.

The members of the third-grade class and their teachers are: Mrs. Marianne Tierney, teacher; Mrs. Marlene Koski, aide; David Abbott, Lauren Anderson, Trey Beavers, Christopher Booth, Mark Bowers, Juli Brymer, Sarah Byrne, Claudia Cabanas, Stephen Dodson, Timothy Gadell, J.R. Gantt, Amanda Gee, Sarah Jane Godby, Adam Haines, Sandra Hall, Megan Henry, Duncan Hunter, Teresa McLachlan, Douglas May, Henry Price, Michelle Ratcliffe, Billy Seifert, John Smallwood, Joseph Smith, Brian Trick, and Laura Williams.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives the hard work of the third-grade class of Bethlehem Baptist Christian Academy.●

MR. ROY LIPE

HON. JACK BROOKS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, we all share concern about the quality of education in our country. I believe that one of the greatest assets to our Nation's superior education system is the dedication and sacrifice by our teachers and principals. I have recently received a great number of letters from the fifth grade class of Lee School in Port Arthur, TX, one of the finest elementary schools in our State.

Mr. Speaker, these students have written to express their appreciation and to praise the fine job done by Principal Roy Lipe. His wisdom, selfless dedication, and commitment to the well-being of children during his 34 years in education has made him a very special person who will have a place in the hearts of his students, their parents, and the entire community for many years to come.

Upon the occasion of his retirement on May 16 we all extend to him our warmest best wishes for the future and our heartiest congratulations on an outstanding life of service in education.●

JOHN WHITEHEAD AS DEPUTY SECRETARY OF STATE: A WISE CHOICE

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the administration on its wise selection of Mr. John Cunningham Whitehead as the new Deputy Secretary of State. I have the highest personal regard for John and believe that his many talents and broad experience will be well-employed as he helps to shape our Nation's foreign policy.

I am proud that, like myself, his roots are in Montclair, NJ. He now resides in Essex Fells. New Jersey rightfully claims him as its own.

John is a world traveler, and his experience and involvement as a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission will serve him well in his new position. As president of the International Rescue Committee, he has helped refugees, and traveled into Hungary, Pakistan, the Sudan, Cambodia, Thailand, and Vietnam.

The New York Times recently said that "In the financial world, Mr. Whitehead has been among the most respected leaders." In the world of nations, I am confident that Mr. Whitehead will be just as respected.

I trust that this body will give him our confidence and strong support as he helps to guide our Nation's relations with other States. We are fortunate to have a man of his wisdom and stature serving our country in such an important office.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. AND MRS. JAMES KLINENBERG

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to call to the attention of the House the outstanding contributions of Dr. James Klinenberg and his wife, Lynn, to the advancement of medicine and community health.

For the last 20 years, Dr. Klinenberg has been an eminent member of the Los Angeles medical community. As professor and chairman of the department of medicine of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center-UCLA School of Medicine, staff physician, UCLA Medical Center Hospital assistant dean, UCLA School of Medicine, and attending physician, Wadsworth VA Hospital, Dr. Klinenberg has distinguished himself in the fields of research, training, and patient care.

Before settling in California, Dr. Klinenberg received his A.B. and A.M. degrees from the Johns Hopkins University and earned his M.D. from the George Washington School of Medicine. He continued his clinical training at the Johns Hopkins Hospital where he served as medical intern and resident physician and as clinical associate at the National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases, Bethesda, MD.

James Klinenberg's long association with the Arthritis Foundation began in 1966 when he became a postdoctoral fellow and continues to the present. His numerous activities with the foundation have included serving the southern California chapter as president and chairman, member and vice president of the executive committee; chairman and vice chairman of the medical and scientific committee, member and chairman of the government affairs committee; chairman of the grants subcommittee and research committee; editorial board member, arthritis and rheumatism; member of the medical administrative committee, board of governors, board of trustees, executive committee.

A brief mention of some of Dr. Klinenberg's other associations include American Rheumatism Association—chairman of the program committee, member of the executive committee, secretary treasurer, vice president and president elect; southern California Rheumatism Society—president; Association of American Medical Colleges—member of group on medical education; NIH, chairman and member of the committee to the cooperating clinics grant; UCLA School of Medicine—chairman, educational policy and curriculum committee; UCR/UCLA—curriculum committee; American College of Physicians—member, Governor's committee for college affairs; chairman, State arthritis council; U.S. Pharmacopeia and the National Formulary Panel on Allergy, Immunology and Connective Disease; chairman, National Arthritis Advisory Board; subcommittee of the American board of internal medicine on clinical competency president, Association of Program Directors in Internal Medicine.

As a leading authority on the diagnosis and treatment of arthritis, rheumatic diseases, gout, lupus, metabolic, and renal disorders, James Klinenberg has authored numerous papers for professional medical journals and has contributed substantive chapters to medical reference publications. His definitive research, teaching, and writing have earned Dr. Klinenberg the highest respect and accolades from his peers in the medical community.

As the mother of four children—Susan, Ellen, Ricky, and Steven—Lynn Klinenberg has been closely associated with community youth activities, serving as a Cub Scout leader, Brownie leader, Girl Scout leader, and PTA officer, and has participated in numerous fundraising activities on behalf of these organizations.

Lynn Klinenberg has been equally effective as an organizer and coordinator of many health care auxiliary groups. She has devoted her energies and considerable talent in creating a women's group to start a diabetes unit at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. She served as both president and vice president for 7 years; organized the group effort—a combined group of the Arthritis Foundation, Diabetes Unit-CSMC, Leukemia Society of America and Loyola-Marymount University, and started the group effort auction. She has been the coordinator of the group effort for 7 years. Mrs. Klinenberg is active in both the UCLA and Cedars-Sinai Doctor's Wives Group and has participated in the Arthritis Foundation's Telethon for 15 years. She served on the executive board and helped create the Monty Hall Diabetes Tennis Tournament and is the local arrangements chairman for the National American Rheumatism Association.

On May 11, 1985, Dr. James and Lynn Klinenberg will be honored with the Anti-Defamation League's Medical Division Achievement and Service Award. I ask the members to join with me in congratulating James and Lynn Klinenberg on this special occasion. In their dedication and service to the community, they have exemplified the best in American ideals—excellence in performance and a true sense of caring.●

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY: COOPERATIVE EDUCATION

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, 1985 is a landmark year for Northeastern University in Boston, MA. At the beginning of the 1984-85 academic school year. Northeastern kicked off a year-long celebration in commemoration of their 75th Anniversary of Cooperative Education. It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity to honor them before this body today.

There was a time when a quality higher education was limited to the affluent. However, with the establishment of programs like co-op education, the door was gradually opened to all groups. Individuals who otherwise would have been unable to devote their time to full-time academic study, were at last given a chance to engage in first-rate classroom instruction, while simultaneously earning an income in their chosen professions.

A pioneer in co-op education, Northeastern has grown to become the largest private educational institution in the Nation, and is also recognized around the world as the leader in co-op education. Co-op graduates can be found anywhere from America's board rooms to court rooms. Because of the demonstrated success rate of its graduates, the university continues to attract an overwhelming number of students and employers to their campuses each year. This year, Northeastern expects to place at least 9,500 students with 2,500 employers.

When Northeastern first opened its doors in 1898, classes were held in the attic of a Y.M.C.A. Today the university sits on 55 acres of land in Boston and efforts are currently underway for further expansion. Their curriculum has also been expanded to include a number of graduate and professional programs in addition to programs in the university college.

Northeastern University has a proud history, and their future looks to be equally promising.●

COL. ROBERT J. PFLEGHARDT HONORED

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the distinguished service of Col. Robert J. Pfleghardt to the U.S. Army Reserve and the Nation. On August 12, 1985, Colonel Pfleghardt will be retiring from the U.S. Army Reserve after serving 30 years in defense of his country.

Since September 1982, Colonel Pfleghardt has been a member of the 352d Civil Affairs Command [CAC]. Prior to joining the 352d CAC, Colonel Pfleghardt served as the Assistant Chief of Staff for Civil Military Operations of the 310th Theater Army Area Command.

He is a member of the Army War College Alumni Association, and is an active member of the Reserve Officers' Association where he held several offices, including chapter president.

Colonel Pfleghardt was commissioned a second lieutenant on June 13, 1955. He entered active duty in February 1956 and was assigned to the 586th Float Bridge Company at Fort Benning, GA. In September 1956 he transferred to the 78th Engineer Combat Battalion and served in Germany. His next active duty tour was an instructor with the U.S. Army Engineer School, Fort Belvoir, VA. After release from active duty, he continued his military career in the Army Reserve. His decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal and Commendation Medal with oak leaf cluster.

Colonel Pfleghardt is a graduate of the engineer officer basic course, engineer officer advanced course, quartermaster advanced course, associate logistics executive development course, Command and General Staff College, and U.S. Army War College.

In civilian life, Colonel Pfleghardt holds a doctorate in education from the American University and is an employee of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. He is the son of the late Elizabeth Rose Pfleghardt, of Woodbourne, NY, and the late William Nicholas Pfleghardt of Brooklyn, NY. He is married to the former Doris Fay McLarty of Smyrna, GA. They are the proud parents of three children; Elizabeth F., Robert M., and Catherine D.—Mrs. Catherine P. Weisenburger.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate Colonel Pfleghardt on a distinguished career, and to extend my warmest best wishes for a healthy, happy, and long retirement for Colonel and Mrs. Pfleghardt.●

FRANK DONNER: A LIFETIME OF DEDICATION TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in tribute to

Frank Donner, author of "The Age of Surveillance" (1980), "The UnAmericans" (1968) and, most recently, "The Legacy of Haymarket," the Nation's leading authority on abuses of police surveillance, and chairperson of the Fairfield County Chapter of the Connecticut Civil Liberties Union.

Yesterday, in recognition of a lifetime of dedication to civil liberties, Mr. Donner received the chapter's highest honor, the award for Unyielding Commitment to the Bill of Rights, in a ceremony in Southport, CT.

No one has contributed more to the protection of our rights as Americans. No one has spoken more eloquently of the consequences of abdicating our commitment to the Bill of Rights. Frank Donner has been an inspiration to me personally, and I know he has been an inspiration to many, many others. His commitment to civil liberties has truly been unyielding.●

M. SGT. BILL ARRIS, JR., USMC

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1985

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of this House to an unprecedented honor paid recently to M. Sgt. William E. Arris, Jr., USMC.

Master Sergeant Arris has been chosen by the Navy League of the United States as the first enlisted man to receive the Adm. Ben Moreel Award for logistics competence.

Master Sergeant Arris has served our country in the Marine Corps for 17 years. His is the senior noncommissioned officer in charge of supply operations control center, 2d Supply Battalion, 2d Force Service Support Group.

The Navy League's citation notes that in 1983, Master Sergeant Arris:

Took charge of logistic support being provided to Marines and the Navy ashore in Lebanon. He personally coordinated movement of personnel, equipment, and supplies to the service support groups of three marine amphibious units, ensuring smooth operations. His leadership enhanced the supply support capabilities of the bulk warehouse management unit.

Bill Arris hails from Quincy, MA, and I have had the privilege of knowing his fine family for many years.

Congratulations are in order for this exemplary marine on an award well earned and on a difficult job splendidly done.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, May 7, 1985, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, May 7, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. Robert F. Wagner, minister, Eastern Hills Church of Christ, Marshall, TX, offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, the Creator and Sustainer of the Universe, we are grateful we live in a free land and to a large extent in a time of peace. We pray this great Nation of ours will always enjoy freedom and practice justice and righteousness. May we each have a sense of the responsibility that is ours, according to the trust placed in our hands and endeavor to act as to be an influence for good that peace may prevail throughout the world enabling men the liberty to pursue happiness. God grant each Member of this Congress wisdom, courage, and fidelity in the performance of their duty and bless their efforts as they formulate legislation affecting the lives of all of us.

In the precious name of Jesus Christ we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

DISPENSING WITH CALL OF PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Private Calendar be dispensed with today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

MINISTER ROBERT F. WAGNER

(Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend the minister of my church, the Eastern Hills Church in Marshall, TX, Robert F. Wagner, for his inspirational and timely prayer which opened today's session. In addition, I want to thank Chaplain Ford for his assistance and courtesy in arranging for Robert Wagner to deliver the prayer.

As many of my colleagues know, I will soon be leaving this body to become a Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas. Having my minister with me at this time is especially rewarding, and we both share in the excitement and honor of his appearance before the House today.

Robert Wagner has served as a minister of the Gospel for some 27 years. He began preaching in Bainbridge, GA, and his ministry brought him to the Eastern Hills Church of Christ in Marshall some 4 years ago.

He is married to the former Cenia Mae Groom, and they have two sons and two grandchildren. In addition to his ministry, Robert Wagner worked for the Department of Commerce for the State of Florida for 25 years. He also served with the U.S. Air Force from 1942 to 1945.

Again, it is a privilege to welcome Robert Wagner to Washington, DC. We are very proud of him.

OFFICIAL OBJECTORS FOR THE PRIVATE CALENDAR ON THE REPUBLICAN SIDE, 99TH CONGRESS

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to announce the official objectors for the Private Calendar on the Republican side for the 99th Congress.

Our official objectors will be the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DEWINE].

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1157, MARITIME PROGRAMS AUTHORIZATION, FISCAL YEAR 1986

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-65) on the resolution (H. Res. 157), providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1157) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for certain maritime programs of the Department of Transportation and the Federal Maritime Commission, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1784, PANAMA CANAL COMMISSION AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 1986

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-66) on the resolution (H. Res. 158), providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1784) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for the operation and maintenance of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE HAROLD C. OSTERTAG

(Mr. HORTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, as the dean of the New York Republician delegation, it is with great regret and a deep sense of loss that I announce the passing on Thursday, May 2, of a close friend and former colleague—Harold C. Ostertag.

Harold represented the people of New York's 39th and 37th Congressional Districts for nearly 15 years. His dedication to his congressional duties and his constituents served to inspire many Members of the New York congressional delegation. He established a tradition of excellence which was ably upheld by his successor, now retired, Barber Conable, and which I am certain will be upheld by newly elected Representative FRED ECKERT.

Harold was born in Attica, NY, on June 22, 1896. He attended Attica High School and later graduated from Chamberlain Military Institute in Perry, NY. In 1915, at the age of 19, he enlisted in the Army and served in France with the 55th Pioneer Infantry in the American Expeditionary Forces in France. His political career began in 1932 when he was elected to the New York State Assembly where he served until 1950.

While in the assembly, he pioneered the effort to improve and strengthen cooperation between local, State, and Federal Government bodies. This effort led him to create the Council of State Governments and to seek the position of chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Interstate Cooperation. These positions further convinced him of the importance of intergovernmental relations.

Harold continued this work when he came to Congress in 1951. He served as a member of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations and played a major role in my early interest in the work of the Commission.

Harold was also widely recognized for his work in the Defense and Independent Offices Appropriations Subcommittees. He worked long and hard to ensure that American tax dollars were spent wisely and effectively.

I had the privilege of serving with Harold Ostertag during the 88th Congress and believe that it is a tribute to his foresight and ability that his influence remains today. He was committed to ensuring a cost-effective Federal Government. An ideal we hear much of today.

Recently, another vision of Harold's was fulfilled—the expansion of military facilities in upstate New York. Harold was a strong advocate of the merits of New York as a site for military installations and he strongly encouraged the New York delegation to aggressively seek military contracts. This year, after nearly 10 years of discussion and negotiation, the Army and the New York congressional delegation, announced that Fort Drum will be the home of the 10th Mountain Division.

In closing, Nancy and I would like to express our sincere condolences to Harold's wife Grace. Harold was an outstanding Congressman and a good friend. He will be sorely missed by all of us who knew him.

□ 1230

Mr. ECKERT of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ECKERT of New York. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, Harold C. Ostertag preceded Barber Conable for 14 years as the Representative of the Rochester and western New York State area congressional district. He was an expert on national defense matters in Congress as a member of the Defense Appropriations Committee, and he was an early supporter of our Nation's space program as a member of the Independent Offices Appropriations Subcommittee.

Congressman Ostertag was warmly regarded by his colleagues in Congress and by the people that he represented.

Mr. Ostertag held elective public office for 32 years, first being elected to the New York State Assembly in 1932 and serving there for 18 years before his election to the Congress. It was in the State Assembly that he developed an active interest in intergovernmental relations as chairman of the Joint Committee on Interstate Cooperation and as a member of the Board of Managers of the Council of State Governments. He continued that interest here in the House of Representatives. He was also a delegate to three Republican National Conventions from 1952 through 1960.

Harold Ostertag as born in Attica, NY, in 1896, and lived there most of his life until his retirement from Congress. He served with the American Expeditionary Forces in World War I, took a leading role in veterans' affairs after the war and had a career in railroading with the New York Central Railroad.

I remember, as a youngster, still early in high school, the courtesies that he extended to me, and I feel privileged to follow in his path.

His wife, Grace, survives, and we extend to her our condolences.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the life, character and public service of the late Honorable Harold C. Ostertag.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, on April 30, 1985, on rollcall vote No. 84, on House Concurrent Resolution 130, I voted "yea." My vote was not registered by the voting machine.

I ask unanimous consent that these remarks be inserted in the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN SERVICEMEN ON THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF VICTORY IN EUROPE

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will mark the 40th anniversary of victory in Europe.

In countries throughout Europe this week, flags are being flown, parades and other ceremonies are being held to celebrate the liberation of Europe from Hitler's oppression.

I think it is only fitting that we in this country also pay tribute to the American servicemen who helped restore freedom to those who suffered under the Nazis.

I have asked Congressman BOB GARCIA to call up a resolution honoring the 4 million American servicemen who marched through Europe with our allies to end this sad chapter in world history.

I think it is important to remember those who died in this effort, as well as those veterans who will be very much a part of ceremonies in Europe and in this country tomorrow.

I hope you will join in support of the resolution.

DANIEL ORTEGA'S LOYALTIES AND INTENTIONS

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Daniel Ortega's shopping tour through the Communist capitals of Europe must be a revelation to those who argued a few days ago that his ties to the Soviets were exaggerated.

You can't help but be impressed with the warm reception he received from his Marxist hosts. But knowing how the Soviets operate makes you wonder what elaborate strings were attached to those fancy aid packages.

If history is any guide, we will see the quid pro quo emerge gradually in ways that no patriotic American nor our allies will appreciate.

Will we see the introduction of Soviet missiles just a few hundred miles from our borders as a result of this trip? Or, will it be the long-awaited arrival of Soviet Migs on our doorstep? Or, the accelerated transition of Nicaragua to a full-fledged, Cuban-style, Soviet client state?

It makes you wonder what surprises Ortega and Gorbachev are cooking up for us. But it should, once and for all, remove any doubts about Ortega's real loyalties and intentions.

ASHLEY BORNE: MISSING CHILD

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, my wife, Gayle, was born and raised in a small corner of America that is probably recognized by very few Americans. It is a small place called Choupic, LA. In Choupic, LA, news of the national tragedy of missing children has become a personal and community tragedy for Choupic and the Lannie Borne family.

Last Tuesday, this girl, Ashley, the 13-year-old daughter of Lannie Borne and his wife Beverly disappeared from home, with no word, no message, no evidence or why or where she has gone, no word at all of what may become of her.

She is 13 years old, and she was last seen in a light green 1982 Delta 88 Oldsmobile, license plates Louisiana 391X920. She is 5 feet 1 inch tall, 115 pounds, blue eyes, with freckles and light brown hair. She was last seen wearing a pink sweater, blue jeans, and Nike tennis shoes.

Her mother and father are frantically seeking help to locate her. So far, no one has provided a single clue as to her whereabouts.

So the national tragedy of missing children has struck close to home in Choupic, LA. We all pray that Ashley is safe and that someone will soon help us find her and report her whereabouts either to my office or to the local authorities in Lafourche Parish in Louisiana.

THE SANDINISTA REGIME IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, less than 2 weeks ago, this House voted to reject aid to the Contras, which would have helped to continue pressure on Managua to moderate its behavior in Central America.

We now know that not only is the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua not moderating its behavior, it is also increasing its ties with the Soviet Union in what only can be considered a direct slap in the face of those in the Congress who seemed to be conciliatory toward the Nicaraguan Government.

Furthermore, we have new reports of direct Sandinista involvement in subversive activities in Honduras. Those reports describe the efforts of Sandinista agents to smuggle arms into Honduras and help recruit and train Honduran guerrilla units.

Last week, I reported on the capture of documents in El Salvador which describes the close cooperation between the Salvadoran guerrillas and the regime in Managua, and this week we have a new report of the defection of a top Salvadoran guerrilla leader who acknowledges the direct support of the Cuban and Nicaraguan Governments for the guerrillas in El Salvador.

It is time to recognize that the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua is not going to be a constructive participant in the peace process in Central America. We must expect that the Sandinistas will continue to press their advantage at every opportunity and we must support those who are in a position to frustrate those efforts. It is not too late to salvage support for the Contras, and I urge my colleagues who rejected aid to the Contras to reconsider their position.

AID TO SENIOR CITIZENS

(Mrs. COLLINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, senior citizens are a vocal group when it comes to complaining about cuts in Social Security and Medicare. They believed President Reagan when he said Social Security would be cut only "over my dead body," and they voted for him by a 61- to 39-percent margin.

Well, Mr. Reagan is still very much alive, but his Republican-controlled Senate is still talking about a freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases, which older Americans say they can't do without.

They should have known this administration couldn't be counted on to keep their campaign promises. It's too bad the senior citizens didn't realize that last November.

But despite their election day loyalty to Reagan, senior citizens can rest assured that the Democratic Party always fights for their best interests.

THE QUALIFICATIONS FOR RAISING CATS

(Mr. STRANG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Speaker, we have recently encountered a proposal to furnish sandboxes to Members of Congress, that they may entertain themselves while others get on with the business of government. It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that one who aspires to be a leader of men and women and who would offer sandboxes as tokens of leadership, has rather more qualified himself for the raising of cats than for the leading of men and women.

THE SPACE ACTIVITIES OF NONLAUNCHING COUNTRIES

(Mr. NELSON of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the United States is the world leader in civilian space activities, but a recent report shows we cannot afford to stand still. The report is entitled "Space Activities of the Non-Launching Countries," prepared by Patricia Humphlett of the Congressional Research Service, Report No. 85-72 SPR.

As its title states, the report covers only those countries that do not have thier own launch capabilities and have to rely on other nations to put a satellite in orbit.

Most of these nations are involved in weather or communication satellite activities. For example, the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization, Intelsat, has 109 members, all of whom have made an investment in the system.

There are two important things to realize about this:

First, these countries obtain real benefits from space.

Second, the small countries are joining together, to pool resources for space programs.

If the United States were to stand still, we would relinquish our world leadership in space.

In order to continue to lead the world, the United States must have a vigorous, well-funded civilian space program.

PLAYING INTO THE HANDS OF REVISIONIST HISTORIANS

(Mr. MRAZEK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, recently a poll was conducted which suggested that fully 40 percent of those Americans surveyed did not know which side we were supporting during the Vietnam war. This is obviously hard to believe for those of us who lived through those traumatic times.

Now, President Reagan has managed to rewrite the history of what was certainly the most cataclysmic time in modern world history. While rewriting history, he has also trivialized it. While in Germany, President Reagan made it manifestly clear that in his view, Adolf Hitler himself was the evil, and that in a sense the German people were just as much victims of Hitler as free world forces that fought nazism at such great cost.

Well, it was not kids or Hollywood actors who crowded by the hundreds of thousands into the huge outdoor stadium at Nuremburg, and screamed "Heil Hitler" until their voices gave out. It was not impressionable kids who proclaimed themselves the "master race," and who, along with Japan, came so close to conquering the world.

For a new generation of Americans who cannot even remember Vietnam, it is a terrible mistake to suggest that millions of Allied soldiers gave their lives fighting one evil man named Adolf Hitler. Adolf Hitler did not personally run the death camps, and he did not conduct the "medical" experiments on children, and he did not destroy the village of Lidice or commit the Malmedy atrocity. He did not level the Warsaw ghetto, and he did not personally kill over 20 million allied soldiers who died fighting the Nazi armies.

Nazism was not one man; to suggest that this is true plays right into the hands of revisionist historians who are already making the case that the Holocaust itself never took place.

USDA OPERATING LOANS ARE AT RECORD LEVELS

(Mr. LATTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, in February, the House of Representatives took up the supplemental appropriation for emergency farm credit. At that time, the legislation included a provision to set up a brandnew program within the Small Business Administration to assist hard-pressed farmers in restructuring their debt and to provide needed assistance in planning this year's crops.

During the somewhat heated debate, I stated we did not need a costly new program to do this job; that we should use an ongoing program especially designed for farmers; namely, the Farmers Home Administration, for this purpose.

I am pleased to report to the House that I received word this morning from the Secretary of Agriculture that the U.S. Department of Agriculture operating loans to finance 1985 crops are running at record levels. With only a little more than half of this fiscal year gone, the USDA's Farmers Home Administration has already reached a record operating loan level of $2.6 billion without a new program.

This record reflects two things, and let me mention them. The administration and particularly Secretary Block, are making good on their commitment to make sufficient credit available for hard-pressed farmers for this year's production.

Second, this fact proves that the people inside and outside this Chamber, clamoring for yet another new, costly program last February were just plain wrong.

THE STAKES ARE TOO HIGH FOR THE ADMINISTRATION TO TURN ITS BACK ON THE TRADE DEFICIT

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, the events of last Sunday concerning the President's visit to Bitburg Cemetery may overshadow the economic summit in Bonn, but the outcome of that meeting in Bonn could have a long-term impact on our Nation. One shortcoming of that meeting has particularly alarmed me, and that is the failure of the President and his colleagues to set a starting date on a new round of multilateral trade negotiations.

Today, Americans are facing a record $123 billion trade deficit. This staggering imbalance is threatening our economy and is also crippling our Nation's agricultural and industrial exports. Two weeks ago, Fiat-Allis, the largest private industry in my hometown of Springfield, IL, announced that it will close in July, and with that closing eliminate 800 jobs.

During the first quarter of 1985, our economy grew at a sluggish 1.3-percent annual rate. Just yesterday Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige announced that the growth in our economy will fall far short of the administration's earlier estimates.

The stakes are too high for the administration to turn its back on our trade deficit, and to turn its back on trade negotiations with our trading partners. If we must abandon the multilateral approach, so be it. By whatever means are necessary, the United States must seek a consistent trade policy from those who expect the United States to practice free trade, but who themselves refuse to.

At a recent town meeting in my district, a constituent asked me whether our recent actions concerning trade with Japan was just publicity. Our response to the failure of the economic summit at Bonn will answer his question.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT PLUS PHASE-IN

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, seldom a day goes by that I am not approached by different groups asking for special consideration under the next year's budget.

This kind of solicitation could easily lead one to believe that the American public has mild concern for the spending problems we face.

Recently, the constituents in New Jersey's 13th District put things into proper perspective. In response to a questionnaire circulated by my office, an overwhelming majority said they wanted this Congress to pass a balanced budget amendment.

While we may disagree over spending priorities, I hope we do not lose sight of the average taxpayer's concerns.

I urge action on a balanced budget amendment during the 99th Congress.

In addition, I call attention to legislation I have introduced with fellow colleagues which will provide a phase-in mechanism. This will enable us to reach a balanced budget through a systematic reduction over 5 years.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WILL NOT BE FOOLED

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, 2 weeks ago, this House, reflecting the overwhelming sentiment of the American people rejected Ronald Reagan's request to provide $14 million in aid to the Contras. But now there are signs that the House may reverse itself and support such aid. Why? Because of Daniel Ortega's trip to the Soviet Union.

As badly timed as that trip was, it should not distract us from the facts: It should not lead us to provide assistance, however camouflaged, to a group of armed terrorists who have pledged, according to one Contra commander, that: "Come the counterrevolution, there will be a massacre in Nicaragua. There will be bodies from the border to Managua."

For 4 years this administration has waged all-out war against Nicaragua's economy. U.S.-financed Contras have mined Nicaraguan ports, have blown up oil storage facilities, assassinated coffee workers, and burned their crops.

The President has blocked multilateral aid to Nicaragua while cutting its sugar quota and denying it wheat credits. Now, after 4 years of orchestrated war, Mr. Ortega does the inevitable and seeks even more aid from the Russians. The Reagan administration cries out in feigned shock: "We told you so."

What hypocrisy. The American people will not be fooled; let us not be.

STATE DEPARTMENT AUTHORIZATION POSTPONED AGAIN

(Mr. KOLBE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, last week on two occasions this House deferred action on the State Department authorization. On both occasions, the leadership of the majority party rose to tell us in very sad tones that they were doing so because of the dilatory and obstructionist tactics of the minority party in this body. The State Department authorization was important, we were told, and the minority party was responsible for blocking action on it.

Mr. Speaker, we did not regard our action as obstructionist tactics. We believed then—as we do now—that a very important constitutional issue faced this House. But we also understood that the State Department authorization is an important issue. We have come to this body this week prepared to carry on the business of this House. Now, today, we are told that the State Department authorization has been postponed yet again, and deferred yet again for another week.

Why, Mr. Speaker? If the State Department authorization was important last week, why is it not important this week? Let us stop kidding ourselves, Mr. Speaker. The majority party in this body has a responsibility to move this body toward the business of getting a budget passed for our Nation. I urge them to do so.

SAYING AND DOING—CONFLICTING MESSAGES

(Mrs. BOXER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, we can only hope that the message of Bitburg will be a warning to every citizen of the world who cares about the human race that we must never allow the world to forget the Holocaust, the SS, Hitler, and the death camps.

But there is another lesson in Bitburg—the lesson of hypocrisy. The lesson of saying one thing and doing another, saying beautiful words, quoting Anne Frank but still standing near the remains of the SS who caused her suffering and death.

But we have seen hypocrisy before from this administration saying they are for families and children but standing by while millions of children move into poverty; saying they are for deficit reduction but asking for huge increases in military spending; saying they are for the elderly and then breaking a solemn promise never to cut Social Security.

Saying and doing: Bitburg is the worst example of conflicting messages, but certainly not the only example.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE POLISH CONSTITUTION OF 1791

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, May 3 marked the anniversary of the Polish Constitution of 1791. One of the most important holidays, it observes the adoption of the Constitution through which Poland was transformed into a modern state.

The Constitution was adopted at a critical time in Polish history. In 1772, the first treaty of partition was signed at St. Petersburg between Prussia, Russia, and Austria. As a result, these three seized large sections of Polish territory.

Although Poland was to be dependent on the three partitioners, they evidently meant to make it a serviceable dependent. The overall shock of the first partition had a certain salutary effect on national mentality. Facing possible annihilation, all forces in Poland united behind the new Constitution, which was greatly influenced by the liberal movements in America, England, and France. The towns got full administrative and judicial autonomy, as well as a certain amount of parliamentary representation. Possession of land and access to office in the state and in church were thrown open to the townsmen. This date is not mentioned today in Poland, but is observed by the many Polish communities in the free world, especially the United States.

SOVIET CITIZENS OF AMERICAN EMBASSY IN MOSCOW ARE UNACCEPTABLE SECURITY RISKS

(Mr. COURTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minutes and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, between 1982 and 1984 it was discovered that typewriters in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow were bugged. It was discovered also that a number of Soviet citizens who worked in the U.S. Embassy were, in fact, employees of the KGB.

I have an amendment to the State Department bill which I urge all my colleagues to support. Basically, what it will do will be to fire 200 Russians who work now inside our Embassy in Moscow and our consulate in Leningrad. These Soviet citizens are an unacceptable security risk to the United States. They create a very heavy counterintelligence burden on the United States.

There is no reason why we should have in the U.S. Embassy, in the area where sensitive information is dealt with, citizens of the Soviet Union who probably work for the KGB.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

HOUSE SHOULD TAKE ANOTHER LOOK AT HUMANITARIAN AID TO NICARAGUAN RESISTANCE FORCES

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues, I was frustrated by the lack of options which led to the defeat 2 weeks ago of a proposal to provide humanitarian aid to the resistance forces in Nicaragua.

I believe recent events have shown that it was a mistake to completely reject such aid, and I think this House should take another look at the issue.

Accordingly, tomorrow I am introducing a joint resolution—which may be considered as a resolution or as an amendment to upcoming legislation—that would release the $14 million fenced last year, but limit its use to humanitarian aid. The funds would be distributed through the Agency for International Development, and any use for military or other lethal purposes is specifically forbidden.

Second, it urges the President to vigorously pursue diplomatic and economic steps, in concert with the OAS and other free world nations, to implement the Contradora objectives and to pressure the Government of Nicaragua to begin talks with the resistance forces. It also urges the President to resume bilaterial discussions between the United States and Nicaragua.

The President is required to report to the Congress every 90 days and, if he determines that negotiations and other steps have failed to resolve the conflict, he may—after consultation with the Congress—request a joint resolution providing additional assistance for the resistance forces. Such request would be considered on an expedited basis.

I believe this resolution, and a similar one in the Senate, offer the best hope of filling a dangerous hole in American foreign policy. I urge my colleagues' support.

THE PREVENTION OF FUTURE HOLOCAUSTS

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, this past week the world has been witness to the events of the Holocaust, and the world has had the opportunity to reflect on those events. Our responsibility is to never forget, indeed to remember the Holocaust. Our responsibility is also to prevent future holocausts from occurring.

The common thread that has run through the holocausts of the 20th century is totalitarian tyranny. That thread was evident in Nazi Germany, that thread was evident in Soviet Russia during the enforced famine against the people of the Ukraine, and that thread was evident in the fabric of repression in Pol Pot's Cambodia.

Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility to support the forces of pluralism and of democracy and those who would struggle against totalitarian tyranny. We have an obligation to support those who would struggle against totalitarian tyranny here in our own hemisphere on the mainland of the Americas.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Congress to revisit the aid package to those fighting for democracy in Nicaragua.

CENTRAL AMERICA: A DOSE OF REALITY

(Mr. GONZALEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I pointed out the fact that the United States is a member of the Organization of American States, the OAS. It is a fact, a reality, that the Rio Treaty, both in its original form and in its later amendments, commits our country to the peaceful settlement of disputes. The treaty obligations of the United States, as expressed in the Rio Treaty and its revisions, make it an unequivocal duty to avoid acts of aggression. Any country that commits an act of aggression clearly violates the terms of the treaty.

Aggression is defined thusly, in the Rio Treaty:

> The sending by or on behalf of a State of armed bands, groups, irregulars, or mercenaries, which carry out acts of armed force against another State.

This is an exact definition of the Contra forces, and of our support for them.

When the House debates the business of aid to the Contras, it is a reality, a fact that we must remember, that no matter what we may think of the Government of Nicaragua, our treaty obligations clearly call for us to seek negotiation of our differences and to avoid acts of war. And there is no evading the fact that our support of the Contra forces, and the acts that they have committed, fall within the definition of acts of war, acts of aggression, acts that our Government has solemnly pledged not to undertake.

We have to be sober and mature in our judgment. Some will say, "so what?" about any violation of international law. But those same voices rise in great outcry if some other country violates such law. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot call one country lawless, if we ourselves were the first to violate the law. In the case of Nicaragua, we are in no position to call that Government lawless. President Reagan knows that we are in clear violation of international law, and that is why, among other things, he denies that the World Court even has the right to examine the case of Nicaragua—even though in other cases, the United States has used the World Court to great advantage. It is no light thing to ignore law, even law so fragile as international law.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NELSON of Florida). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken after debate has been concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE BUREAU OF THE MINT, 1986

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2148) to authorize appropriations for the Bureau of the Mint for fiscal year 1986, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2148

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 5132(a)(2) of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Not more than $47,692,000 may be appropriated to the Secretary for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, to pay costs of the mints and assay offices.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2148 authorizes not more than $47,692,000 for the Bureau of the Mint. I know that many Members believe that we should put a freeze on Government spending. Those Members will be pleased to know that this authorization is $66,000 less than the House authorized in fiscal 1985.

The authorization includes a decrease of $250,000 from the authorization requested by the mint. The mint proposed to spend that amount on architectural and engineering studies related to the use of space at the Philadelphia Mint.

The study was supposedly required to determine how to best use the space now unused as a result of the closing of the casting and rolling facility. That closing occurred because it was allegedly cheaper to purchase, rather than manufacture, coinage strip. Now the mint proposes to spend half a million dollars to plan what to do with the space. The mint's own personnel are the experts on the coinage process, and no outsiders can approach them in the expertise they possess in mint operations. To use expensive contractors who are unfamiliar with coinage is a waste of the taxpayers' money.

The authorization includes an increase of $988,000 to restore the administration's proposed 5-percent cut for the salaries of the mint's employees. Such a cut is completely unwarranted and unfair. Most of the mint's employees are blue collar or clerical workers in the lower grades of the Federal pay scale. These employees would be least able to afford any pay cut at all.

H.R. 2148 does not require that the mint restore the funds for the proposed pay cut. It does restore them to the authorization so that, if the pay cut is not approved, the Appropriations Committee will be able to appropriate the funds without any need for the authorization to be amended.

The bill, as reported by the Banking Committee, deletes the mint's request for an unlimited authorization for fiscal year 1987. This enables Congress to maintain necessary control over mint spending and activities in fiscal year 1987 and future years.

I am firmly opposed to an authorization longer than 1 year in duration. A 1-year authorization provides the Congress and the Banking Committee with the opportunity to oversee and monitor the operation of this important agency.

It is important that the United States maintain control over its coinage. Security over the coinage process is vital to protect the integrity of our money. We cannot risk having coins of the realm made outside the realm. My concern was heightened earlier this year when the mint received a number of foreign bids on a solicitation to supply the Denver Mint with coin blanks.

During the consideration of H.R. 2148, the Consumer Affairs Subcommittee adopted an amendment I offered requiring the use of American metals, equipment, and services in the manufacture of our coins. On April 30, Mint Director Donna Pope wrote to me stating that the coin blank solicitation was being withdrawn. The letter stated that coin blanks will continue to be manufactured in the security of the Denver Mint.

In light of this positive action on the part of the Treasury, I withdrew my amendment. I do not believe that we now need codify a ban on foreign purchases. However, if it appears that the mint moves toward a continued erosion of American source contracting, I will not hesitate to reintroduce legislation to assure that our coins are truly American coins. As long as I am chairman of the subcommittee, our coins will never be labeled "made in Taiwan."

The U.S. Mint is the greatest mint in the world. Our coins are recognized worldwide. The quality and integrity of our coinage must be zealously guarded. This authorization assures that the mint will be funded at the level necessary to do so, without any unnecessary expenditures.

□ 1310

At this time I would like to pay tribute to the ranking minority member of the Coinage Subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. JOHN HILER, and to the ranking minority member of the full committee, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CHALMERS WYLIE, and to all the members of our committee for their genuine support and dedication to the coinage system of the United States. They have loyally supported my efforts as chairman, and as far as I am concerned, they have made my job much easier. I want to pay tribute to them today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Chairman ANNUNZIO in support of H.R. 2148, which would authorize appropriations of $47.692 million for the expenses and salaries of the U.S. Mint.

Although this authorization is $738,000 above the administration's original request of $46.954 million, I believe that it is reasonable. The higher figure we are considering today reflects two policy changes which the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee decided should be made in the administration's request.

First, the subcommittee eliminated the administration's proposed 5-percent reduction in salaries of mint personnel and replaced it with a pay freeze. In our view, the inclusion of a pay cut is not realistic. Recent action on the budget indicates that Congress is very unlikely to approve a 5-percent reduction in the pay of Federal workers, and the administration has indicated to the other body's leadership that a pay freeze will be sought.

Second, the subcommittee rejected the mint's request for an additional $275,000 in appropriated funds for architectural and engineering plans for utilization of available space at the Philadelphia Mint. Although I do not object to this project on its merits, I do believe that at a time when our Nation is facing extraordinarily large budget deficits, we all have to tighten our belts a bit. And if the mint decides that this project is essential, it can go ahead with it. The authorization permits the mint the flexibility to use its appropriated funds as it sees fit.

Two additional proposals related to the operations of the U.S. Mint were considered during consideration of the bill at the subcommittee and committee levels. The Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee reported a mint authorization bill that contained restrictions on the mint's procurement of metals, other materials, services, and equipment from foreign sources. Although I am generally an advocate of free trade, I do believe that we must take care not to jeopardize the security of our coinage system.

The awarding of contracts to foreign concerns for the blanking of coins could pose such a risk. While I am convinced that the bill as originally passed out of the subcommittee contained language that would have given the Treasury sufficient flexibility to buy foreign if there was no substantially equivalent U.S. product or if the domestic price was not reasonable, I am pleased that the Treasury Department under its new leadership has decided to withdraw its current solicitation for bids on coin blanks in particular and to take another look at the implications of seeking private sources of coin blanks rather than continuing to do its own blanking, in light of the probability that a foreign source would have the lowest price. While savings could be attained from private-source blanking, if those savings are at the expense of domestically produced coins, I am not sure the savings would be worth it.

As a result of Treasury's decision on this matter, the Banking Committee dropped the proposed restrictions on the mint's procurement practices from the authorization.

The Banking Committee also considered an amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE] to provide for the minting of a copper penny rather than the zinc penny we now have. Prior to 1981, the penny was a copper coin. Because of the run-up in the price of copper, the mint changed the penny to a copper-clad zinc coin at a large savings to the American people. Because the price of copper has now fallen, the gentleman from Arizona believes that going back to a copper coin would assist the copper mines and workers who are currently out of work.

Although this proposal encountered some resistance during the markup, I appreciate the concerns expressed by the gentleman from Arizona. This is an issue that both Chairman ANNUNZIO and I believe should be revisited in the future.

Although the mint is now an effectively managed agency under the direction of Donna Pope, there remains a need for constant and close congressional oversight of its operations. As ranking Republican on the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee, I intend to continue to work closely with Chairman ANNUNZIO to ensure that the mint continues to be not only a cost-effective agency, but also one which operates in the best interests of the Nation it serves.

I might also add that I appreciated the cooperation which Chairman ANNUNZIO displayed not only to myself, but to the Republican members of the subcommittee and the full committee and look forward to working with the chairman in the future on oversight of the mint and in future authorizations.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like the gentleman to yield for two purposes. No 1, it is my understanding that the authorization we have before us does indeed meet the freeze test; in other words, that the amount we would be authorizing in this bill is below the appropriation level for last year; is that correct?

Mr. HILER. That is correct. The authorized amount for fiscal year 1986 would be some $66,000 less than the appropriated amount had been in the continuing resolution passed last year for fiscal year 1985.

Mr. WALKER. So that we can assure our colleagues as we pass this authorization that those who have been in support of the freeze up until now in other authorizations are indeed supporting the same concept here.

Mr. HILER. That is correct.

Mr. WALKER. I would also ask the gentleman to yield further. I was just doing a head count here on the floor a little bit ago and discovered that there are somewhere between 7 and 10 people on the floor for this debate.

I point that out only because recently the Democratic Congressional Committee has been mailing into some of our districts suggesting that there are times when there are some serious activities on the floor, and other times when there are not serious activities and it is a waste of money when they point out that there is not serious activity.

I simply think that it is important for the American people to understand when they do not have the cameras panning the floor during the regular sessions of this body that they understand that there are not very many people here during some of these debates, either, despite the fact that the gentleman has helped bring a bill to the floor that is about a $47 million bill and we would have to wonder why some people do not regard that as serious business.

Mr. HILER. Well, I would like to think that the House recognizes that the chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] and myself, would not bring a bill to the floor unless it was going to meet the guidelines that all 435 Members would subscribe to and I hope it shows confidence in us.

Mr. WALKER. I think that must be the case. I am sure the gentleman has defined it perfectly.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

● Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I join Chairman ANNUNZIO and Congressman HILER in their support of H.R. 2148, legislation that authorizes appropriations for the U.S. Mint for fiscal year 1986. I also would like to commend the chairman of the Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee for the outstanding work he has done in the oversight of the U.S. Mint and its operations. Mr. HILER deserves mention for his excellent contributions in making this a good bill.

The mint is one agency of the Government which is effectively and efficiently managed. Under the direction of Donna Pope, who I am proud to say is a fellow Ohioan, the mint has enjoyed considerable success in recent years. I think we would all agree that among the most significant of the mint's achievements is its recent deposit of $818 million in the general fund of the Treasury. This $818 million consisted of profits earned from seign-iorage and sales of numismatic items. Not many Government agencies can claim to earn a profit. Nor can many Government agencies boast that they actually contribute to reducing the deficit, rather than to increasing it.

Another of the mint's recent accomplishments is the successful completion of the Olympic Coin Program. A total of 3.3 million Olympic coins have been shipped from the mint to purchasers. As a result of the mint's efforts, more than $71.9 million has been turned over to the U.S. Olympic Committee and the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, in support of a very worthy cause.

In light of the outstanding recent successes of the U.S. Mint, particularly its laudable practice of enriching the Treasury's coffers, I believe that the authorization request before us today is a reasonable one. I recognize that the authorization adopted by the Banking Committee does exceed the President's request by $738,000. For the most part, this reflects the opinion of both the subcommittee and the committee that mint salaries should be frozen, rather than reduced by 5 percent as proposed by the administration. Even so, the authorization request of $47,692 million that is before us today is still $66,000 less than the fiscal year 1985 appropriation for the mint as contained in last year's continuing resolution.

The U.S. Mint is a Government agency we can all be proud of. Under the outstanding management of Donna Pope, it is working hard to produce the highest quality coinage at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayer. Beyond performing its basic function in an exemplary fashion, the mint has made some very special contributions to the Olympics Program and to the reduction of the deficit. These are contributions that we all can appreciate, and the agency making them deserves our strongest support.●

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Indiana for yielding.

If I can answer the question of our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Members that are on the floor here are what we call the watchdogs of the Treasury, so I think the American people are well served.

I want to congratulate the ranking member of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER] for his marvelous job in crafting this legislation. He is truly gifted in this regard and we are fortunate to have him as the ranking member of our committee.

I also want to especially express my appreciation to our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] for his eternal vigilance and diligence in this area. The U.S. Mint is responsive to the needs and concerns of the American public because he is in charge. I do not know of any man in Congress that is as well informed as the gentleman from Illinois when it comes to these important issues and is as conscientious and as diligent.

□ 1320

That is why we do not have to have all 435 Members here, because we have confidence in you and we have confidence that the job is going to be done right. We thank you for that and also our wonderful staff.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2148, which would authorize funding for the U.S. Mint for fiscal 1986. The cost of this authorization, is below the 1985 authorization level. This is a fiscally responsible bill.

I want to commend the ranking minority member of our subcommittee, Mr. HILER, for his efforts in crafting this legislation. And I especially want to express my appreciation to the subcommittee chairman, Mr. ANNUNZIO, for his eternal diligence in ensuring that the U.S. Mint is responsive to the needs and concerns of the American public.

On one issue in particular I want to associate myself with the chairman's position, and that is on the procurement of equipment and materials, especially coin blanks, by the mint. Most certainly, we have an obligation to protect American jobs and industries which can provide supplies to the mint at a reasonable cost.

Foreign sourcing of coin blanks is a troubling prospect on several counts. One, of course, is security. A second is quality control. But third, and most important, is the thought that the United States, a country with a $130 billion trade deficit, might actually begin importing its own coinage. As the chairman has said, the coin of the realm should not be produced outside of the realm. As far as I am concerned, this should be a guiding principle.

It is my understanding that the issue of sourcing of coin blanks has been resolved by Treasury's agreeing to drop its solicitation. There is some question in my mind as to whether or not private firms, in the United States or outside, should be doing a job the mint has been doing for years—and is perfectly capable of doing. I am pleased that since Treasury is under new leadership it has decided to revisit this entire issue.

Again, I strongly support this legislation, and urge my colleagues to do likewise.

There is one other issue I think we want to touch on which is somewhat relevant, and that is the issue of changing of our currency. For that, too, I want to thank our chairman and ranking member because no other issue is going to, I think, disturb the House as much as that particular issue if it is not properly handled.

So many times we go back to our districts and people say "I did not realize you were even considering this law on Capitol Hill, and now it is a law and we have to live with it." This issue of the change of the currency is one of those sleeping issues and for that we are confident and thankful to our chairman and to our ranking member that this issue is going to be resolved and is going to be guarded.

Again I want to thank the chairman and the ranking member for their diligence in this regard and in this matter. Because of you, those of us in Congress can have faith and confidence that the job will be done right.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Will my good friend from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I want to express my deep appreciation to the gentleman, TOBY ROTH from Wisconsin, for all of the kind remarks and for his active participation in this committee. Without the support of all of the committee members we would not be able to do the job. I know I could not do the job by myself.

Under the Constitution, the Congress of the United States is given the authority to protect the currency and the coinage system of the United States. We are obligated. That is our responsibility. And as a committee we have been trying to do that job and I think we have done a good job.

I would also like to make this point for the RECORD. The mint produces for the Treasury of the United States, close to $500 million a year in profit from the sale of coins to the public. So for the taxpayers we not only want to protect the mint's integrity but we want to protect that source of revenue to the Treasury. And as we all know, the revenue is badly needed today because of the rising deficits in our budgets.

So, again, I thank the gentleman for his support. I am looking forward to his help on the counterfeit currency problem. We will have hearings in about a month and when those hearings begin I know the gentleman will take a very active part, along with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. JOHN HILER.

Mr. ROTH. I thank our chairman for his graciousness and insight, and I yield back to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2148, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize appropriations for the Bureau of the Mint for fiscal year 1986."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1869, REPEAL OF CONTEMPORANEOUS RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENTS

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 1869) to repeal the contemporaneous recordkeeping requirements added by the Tax Reform Act of 1984, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 99-67)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1869) to repeal the contemporaneous recordkeeping requirements added by the Tax Reform Act of 1984, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

SECTION 1. REPEAL OF CONTEMPORANEOUS RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENTS, ETC.

(a) CONTEMPORANEOUS RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENTS.—Subsection (d) of section 274 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to substantiation requirements for certain deductions and credits) is amended by striking out "adequate contemporaneous records" and inserting in lieu thereof "adequate records or by sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement", and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be applied and administered as if the word

"contemporaneous" had not been added to such subsection (d).

(b) PROVISIONS RELATING TO RETURN PREPARERS AND NEGLIGENCE PENALTY.—Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 179(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 are hereby repealed, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be applied and administered as if such paragraphs (and the amendments made by such paragraphs) had not been enacted.

(c) REPEAL OF REGULATIONS.—Regulations issued before the date of the enactment of this Act to carry out the amendments made by paragraphs (1)(C), (2), and (3) of section 179(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall have no force and effect.

SEC. 2. SUBSTANTIATION REQUIREMENTS NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN VEHICLES WITH LITTLE PERSONAL USE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (d) of section 274 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to substantiation required) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to any qualified nonpersonal use vehicle (as defined in subsection (i))."

(b) QUALIFIED NONPERSONAL USE VEHICLE DEFINED.—Section 274 of such Code is amended by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (j) and by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i) QUALIFIED NONPERSONAL USE VEHICLE.—For purposes of subsection (d), the term 'qualified nonpersonal use vehicle' means any vehicle which, by reason of its nature, is not likely to be used more than a de minimis amount for personal purposes."

SEC. 3. EXEMPTION FROM REQUIRED INCOME TAX WITHHOLDING FOR CERTAIN FRINGE BENEFITS.

Section 3402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to income tax collected at source) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(s) EXEMPTION FROM WITHHOLDING FOR ANY VEHICLE FRINGE BENEFIT.—

"(1) EMPLOYER ELECTION NOT TO WITHHOLD.—The employer may elect not to deduct and withhold any tax under this chapter with respect to any vehicle fringe benefit provided to any employee if such employee is notified by the employer of such election (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any vehicle fringe benefit unless the amount of such benefit is included by the employer on a statement timely furnished under section 6051.

"(2) EMPLOYER MUST FURNISH W-2.—Any vehicle fringe benefit shall be treated as wages from which amounts are required to be deducted and withheld under this chapter for purposes of section 6051.

"(3) VEHICLE FRINGE BENEFIT.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'vehicle fringe benefit' means any fringe benefit—

"(A) which constitutes wages (as defined in section 3401), and

"(B) which consists of providing a highway motor vehicle for the use of the employee."

SEC. 4. REDUCTION IN LIMITATIONS ON INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT AND DEPRECIATION FOR LUXURY AUTOMOBILES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—

(1) INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT.—Paragraph (1) of section 280F(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to investment tax credit) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$675".

(2) DEPRECIATION.—Paragraph (2) of section 280F(a) of such Code (relating to depreciation) is amended—

(A) by striking out "$4,000" in subparagraph (A)(i) and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,200", and

(B) by striking out "$6,000" each place it appears in subparagraphs (A)(ii) and (B)(ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "$4,800".

(b) 4-YEAR DEFERRAL OF INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—

(1) ADJUSTMENT AFTER 1988.—Subparagraph (A) of section 280F(d)(7) of such Code (relating to automobile price inflation adjustment) is amended by striking out "passenger automobile" and inserting in lieu thereof "passenger automobile placed in service after 1988".

(2) 1987 BASE PERIOD.—Subclause (II) of section 280F(d)(7)(B)(i) of such Code is amended by striking out "1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "1987".

(3) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Clause (i) of section 280F(d)(7)(B) of such Code is amended by striking out the last sentence.

SEC. 5. NEW REGULATIONS.

Not later than October 1, 1985, the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act which shall fully reflect such provisions.

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) REPEALS.—The amendment and repeals made by subsections (a) and (b) of section 1 shall take effect as if included in the amendments made by section 179(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

(b) RESTORATION OF PRIOR LAW FOR 1985.—For taxable years beginning in 1985, section 274(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall apply as it read before the amendments made by section 179(b)(1) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

(c) EXCEPTION FROM SUBSTANTIATION REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALIFIED NONPERSONAL USE VEHICLES.—The amendments made by section 2 shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985.

(d) WITHHOLDING AMENDMENT.—The amendment made by section 3 shall take effect on January 1, 1985.

(e) REDUCTION IN LIMITATIONS ON INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT AND DEPRECIATION.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 4 shall apply to—

(A) property placed in service after April 2, 1985, in taxable years ending after such date, and

(B) property leased after April 2, 1985, in taxable years ending after such date.

(2) The amendments made by section 4 shall not apply to any property—

(A) acquired by the taxpayer pursuant to a binding contract in effect on April 1, 1985, and at all times thereafter, but only if the property is placed in service before August 1, 1985, or

(B) of which the taxpayer is the lessee, but only if the lease is pursuant to a binding contract in effect on April 1, 1985, and at all times thereafter, and only if the taxpayer first uses such property under the lease before August 1, 1985.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1869) to repeal the contemporaneous recordkeeping requirements added by the Tax Reform Act of 1984, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The difference between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

STATEMENT OF MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

I. EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

A. Repeal of Requirement That Certain Records Must Be Contemporaneous (secs. 1 (a) and (c) and 2(a) of the House bill and secs. 1 (a) and (c)

1. Repeal of "contemporaneous" requirement

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1984 (the 1984 Act) amended Code section 274(d) to require that taxpayers must maintain "adequate contemporaneous records" to substantiate deductions and credits for business use of automobiles and other listed property.

House bill

The House bill repeals the word "contemporaneous," effective as if it had never been enacted.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

2. Alternate substantiation method

Present law and background

Prior to the 1984 Act, taxpayers were required under section 274(d) to substantiate deductions for travel away from home (including meals and lodging), for items with respect to entertainment, amusement, or recreation activities of facilities, and for business gifts by adequate records or by sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement. In the case of an expense or item subject to substantiation under section 274(d), that provision required substantiation as to (1) the amount of such expense or other item, (2) the time and place of the travel, entertainment, amusement, recreation, or use of the facility, or the date and description of the gift, (3) the business purpose of the expense or other item, and (4) the business relationship to the taxpayer of persons entertained, using the facility, or receiving the gift. Prior to the 1984 Act, local travel (i.e., travel not away from home) was not subject to the section 274(d) substantiation standards.

Section 179(b) of the 1984 Act deleted from section 274(d) the alternate substantiation method of sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement. The 1984 Act also applied the section 274(d) substantiation requirements to deductions or credits claimed for use of listed property (as defined in sec. 280F(d)(4)). The categories of listed property include automobiles (whether used for local travel or travel away from home), other means of transportation, computers, etc.

House bill

The House bill provides that, as an alternative to maintaining adequate records, taxpayers may substantiate deductions and credits under section 274(d) by sufficient written evidence corroborating their own statement.

The committee report also requires that certain information concerning mileage and business use of vehicles, as well as similar information concerning business use of other listed property, must be requested on tax returns.

The House bill is effective on January 1, 1986. For 1985, the substantiation rules in effect prior to the 1984 Act would apply.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is similar to the House bill in that it provides for an alternate substantiation method. However, the Senate amendment does not require that the evidence must be written in order to qualify as sufficient under the alternate substantiation standard. The Senate amendment is effective January 1, 1985.

The Senate amendment does not specifically require that questions regarding the business use of automobiles and other listed property be asked on tax returns.

Conference agreement

Substantiation standards

In general

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment as to the substantiation standards under section 274(d). Thus, section 274(d) is amended to require that a taxpayer must have adequate records or sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement to support credits or deductions for expenditures subject to the section 274(d) substantiation rules. As under pre-1984 Act law, section 274(d) as amended by the bill requires the taxpayer to substantiate (1) the amount of the expense or item subject to section 274(d), (2) the time and place of the travel, entertainment, amusement, recreation, or use of the facility or property, or the date and description of the gift, (3) the business purpose of the expense or other item, and (4) the business relationship to the taxpayer of persons entertained, using the facility or property, or receiving the gift.

The conferees believe that a taxpayer's uncorroborated statement as to the business use of an automobile or other listed property does not alone have sufficient probative value to warrant consideration by the Internal Revenue Service or the courts. Consequently, the conferees adopt for this purpose the standard of prior law applicable to travel away from home and business entertainment (sec. 274(d)) that requires taxpayers to provide either adequate records or sufficient evidence corroborating their own statements in order to support a deduction or credit under section 274(d). The more general substantiation standards applicable under section 162,[1] which have been interpreted to permit in certain circumstances uncorroborated statements by taxpayers to support business deductions not subject to section 274(d) or other special rules, are to have no application to deductions or credits with respect to local travel, computers, and other listed property first required (under this bill) to meet the section 274(d) substantiation standards beginning January 1, 1986, just as they are to have no application with respect to expenditures with respect to travel away from home, etc., which continue to be subject to section 274(d) substantiation standards.

The conference agreement does not include the provision of the House bill that would require that the sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement be written. The conferees believe that oral evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement, such as oral testimony from a disinterested, unrelated party describing the taxpayer's activities, may be of sufficient probative value that it should not be automatically excluded from consideration under section 274(d).

The conferees emphasize, however, that different types of evidence have different degrees of probative value. The conferees believe that oral evidence alone has considerably less probative value than written evidence. In addition, the conferees believe that the probative value of written evidence is greater the closer in time it relates to the expenditure. Thus, written evidence arising at or near the time of the expenditure, absent unusual circumstances, has much more probative value than evidence created years later, such as written evidence first prepared for audit or court.

The conferees specifically approve the types of substantiation that were required under prior law, and consider the longstanding Treasury regulations on recordkeeping issued under section 274(d)[2] prior to the 1984 Act to reflect accurately their intent as to the substantiation that taxpayers are required to maintain.[3] While taxpayers may choose to keep logs on the use of their automobiles, and while such evidence generally has more probative value than evidence developed later, the Treasury is specifically prohibited from requiring that taxpayers keep daily contemporaneous logs of their use of automobiles.

The conferees expect the Internal Revenue Service and the courts to continue to weigh carefully the probative value of these, as well as all other, forms of evidence. The Service and the courts continue to have the ability to discount or reject totally evidence that has limited or no probative value (such as documents actually created much later than they purport to have been created). As noted above, section 274(d) requires that the records or evidence (whatever their particular form) most substantiate not just the amount of the expense, but also the time and place of the travel, entertainment, amusement, recreation, or use of the facility or property, or the date and description of the gift; the business purpose of the expense or other item; and the business relationship to the taxpayer of persons entertained, using the facility or property, or receiving the gift.

Although the conferees intend that the principles of these regulations fully apply to deductions and credits claimed for local travel and the use of other listed property under section 274(d), the conferees also recognize that these principles will need to be carefully applied to local travel and listed property not previously subject to section 274(d). This will need to be done because the nature of making these expenditures generally differs from the nature of making the types of expenditures that had been required to meet the section 274(d) substantiation standards prior to the 1984 Act, such as travel away from home and business meals. For example, deductions associated with local travel may be for annual amounts for items such as depreciation and insurance, rather than a series of discrete expenditures for meals or hotels. Also, expenses for travel away from home often involve a third party, such as an airline, train, or hotel, that provides a receipt for the taxpayer of the date and amount of the expenditure and the destination or location. Similarly, expenses for business meals generally occur in restaurants, which provide a similar receipt. While these receipts do not, of course, encompass all of the elements of the substantiation requirements under section 274(d),[4] they do aid taxpayers in their recordkeeping. Similar third party involvement generally is not available for local travel or the use of computers. Similarly, expenses for travel away from home or for business meals do not generally occur with the same frequency as individual local travel trips. Because the bill repeals the 1984 Act requirement of contemporaneous records, taxpayers are not required to maintain trip-by-trip logs and records encompassing each element of the substantiation standards of section 274(d) to justify a deduction or credit.

Consequently, the conferees recognize that some adjustment generally will need to be made in order to apply these principles to the specific factual circumstances surrounding expenditures for local travel and

[1] Under general tax law principles, the courts have held that a taxpayer bears the burden of proving both the eligibility of any expenditure claimed as a deduction or credit and also the amount of any such eligible expenditure, including the expenses of using a car in the taxpayer's trade or business. See, e.g., Interstate Transit Lines v. Comm'r, 319 U.S. 590, 593 (1943); Comm'r v. Heininger, 320 U.S. 467 (1943); Gaines v. Comm'r, 35 T.C.M. 1415 (1976).

[2] See Teas. Reg. sec. 1.274-5.

[3] Prior law provided that adequate records or sufficient evidence may take the following forms:

a. Account books
b. Diaries
c. Logs
d. Documentary evidence (receipts, paid bills)
e. Trip sheets
f. Expense reports
g. Statements of witnesses
h. If the employee is required to make an adequate accounting to the employer and the reimbursement equals expenses, the employee is not required to report the expenses and reimbursement on his or her tax return. (A reimbursement would equal reimbursement expenses where the reimbursement is determined pursuant to data on the type of automobile and its availability for personal purposes, and on a reasonable allocation of local operating and fixed costs.)

[4] For example, the third party is not in a position to record the business purpose of the trip or meal; the taxpayer must provide that information, which is required under the section 274(d) substantiation rules.

use of listed property not previously subject to section 274(d) rules. The conferees believe that the courts and the Treasury can make these required adjustments without sacrificing these principles, and without reverting to the section 162 standards (including the Cohan[5] rule), which the conferees have determined are inadequate and unacceptable for purposes of section 274(d). In several cases previously decided under section 274(d), it is not clear that the courts had rejected the Cohan rule; the conferees believe that the courts must clearly and explicitly reject the Cohan rule for expenditures required to meet the substantiation requirements of section 274(d).

WRITTEN POLICY STATEMENTS

The conferees intend that the two types of written policy statements satisfying the conditions described below, if initiated and kept by an employer to implement a policy of no personal use (or no personal use except for commuting) of a vehicle provided by the employer, qualify as sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement[6] and therefore will satisfy the employer's substantiation requirements under section 274(d). Therefore, the employee need not keep a separate set of records for purposes of the employer's substantiation requirements under section 274(d) with respect to use of a vehicle satisfying these written policy statement rules. A written policy statement adopted by a government unit as to employee use of its vehicles would be eligible for these exceptions to the section 274(d) substantiation rules. Thus, a resolution of a city council or a provision of state law or the state constitution would qualify as a written policy statement, so long as the conditions described below are met.

The first type of written policy statement that will satisfy the employer's substantiation requirements under section 274(d) is a policy that prohibits personal use by the employee. In order to be eligible for this special rule, all of the following conditions must be met.

(1) The vehicle is owned or leased by the employer and is provided to one or more employees for use in connection with the employer's trade or business;

(2) When the vehicle is not being used for such business purposes, it is kept on the employer's business premises (or temporarily located elsewhere, e.g., for repair);

(3) Under the employer's written policy, no employee may use the vehicle for personal purposes, other than de minimis personal use (such as a stop for lunch between two business deliveries);

(4) The employer reasonably believes that no employee uses the vehicle, other than de minimis use, for any personal purpose;

(5) No employee using the vehicle lives at the employer's business premises; and

(6) There must be evidence that would enable the Internal Revenue Service to determine whether the use of the vehicle met the five preceding conditions.

The second type of written policy statement that will satisfy the employer's substantiation requirements under section 274(d) is a policy that prohibits personal use by the employee, except for commuting. In order to be eligible for this rule, all of the following conditions must be met—

(1) The vehicle is owned or leased by the employer and is provided to one or more employees for use in connection with the employer's trade or business and is used in the employer's trade or business;

(2) For bona fide noncompensatory business reasons, the employer requires the employee to commute to and/or from work in the vehicle;

(3) The employer establishes a written policy under which the employee may not use the vehicle for personal purposes, other than commuting or de minimis personal use (such as a stop for a personal errand between a business delivery and the employee's home);

(4) The employer reasonably believes that, except for de minimis use, the employee does not use the vehicle for any personal purpose other than commuting;

(5) The employer accounts for the commuting use by including an appropriate amount (specified in Treasury regulations) in the employee's gross income;[7] and

(6) There must be evidence that would enable the Internal Revenue Service to determine whether the use of the vehicle met the five preceding conditions.

This second type of written policy statement is not available if the employee using the vehicle for commuting is an officer or one-percent owner of the employer.[8]

Tax return questions

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill as to information to be requested on tax returns about business use of vehicles and other listed property.

The conferees want to ensure that taxpayers claim only the deductions and credits to which they are entitled, but without being unduly burdened by unnecessarily complex recordkeeping requirements. At the same time, the conferees believe that taxpayers should provide sufficient information on their returns so that the Internal Revenue Service can make a preliminary evaluation of the appropriateness of the taxpayer's claimed deductions. Previously, the Internal Revenue Service found it difficult to make such a preliminary evaluation without auditing the taxpayer, which can also be a significant burden on the taxpayer.

Therefore, the conferees intend that individual taxpayers (whether employees or self-employed) claiming deductions or credits for business use of an automobile or other listed property subject to the substantiation standards of section 274(d) are to provide on their returns the substance of the information (generally on appropriate existing tax forms) called for by all the questions as set forth in the House report on the bill.[9] Corporate taxpayers, as well as all other taxpayers and entities, claiming such deductions or credits also are to be asked to supply such information on the forms or schedules they are required to file.

The conferees have carefully considered the fact that furnishing additional tax return information, although involving only a limited number of questions, requires some additional effort by taxpayers. However, the conferees note that computations involved with respect to vehicles (such as mileage and percentage of business use) normally would be made by taxpayers in the process of determining the proper amount of deductions and credits to claim, and that other information can be obtained through "yes" or "no" questions. Accordingly, to achieve better compliance and more accurate computations, the conference agreement directs the Internal Revenue Service to obtain this information on appropriate tax forms or schedules, notwithstanding any otherwise applicable paperwork reduction considerations.

The conferees intend that employees give this return information to their employers with respect to employer-provided vehicles. Generally, the employer would report this information on its tax return, since the employer is claiming the tax deductions or credits for use of the vehicle. An employer which provides more than five cars to its employees, however, would not have to include all this information on the employer's return; instead, such an employer must obtain this information from its employees, must so indicate on its return, and must retain the information received. The Internal Revenue Service could then examine on audit the information that the employees had provided to the employer. An employer may rely on such a statement from its employee (unless the employer knows or has reason to know it is false) to determine the credits and deductions to which the employer is entitled and to determine the amount, if any, which must be included in employee's income and wages by the employer because of the employee's commuting or other personal use of the employer-provided car.

Effective dates

The modification to the substantiation standards of section 274(d) that provides that taxpayers must substantiate deductions or credits subject to that provision by adequate records or sufficient evidence corroborating their own statement is effective January 1, 1985.

Use of listed property that was not subject to section 274(d) substantiation rules prior to the 1984 Act (such as local travel in an automobile or use of computers) is subject to the section 274(d) substantiation requirements effective January 1, 1986.[10] For 1985,

[5] Cohan v. Commissioner, 39 F.2d 540, 544 (2d Cir. 1930).

[6] The substance of these two special rules was set forth in the temporary Treasury regulations repealed by the bill. The conferees intend that these rules, as described in this report, be reinstated in the new regulations required by the bill.

[7] Of course, if in fact the employee uses the vehicle for personal purposes in violation of the particular type of written policy statement, then the employee has additional gross income.

[8] This restriction, which makes this rule inapplicable to officers or one-percent owners, applies for substantiation purposes under the conference agreement. The treatment of commuting use of vehicles by such persons for valuation purposes is to be determined separately under Treasury regulations. No inference is intended, on the basis of the exclusion of officers and one-percent owners from eligibility under this substantiation rule, as to the treatment of commuting use of vehicles by such persons under valuation rules prescribed by Treasury regulations.

[9] In the case of a vehicle, the information required to be requested on the tax return relates to mileage (total, business, commuting, and other personal), percentage of business use, date placed in service, use of other vehicles and after-work use, whether the taxpayer has evidence to support the business use claimed on the return, and whether or not the evidence is written. In the case of other listed property subject to the section 274(d) rules, information should be requested in connection with appropriate tax forms or schedules as to type of property (e.g., yacht, computer, airplane, etc.), percentage of business use, whether the taxpayer has written evidence to support the business use claimed on the return, and whether or not the evidence is written. Under the conference agreement, the Internal Revenue Service is not required to request on returns the specific question relating to computers set forth as question 2 on page 10 of the committee report on the House Bill.

[10] This January 1, 1986 effective date applies only to the extent that use of listed property was first made subject to the substantiation standards of section 274(d) by the 1984 Act. Deductions for ex-use of such listed property is not subject to the special substantiation standards under section 274(d).

The tax return information (described above) must be requested on returns for taxable years beginning in 1985 (i.e., in the case of most individuals, returns which must be filed by April 15, 1986.)

3. Repeal of regulations

Present law

The Internal Revenue Service has issued temporary regulations implementing the recordkeeping provisions of section 179(b) of the 1984 Act.

House bill

The House bill repeals all Treasury regulations (temporary or proposed) issued prior to the enactment of this House bill that carry out the amendments made by section 179(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984. Thus, such regulations issued to implement the changes to section 274(d) made by that act, particularly the inclusion in that section of the word "contemporaneous," are revoked.[11] In addition, any regulations relating to the return preparer provision and the special negligence penalty (described above) are revoked.[12] These revoked regulations are to have no force and effect whatsoever.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. Thus, the conference agreement provides that regulations issued to carry out the amendments made by paragraphs (1)(C), (2), and (3) of section 179(b) of the 1984 Act shall have no force and effect.

B. Repeal of Provisions Relating to Return Preparers (sec. 1(b) of the House bill and sec. 1(c) of the Senate amendment)

Present law

Return preparers must advise taxpayers of the substantiation requirements under section 274(d) and obtain written confirmation that those requirements have been met (Code section 6695(b)).

House bill

The House bill repeals this provision, effective as if it had never been enacted.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. Repeal of Special Negligence Penalty (sec. 1(b) of the House bill and sec. 1(c) of the Senate amendment)

Present law

A special no-fault negligence penalty (Code sec. 6653(h)) applies to the portion of any understatement of tax attributable to failure to meet the substantiation requirements to section 274(d).

House bill

The House bill repeals this special negligence penalty, effective as if it had never been enacted.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conference agreement provides that the Internal Revenue Code shall be applied and administered as if this special negligence penalty had never been enacted.

The conferees believe that repealing this special negligence penalty is needed to restore to the Internal Revenue Service and the courts discretion not to impose the negligence penalty for minor, inadvertent recordkeeping or computational errors. The conferees emphasize, however, that the regular negligence and fraud penalties will continue to be applicable if a taxpayer claims tax benefits that cannot be supported. The conferees are concerned that these regular negligence and fraud penalties have not been applied by the Internal Revenue Service or the courts in a substantial number of instances where their application would be fully justified.

In one Tax Court case, for example, the taxpayer had kept detailed mileage records, required by his employer for reimbursement purposes, that indicated that his business use was approximately five percent of total use. On his tax return, the taxpayer claimed 70 percent business use, with no records to justify this claim. The Tax Court properly allowed only five percent business use. The Court did not, however, impose a negligence or fraud penalty. The conferees believe that, in a case like this one, the regular negligence penalty should certainly be imposed, and that careful consideration should be given to imposing the civil fraud penalty.

In another Tax Court Case, the taxpayer had kept detailed records so that he could be reimbursed by his employer, but claimed on his tax return approximately 35,000 miles of business use beyond what his records demonstrated, without any justification. No negligence penalty was imposed. In another case, the taxpayer produced a diary purporting to justify the claimed deductions. The Tax Court called the diary a "fabrication" and said that the taxpayer "was not telling the truth." The Court still permitted him a deduction, and did not impose the regular negligence or civil fraud penalty. Finally, another taxpayer apparently claimed a deduction for business mileage that exceeded the total mileage shown on his odometer, but the Tax Court did not impose a negligence or civil fraud penalty.

These cases indicate that the regular negligence and civil fraud penalties are not being administered by either the Internal Revenue Service or the courts in the manner that the Congress intended when it initially enacted these penalties. While minor, inadvertent recordkeeping or computational errors should not lead to the imposition of a substantial penalty, the conferees believe that it is vital to the integrity of the tax system that honest taxpayers know that others who claim tax benefits far in excess of what can be justified will be subject to the negligence and fraud penalties.

D. Exceptions From Section 274(d) Rules and Exclusion From Income for Certain Vehicles (sec. 2(b) of the House bill and sec. 2 of the Senate amendment)

Present law

Substantiation rules

Temporary Treasury regulations provided that, except for vehicles used for commuting, vehicles of a type ordinarily not susceptible to personal use do not constitute listed property to which the section 274(d) substantiation requirements apply. The regulations cited, as examples of such vehicles that are not susceptible to personal use, trucks specially designed for specific business purposes (such as refrigerated delivery trucks), special-purposes farm vehicles (such as tractors and combines), cement mixers, and forklifts.

Income inclusion

The fair market value of an employer-provided fringe benefit, such as personal use by an employee of an employer-provided vehicle, is included in the employee's gross income, and in wages for purposes of withholding and FICA, FUTA, and RRTA taxes, unless excluded under a specific statutory provision of the Code (secs. 61(a)(1), 3121(a), 3231(e), 3306(b), 3401(a)).

House bill

Substantiation rules

The House bill exempts from the section 274(d) substantiation rules (as modified by the bill) any vehicle that, by reason of its nature, is not likely to be used more than a de minimis amount for personal purposes. This provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985; thus, for 1985 the pre-1984 Act substantiation rules continue to apply with respect to such vehicles.

The committee report on the House bill lists the following vehicles as examples of vehicles exempted under the bill from the section 274(d) substantiation rules: (a) clearly marked police and fire vehicles (as described in the report); (b) delivery trucks with seating only for the driver, or only for the driver plus a folding jump seat; (c) flatbed trucks; (d) any vehicle designed to carry cargo with a loaded gross vehicle weight over 14,000 pounds; (e) passenger buses used as such with a capcity of at least 20 passengers; (f) ambulances used as such or hearses used as such; (g) bucket trucks ("cherry pickers"); (h) cranes and derricks; (i) forklifts; (j) cement mixers; (k) dump trucks (including garbage trucks); (l) refrigerated trucks; (m) tractors; and (n) combines.

The report on the House bill also states that the committee recognizes that it may not have developed an exhaustive list of vehicles not susceptible to personal use. Therefore, the report states, the committee intends that the Internal Revenue Service is to expand this list through either regulations or revenue rulings to include any vehicles not included in the listing in the report that are appropriate for listing because by their nature it is highly unlikely that they will be used more than a very minimal amount for personal purposes.

penses or items that were subject to the section 274(d) substantiation standards prior to the 1984 Act (such as use of an automobile for travel away from home or use of a yacht that is an entertainment, recreation, or amusement facility) remain subject to the section 274(d) substantiation standards for all taxable years ending after December 31, 1962.

[11] Also, the provisions of the temporary regulations that prohibit an employer from including the entire value of the use of an automobile in the income of certain employees are revoked. Thus, an employer is permitted to charge the entire value of an employer-provided car to an employee as income and wages (for income tax, FICA, FUTA, and RRTA withholding purposes). The employer may then reimburse the employee for the business use of the car, or the employee may claim a deduction on the employee's income tax return for the business use of the car.

[12] The bill only revokes such regulations (issued prior to enactment) carrying out such amendments made by sections 179(b)(1)(C), (2), and (3) of the 1984 Act. Thus, the bill does not revoke any other regulations, such as regulations issued under sections 61 and 132 (relating to valuation).

The report also states that the committee did not generally exempt from the section 274(d) substantiation rules all pickup trucks and vans, because these vehicles can easily be used for personal purposes. Some taxpayers purchase these vehicles as substitutes for passenger sedans, and use them predominantly (or entirely) for personal purposes. On the other hand, however, the committee report recognized that this is not applicable to all vans. For example, a van that has only a front bench for seating, in which permanent shelving [13] has been installed, that constantly carries merchandise, and that has been specially painted with advertising or the company's name, is a vehicle not susceptible to personal use.

Income inclusion

The committee report on the House bill states that it is appropriate for Treasury regulations to provide that under certain conditions all use by an employee of any employer-provided vehicle that is exempted under the House bill from the section 274(d) substantiation rules (see above) is excluded, as a working condition fringe benefit (sec. 132(a)(3)),[14] from the employee's gross income, and from wages (and, where appropriate, from the benefit base) for purposes of FICA, FUTA, and RRTA taxes. Such exclusions pursuant to Treasury regulations are to be effective as of January 1, 1985.

Senate amendment

Substantiation rules

The Senate amendment provides that the following vehicles are exempt from the section 274(d) substantiation rules (as modified by the amendment), and that any commuting or other personal use of such exempted vehicles is excluded from the user's gross income, and from wages (and, where appropriate, from the benefit base) for purposes of FICA, FUTA, and RRTA taxes, effective January 1, 1985:

(a) Vehicles required to be used as an integral part of the trade or business of an individual or of the employer (such as calling on customers or clients, making deliveries, or visiting job sites), so long as use in the trade or business is at least 75 percent of the vehicle's total use;

(b) Vehicles used by an employee for commuting, where the commuting is for a bona fide business purpose, where the employer does not permit the employee to make other personal use of the vehicle (other than de minimis use), and where use in the trade or business of the employer is at least 75 percent of total use; and

(c) Vehicles used by a governmental unit for police or other law enforcement purposes and vehicles used as an ambulance.

Income inclusion

The Senate amendment provides that any commuting or other personal use of such exempted vehicles (described above) is excluded from the user's gross income, and from wages (and, where appropriate, from the benefit base) for purposes of FICA, FUTA, and RRTA taxes, effective January 1, 1985.

ITC and depreciation caps

The Senate amendment provides that police and law enforcement vehicles and ambulances placed in service after June 18, 1984 are exempt from the investment tax credit and depreciation limitations set forth in section 280F.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the following modifications.

The conferees intend that school buses (as defined in Code section 4221(d)(7)(C)), qualified specialized utility repair trucks, and qualified moving vans, in addition to the list above (items (a) through (n) in the description of the House bill), are also to be examples of vehicles that, by reason of their nature, are not likely to be used more than a de minimis amount for personal purposes.

The term "qualified specialized utility repair trucks" means trucks (not including vans or pickup trucks) specifically designed and used to carry heavy tools, testing equipment, or parts where (1) the shelves, racks, or other permanent interior construction which has been installed to carry and store such heavy items is such that it is unlikely that the truck will be used more than a very minimal amount for personal purposes [15] and (2) the employer requires the employee to drive the truck home in order to be able to respond in emergency situations for purposes of restoring or maintaining electricity, gas, telephone, water, sewer, or steam utility services.

The term "qualified moving vans" means vans used by professional moving companies in the trade or business of moving household or business goods where no personal use of the van is allowed other than for travel to and from a move site (or for de minimis use), where personal use for travel to and from a move site is an irregular practice (i.e., not more than five times a month on average), and where personal use is limited to situations in which it is more convenient to the employer, because of the location of the employee's residence, for the van not to be returned to the employer's business location.

Also, the conferees agreed that the Treasury Department has authority to issue regulations exempting from the section 274(d) substantiation rules, and from inclusion in income and wages, officially authorized uses of unmarked vehicles by law enforcement officers. To qualify for this exemption, the personal use must be authorized by the Federal, State, county, or local governmental agency or department that owns or leases the vehicle and employs the officer, and must be for law-enforcement functions such as undercover work or reporting directly from home to a stakeout or surveillance site, or to an emergency situation. Use of an unmarked vehicle for vacation or recreation trips cannot qualify as an authorized use. The term "law enforcement officer" means an individual who is employed on a full-time basis by a governmental unit that is responsible for the prevention or investigation of crime involving injury to persons or property, who is authorized by law to carry firearms and execute search warrants and also to make arrests (other than merely a citizen arrest), and who regularly carries firearms (except when it is not possible to do this because of the requirements of undercover work). The term "law enforcement officer" does not include Internal Revenue Service special agents.

The conference agreement also provides that if, for example, a municipal government ordinance requires that police officers driving clearly marked police cars who are on duty at all times must take the vehicle home when the employee is not on his or her regular shift, and prohibits any personal use (except for this commuting use) of the vehicle outside the city (i.e., outside the limit of the officer's arrest powers), then all use of the vehicle could be considered in such regulations as an excludable working condition fringe.

E. Withholding Election (sec. 3 of the House bill)

Present law

As authorized under the 1984 Act, temporary Treasury regulations have provided for withholding (or payment) of income and employment taxes with respect to taxable noncash fringe benefits, such as an employee's personal use of an employer-provided vehicle, on a quarterly basis (Code sec. 3501(b)).

House bill

The House bill provides that an employer may elect not to deduct and withhold income taxes with respect to the noncash fringe benefit attributable to an employee's personal use of a highway motor vehicle provided by the employer. An employer making this election must so notify the employee (at such time and in such manner as provided in Treasury regulations) and must include the fair market value of the benefit on the Form W-2 furnished to the employee. An electing employer must still withhold social security (or railroad retirement) taxes. This provision is effective as of January 1, 1985.

The committee report on the House bill states that the committee intends that the regulations are to be revised to allow an employer to elect, for income and employment tax purposes, to treat taxable fringe benefits (including personal use of employer-provided automobiles) as paid on a pay period, quarterly, semi-annual, or annual basis.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

F. Limitations on Investment Tax Credit and Depreciation for Automobiles (sec. 4 of the House bill)

Present law

The 1984 Act generally imposed limitations on the amount of investment tax credit and annual depreciation deductions that are allowed for an automobile placed in service or leased by the taxpayer after June 18, 1984.

For an automobile placed in service in 1984, (1) the investment tax credit is limited to $1,000; (2) depreciation in the first taxable year the automobile is placed in service is limited to $4,000; and (3) depreciation in any subsequent taxable year is limited to $6,000. For years after 1984, the limits are adjusted for inflation, as measured by the percentage growth of the automobile component of the Consumer Price Index for all Urban Consumers between October of the preceding year and October, 1983. The adjusted limits for any year apply only to automobiles placed in service in that year.

House bill

The limits on the amount of investment tax credit and annual depreciation deductions that may be claimed with respect to an automobile are reduced as follows under the House bill: (1) the investment tax credit is limited to $675; (2) depreciation in the first taxable year tne automobile is placed in service is limited to $3,600 and (3) depreciation in any subsequent taxable year is limited to $5,400. For years after 1985, the reduced limits are indexed for inflation, as measured by the percentage growth of the automobile component of the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers between October of the preceding year and October, 1984. Adjustments for inflation are otherwise determined as under present law. The committee report states that the committee intends that the Secretary of the Treasury prescribe all limits adjusted for inflation.

The reduced limits are generally effective for property placed in service or leased by the taxpayer after April 2, 1985. However, property acquired by the taxpayer pursuant to a binding contract in effect on April 1, 1985, and at all times thereafter, is not subject to the reduced limits if it is placed in service before August 1, 1985; and property of which the taxpayer is the lessee pursuant to a binding contract in effect on April 1, 1985, and all times thereafter, is not subject to the reduced limits if the taxpayer first uses the property under the lease before August 1, 1985.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with three modifications: (1) depreciation in the first taxable year is limited to $3,200; (2) depreciation in any subsequent taxable year is limited to $4,800; and (3) the reduced limits on the investment credit and depreciation are indexed for inflation until 1989. For automobiles placed in service in any year after 1988, the reduced limits are adjusted for the percentage increase of the automobile component of the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers between October of the preceding year and October, 1987. The conferees made these changes to the House bill to ensure that the conference agreement is revenue neutral.

G. New Regulations (sec. 5 of the House bill)

Present law

The Treasury Department has the authority to issue regulations under the Internal Revenue Code.

House bill

The House bill requires that the Treasury Department issue regulations to carry out the provisions of the House bill not later than October 1, 1985.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. Because the conferees have delayed applicability of the section 274(d) substantiation rules to local travel, computers, etc., until January 1, 1986, the conferees believe that requiring regulations to be issued by October 1, 1985, will provide taxpayers with sufficient time to prepare to meet these requirements.

UNITED STATES-ISRAEL FREE TRADE AREA IMPLEMENTATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2268) to approve and implement the Free Trade Area Agreement between the United States and Israel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 2268, presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the United States-Israel Free Trade Area Agreement, signed on April 22, provides for the elimination of duties on all products traded between the two countries by January 1, 1995. It also limits Israel's use of nontariff trade restrictions and contains a commitment by Israel to eliminate its export subsidies on industrial goods and processed agricultural products.

This is the first free trade area entered into by the United States with any country. It is consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and contains strict rules of origin to ensure that only products of the United States and Israel receive the benefits of duty free treatment.

Title IV of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 authorized the agreement with Israel and contains most of the provisions of U.S. law necessary for its administration. The main purpose of H.R. 2268 is to approve the agreement and provide authority the President presently does not have to proclaim the reductions and elimination of U.S. duties necessary to create the free trade area within 10 years. Under this bill, no reduction in current tariff protection can take place prior to duty elimination on January 1, 1995, on the articles which the U.S. International Trade Commission found to be most import sensitive. Any duty reductions on these items prior to that date would require Congress to grant further legislative authority.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means has conducted a thorough review of the agreement and its implementation. U.S. exporters will benefit from elimination of high tariffs and the European preferential advantage in the Israeli market. Only 10 percent of U.S. imports from Israel currently dutiable will be affected, and existing import relief and unfair trade practice remedies will remain in place to protect domestic industries.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 2268.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want first of all to offer congratulations to our distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] who expeditiously moved this legislation along.

I want to salute simultaneously the distinguished gentleman from Florida who is our chairman of the Trade Subcommittee, and to congratulate all of the members of the committee for what is in my estimation a very forward looking, forward moving development in the area of trade.

At a time when, unfortunately, there are rumblings of protectionism worldwide and when there are indications that some nations have not yet understood the importance to consumers and to world commerce and man's material welfare, of free trade, this pioneering initiative is a giant step forward, even though the dollar volume that is involved in trade between Israel and the United States may be, relatively speaking, inconsequential. It is this kind of example, this kind of commitment, that I would hope, as we discuss further trade issues, we might be able to see replicated time and time again. I think it is important also for Americans to realize that from the standpoint of what is already duty-free coming into the United States from Israel it is about 90 percent of Israeli exports; whereas our duty-free exports to the State of Israel constitute only about 35 to 40 percent.

This is something that in the trade area is not onesided, it is beneficial to this country as it will prove to be beneficial to the State of Israel.

I would urge all of our colleagues to support this resolution. It represents a significant bipartisan effort in the direction of not only improved economic conditions but I think amity and comity throughout the world.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I just merely would like to compliment both gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI and Mr. CRANE], and say that I am in strong support of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I offer my support of this legislation designed to approve the Free Trade Area Agreement between our country and Israel. This effort is a step in the right direction in promoting free trade around the world. This agreement is long overdue, and I encourage my colleagues to support this important legislation.

This act approves and implements the agreement on the establishment of a free trade area between the United States and Israel. The act before us would strengthen economic relations between the United States and Israel for the mutual benefit of both countries. It would also foster the growth of free trade between our two great nations through the removal of trade barriers. This effort is clearly mutually beneficial to the economic well-being of our two countries.

Given America's strong support of Israel and the economic difficulties that small country has experienced, it is clearly in America's interest to help the economy of that nation. We should also remember that by helping Israel we are also helping ourselves. Many U.S. products exported to Israel will also enter under reduced tariffs. Current projections reveal that the United States will, in the long run, benefit greatly from this new program.

This free trade area approach in our dealings with Israel is a pilot case which can be used with other nations. I commend the administration for its support of this effort and for its commitment to encouraging free trade with other nations around the world.

I call upon my colleagues to offer their support of this worthwhile legislation.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. SAM GIBBONS, who has done an outstanding job not only on this legislation but on other legislation that has been before him as well.

Mr. GIBBONS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the chairman; I appreciate those kind remarks, and I hope I deserve them. I will try to deserve them, anyway.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important piece of legislation, not because of any precedent that it sets, but because of the very nature of it.

As Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI pointed out, this is the first time that any nation has entered into a free trade arrangement with the United States of America. If you look at it from an Israeli point of view it is really a big step. Most of their goods already enter the United States free of duty. In fact, the percentage of Israeli goods that enter this country subject to any duty are only one-half of 1 percent of all the goods that we import. But if you look at it from an Israeli point of view, what is happening on their side, massive changes will take place. Their economy will for the first time have to compete head on with the American economy. Their economy is conducted by 3½ million people in a very hostile environment, and it will have to make certain disciplinary changes that would be very tough for any economy to take.

Most of their economy has been protected from American competition by very high tariff barriers and it is to the wisdom of the leaders in Israel that I wish to pay tribute. They had to decide what was best for Israel and it is tough medicine.

Our competition in their economy will be very tough for them. In most of their industry, most of their agriculture has been protected for generations behind high tariff barriers. They are going to give up many of their subsidy programs that have allowed them to direct their courses of action and their products coming into our market will be subject to all the countervailing and any dumping provisions of our law.

So it is historic moment for both countries, much more historic for Israel than it is for the United States. I do not want anyone to think that this is just something that we are doing for Israel. During the preliminary negotiations on this package, I met with many of the Arab leaders, and I assured each one of them that if they wanted to enter into this kind of arrangement with the United States, I could not assure them of success, but I would introduce legislation for them and let them come in here and see what they can do trying to persuade the American Congress and the American economy that they were entitled to that same kind of duty free treatment.

So far I have not had any takers on that offer, but the offer still stands. I hope that we can build through this legislation a greater working arrangement with the people of this area of the world, particularly with Israel.

Perhaps it will lead to better working relationships with its neighbors out of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to commend certain portions of American industry and agriculture which will be challenged by this. We know that the Israelis are fierce competitors and are good producers of certain products. It took courage on the part of some American industries to agree to what has been agreed to here. But this is a historic moment.

Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to the bipartisan nature of this legislation. It is supported equally by both parties in this Congress and by the White House. It is truly one of those things which we have all come together on.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having been allowed to play a part in that coming-together.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE], a great statesman on our committee and one of the most hard-working Members and senior Member of his delegation.

Mr. MOORE. I thank our distinguished ranking member of the Trade Subcommittee for this time.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I think it is important that we understand what we are doing here and why. There are two reasons. The first reason is, of course, we are trying to help a good friend and ally, Israel. Israel is having a very difficult time, economically speaking. This action will help her help herself by expanding her economy in the area of free trade.

If a country is strong economically she can have a strong defense, she can take care of herself better, and there will be, perhaps, less aid needed from the United States in years to come. This is also a good way to reward a good friend and ally, a very strong democracy in a part of the world that always seems to be in some sort of chaos. There is one steady partner there, and that is Israel.

But there is a second reason. It also helps the United States and helps us in a very great way.

Right now our greatest trade competitor besides Japan; is the European Economic Community. They have had this arrangement with Israel now for a decade, which means anything made or grown in the European Economic Community can be sold more competitively than we can sell it to Israel.

So what we are doing here is finally giving the United States and our own producers the same benefits that the Europeans have been having for a decade in dealing with Israel.

We have been running the greatest trade deficit in the history of this country. This is a way to begin to reverse that. We have a positive balance of trade with Israel. This gives us the opportunity to open up new trade areas with them, sell them new products we cannot sell now because we do not have this agreement we are now implementing through this bill.

So I conclude by saying to my colleagues, there are two great reasons for supporting this legislation: First, it helps a good friend and ally; and second, it helps us.

We do not lose anything by this. We all gain. I believe it is most important that we pass it.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to my good friend the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, although the substance of this particular piece of legislation is important, I also want to underscore the process by which we arrived here today, and that I want to extend my compliments to the full committee chairman, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, and the subcommittee chairman, Mr. GIBBONS, along with the ranking members from my side of the aisle in that this end product is important for its substance, but I would commend it to the rest of my colleagues to examine the way in which we arrived at this position, because the process I think sometimes is as important as the substance.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I want to highlight one aspect of the free trade area H.R. 2268 would implement because it is of extreme importance to many of my constituents. That, Mr. Speaker, is the treatment of import-sensitive commodities under this bill.

Under H.R. 2268, duties on products designated by the International Trade Commission as import-sensitive are frozen until 1995. It is understood that Presidential efforts to eliminate or modify duties on these products before 1995 require the President to first obtain the International Trade Commission's advice on whether these products remain import sensitive; as part of the Commission's reexamination of these products' sensitivity, the Commission must give the affected industries an opportunity to present information on their status. Further, the President must secure from the Congress new authority to reduce duties before he can actually do so on these particular products during the 5 years preceding January 1, 1995.

Mr. Speaker, this approach to the International Trade Commission's handling of import-sensitive items is extremely important to my constituents. It is consistent with certain understandings I developed with former Ambassador William Brock last year, and its inclusion in the implementation of this free trade area with Israel is one of several reasons I find the H.R. 2268 to be acceptable.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my hard-working and distinguished, knowledgeable colleague from the great State of Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important epochal agreement. It has been described well by previous speakers, and I endorse each of their statements as being important in describing what the agreement is going to do and what the reasons for putting the agreement forth in the first place were, and what the benefits are going to be to both of the countries involved.

I think what is more important is to talk a little bit about the process. The agreement did not spring full-blown from the head of the committee yesterday and suddenly appear on the Suspension Calendar. It has been years in negotiation between the two governments.

Last year, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Trade Subcommittee, began holding hearings. We included a trip to Israel. We consulted among ourselves, we passed a trade bill last fall which was signed by the President. As a result of that bill, the President and the executive department produced a negotiated agreement signed by both countries, and finally that agreement is being ratified by the bill that is before us today.

Under the procedures of the Trade Act of 1974 that bill is unamendable. For that reason, partly, the committee put it on the suspense calendar, because it could not be amended in any case, and we could avoid some hours of debate which are unnecessary because the bill has universal acclamation in both countries.

I think one of the most important reasons why we passed this bill was because the European Community had executed prior to our agreement a free trade agreement with the State of Israel, and had we not done this and laid this bill before us, American goods would have been at a disadvantage to European goods in the Israeli market; which is not a large market, but it is a sophisticated, high-grade market.

One other point I would like to make is that Israel is not a low-wage competitor. It is a highly industrialized state that pays relatively high wages in competition with the rest of the world, and it is one with which we trade to our mutual advantage without a great deal of bitterness, without a great deal of grievance on either side.

I hope the bill will be promptly passed.

Mr. Speaker, the agreement that we are implementing today, through passage of H.R. 2268, is the first of its kind that the United States has undertaken. It establishes a free trade zone between the United States and the State of Israel and, when fully in effect, will eliminate nontariff barriers and duties on all products traded between our two countries. The agreement is the result of months of negotiations between the two governments, with the close consultation of the Congress, and promises to be a model for trade expansion and facilitation now and in the future.

All commercial trade between the United States and Israel will be covered by the agreement. Many products traded between the two countries already enjoy duty-free treatment under the generalized system of preferences [GSP] because rates of duty are currently bound at zero as a result of earlier multilateral agreements. In 1982, the base year for this negotiation, about 90 percent of Israeli imports were duty free and about 35 percent of U.S. exports to Israel were also free of duties.

Therefore, the part of the negotiation involving tariff reductions covered only a fraction of overall trade, with the United States having the most to gain when all products become duty free. Still, there were some products on both sides which were felt to be potentially sensitive. Duty-free treatment for these products will be phased in under three separate staging arrangements until January 1, 1995.

The agreement also addresses some important nontariff issues. For example, Israel will give up any existing subsidy practices within 6 years and will not implement new ones. Furthermore, the conditions under which future Government help may be given to infant industries or because of balance-of-payments reasons are severely limited. The agreement provides for strict rules-of-origin requirements and prohibits restrictive import licensing schemes. However, import restrictions other than customs duties may be maintained for agriculture policy consideration, such as to enforce domestic price supports. Finally, the agreement establishes preferential Government procurement guidelines between the two countries by lowering from $156,000 to $50,000 the threshold for waiving "Buy America" restrictions.

This historic agreement reinforces the longstanding bilateral relationship and mutual friendship between the United States and Israel. It brings commercial trade between us to the highest possible level of preferential treatment.

Prior to this agreement, the European Community had forged ahead of us with a free trade agreement with Israel and as a result would have had an advantage in that market when its agreement was fully effective. Now we will be on equal footing in technical terms with the EC, and because of our traditional close ties with Israel the U.S. position should be further enhanced in practice.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this bill and the agreement it implements. I hope it will serve as an example for other such trade liberalizing efforts on either a bilateral or multilateral basis, in the future. It is a step forward at a time when there is shortsightedness and tremendous pressure to move backward.

Mr. Speaker, I urge unanimous approval of H.R. 2268.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may consume to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE], who also has invested much time and labor on behalf of this legislation.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, at a time when the world's commitment to free trade is undergoing a period of testing and many countries are waivering in their resolve to move forward toward the goal of a free global marketplace, I believe that our support today for a United States-Israeli Free Trade Agreement will again underscore America's commitment to free trade principles. Indeed, it is my hope that this historic agreement will serve as an example of the mutual benefits which nations can derive from unrestricted trade. By removing the last vestiges of trade barriers, the United States and Israel stand to share in the economic progress that flows from a free and fair exchange of goods across national borders. As U.S. exports find new markets in Israel, Americans will find new opportunities in export-related jobs and help reduce the widening U.S. trade deficit. Likewise, Israel will continue to develop markets for its products in the United States and benefit from expanded economic ties to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the United States-Israeli Free Trade Agreement as a model for future agreements with our trading partners. As the first comprehensive, reciprocal Free Trade Agreement concluded by the United States, I believe it will prove to be an unparalleled success and should set the stage for further bilateral agreements. Israel and the United States have from their inceptions served as enviable examples, of freedom and democracy in a world where these ideals are continually threatened. By taking the unprecedented step toward a Free Trade Agreement, our two nations can also show the world that free trade benefits everyone and likewise serves as an example to those countries who are tempted to forestall the growth of an open world market. I am proud therefore to have participated in the development of this agreement and look forward to working on similar agreements in the near future.

I would also like to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] and the chairman of the full committee [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for their efforts in this direction.

Mr. Speaker, may I further state that this agreement goes far beyond the paper and the efforts that are made between Israel and the United States. In my opinion, the world order of trade is not functioning as it should and this historic document we work on today could be a landmark piece of legislation, setting the tone for agreements between other nations, and eventually supplanting the world order of trade as we know it today.

We know we are under attack by nations dumping and using our relatively open market as a way of lessening their domestic unemployment. If we are successful in this type of agreement and use this as a base upon which to build, we can open the world markets and have a freer world trading order and bring more prosperity, not only to the U.S. market, but share that prosperity with the rest of the world.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my good friend and mentor, the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the distinguished committee chairman and the subcommittee chairman, the ranking minority members, particularly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] for bringing this measure to the floor at this time, a time when Israel sorely needs some help with their economy.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2268, legislation to approve and implement the Free Trade Area Agreement between the United States and Israel. The United States and Israel approved this agreement on April 22, 1985, and under the terms of the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984, that agreement must be approved by Congress. H.R. 2268 provides that congressional approval.

Under the terms of the agreement reached between the two nations, rates of duties on products traded between the United States and Israel will be eliminated by January 1, 1995, thus estabishing a bilateral free trade area as permitted under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Mr. Speaker, as the ranking Republican on the Foreign Affairs Committee Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, I have had the opportunity to follow closely the difficult steps that Israel is taking to get its troubled economy back on track. These are not easy undertakings, from either an economic or political perspective. However, the Israeli Government, labor, and the business sector have worked together to implement wage and price freezes, budget cuts, subsidy reductions, and strict budgetary guidelines concerning expenditures. Within this context, the establishment of a free trade area will be a significant approach to aid Israel's economy. For the United States, the relatively high tariff on close to one-half of American exports and the competitive disadvantage that the United States faces vis-a-vis the duty-free entry of European Community products will be eliminated.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 2268, so that we may profit from the expanded market opportunities between the United States and Israel that this measure will permit.

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2268, legislation which approves and implements a free trade arrangement between the United States and Israel.

Some concern has been voiced about the impact the agreement may have on certain American industries. I want to assure my colleagues that the Ways and Means Committee has carefully considered this aspect. I am convinced that the United States stands to gain much more from free access to the Israeli marketplace than any possible disadvantage certain U.S. manufacturers may face. For example, approximately 90 percent of Israeli goods already enter our country duty free, whereas close to one-half of American products encounter tariffs in Israel.

An important component of this agreement is the parity it will provide U.S. manufacturers. Israel has entered into a free trade arrangement with the European Community. Since nearly 70 percent of U.S. industrial exports to Israel compete directly with goods from these EC nations, H.R. 2268 will assure even footing for domestic manufactures.

When then Ambassador Brock and Ariel Sharon signed the free trade agreement on April 22, the President noted that in his discussions with Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres last fall, the free trade area legislation was agreed to be "instrumental in helping Israel put its economy back on the foundation of vigorous, self-sustaining growth."

In negotiating this country's first reciprocal free trade agreement, I believe we have conveyed a clear message to our trading partners that unlimited access to the U.S. market is possible with a positive attitude toward trade negotiations, such as Israel has maintained.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2268 and yield back the balance of my time.●

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2268, to approve and implement the Free Trade Area Agreement between the United States and Israel. I was pleased when the authorization legislation received such overwhelming support last year and I am optimistic about the chances of success for this legislation.

The primary purpose of this act is to strengthen and develop economic relations between the United States and Israel through the establishment of a free trade zone. I want to emphasize that the United States and Israel Free Trade Area Implementation Act is mutually advantageous. The agreement will bolster trade relations and provide each country with significant economic benefits.

Not only is this legislation beneficial from an economic standpoint, but it is good foreign policy as well. Israel—the only democracy in the Middle East—is a vital ally to the United States. We are all aware of the severity of Israel's exports necessary to ensure her economic growth and well-being.

It is worth noting that the European Community will have lifted all trade duties with Israel by 1989. The United States will be at a distinct trade disadvantage if we do not follow suit. I am convinced that the establishment of the Free Trade Area Agreement between the United States and Israel will have an immediate positive effect on the economies of both nations.

In sum, this legislation will give a boost to the economies of both countries while making a significant contribution to the preservation of democracy in the Middle East. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this important legislative initiative.●

● Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to lend my support to H.R. 2268, the United States-Israel Free Trade Area Implementation Act.

I strongly believe that a free trade area with Israel will be in the economic and security interests of both the United States and Israel. Such an agreement will allow U.S. exporters to maintain and even increase their current 20-percent share of the Israeli import market, thereby generating additional jobs for Americans.

A free trade area also will be of immense value to Israel by ensuring the kind of duty-free access to the U.S. market that Israel needs in order to increase her exports and restructure her economy. A free trade area also will help Israel continue to develop her high technology industry, in which she holds a comparative advantage.

Israel is America's closest ally in the Middle East, sharing our commitment to freedom and democracy, and American opposition to Soviet expansion. An economically strong Israel is better able to defend itself and thus protect both its own and U.S. interests.

This historic agreement, the first of its kind with any nation, will provide American exporters with duty-free access to an $8 billion market in which they are currently disadvantaged because of high duties and a tariff disparity resulting from a trade agreement between the European Economic Community and Israel.

The establishment of a free trade area between the United States and Israel will be instrumental in reaffirming and strengthening the common bonds we share with our only democratic ally in the Middle East, Israel.●

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in enthusiastic support of H.R. 2268, legislation to establish a free trade zone between the United States and Israel, which commits both our governments to phase out duties on all products in bilateral trade within 10 years.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to vote for H.R. 5377, a bill which gave the President the authority to negotiate a free trade agreement with Israel. Last month, April 22, 1985, the President signed a free trade agreement with Israel, and this legislation, when approved by this House and the Senate, will enact the free trade area into law.

I am pleased to support this legislation for two major reasons. First, Israel is our most loyal ally in the Middle East, and our two countries commit a great deal of our resources to mutually beneficial trade. Yet, about one-half of U.S. goods are subject to Israeli tariffs, and though about 90 percent of Israeli products currently enter the United States duty-free, Israel will soon be graduated out of its current trade status under the new revision of the Generalized System of Preferences. It is clear that the respective economies of our two countries will benefit from passage of this legislation.

In addition to helping our good friend and trusted ally, I would hope that passage of this historic legislation would help relieve the pressure now felt by our allies from those who would advocate protectionist trade policies. This United States-Israel agreement is the first free trade agreement entered into the United States, and I hope that it is not the last. Free trade bolsters the economies of all nations involved, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure that both we and our trading partners are able to improve our economies, and our working relationships as a whole, through increased trade.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote for this important and timely legislation.●

● Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I fully support H.R. 2268, legislation to implement a free trade area agreement with the Government of Israel. It has been a year and a half since President Reagan and former Prime Minister Shamir agreed to begin negotiations on this precedent-setting proposal. The Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 authorized the President to conclude an agreement with Israel providing for the reduction or elimination of tariffs and nontariff barriers. In my view his negotiators have negotiated well for us. The agreement is a landmark in the history of U.S. trade policy and should be approved by this body without delay.

I am especially heartened to have an opportunity to vote on this bill because it will put the United States back in a position of leading the further expansion of world trade. Recently we have heard a high degree of inward-looking sentiment. I continue to believe it is a mistake for us to focus on protecting industries that can only be competitive at the expense of the taxpayers and consumers through quotas, tariffs, and subsidies.

The acceleration of our economic growth and that of the world depends on a continued reduction in tariff barriers. The law of comparative advantage tells us that economic welfare will be enhanced if each nation specializes in the production of items that it can produce, in relative terms, most efficiently. Restating this basic principle is a reminder of all that the United States and Israel have to gain from a free trade area.

In passing H.R. 2268 we will be eliminating uncertainty and allowing entrepreneurs producing for international trade to invest in plants and equipment and know that their efforts will not prove fruitless due to an unexpected trade barrier. Efficiency, quality, and price will be the main determinants of success in an environment with more jobs and more opportunities for everyone. Expanded economic activity will not occur without adjustments in certain less competitive sectors, but it is the Israelis' who have the most to lose in this respect. The risks to our economy are relatively small by comparision.

For example, about 90 percent of Israeli exports to the United States already enter the United States on a duty-free basis while 40 percent of U.S. exports to Israel are still covered by relatively high tariffs. The United States has a $400 million trade surplus with Israel even excluding military purchases. In cases where products were determined to be especially sensitive, duty-free treatment will be phased in, under three separate staging arrangements. Therefore, the part of the negotiation involving tariff reductions covered only a fraction of overall trade, with the United States having the most to gain when all products become duty-free.

Israel, on the other hand, is facing a severe economic crisis which includes the burden of high defense expenditures, a huge foreign debt and a crippling rate of inflation. Yet the people of Israel are prepared to face the unregulated competition of some of America's most accomplished traders. For Israel to embark on this experiment takes a great deal of courage that should be recognized.

The United States achieved significant concessions on a number of troublesome nontariff issues as well. The Israelis pledged to phase out all subsidy programs over the next 6 years. Market protections for infant industries or for balance of payments purposes are strictly limited by the agreement. Also U.S. exporters will no longer have to face burdensome import licensing requirements when doing business in Israel.

In short, a United States-Israel Free Trade Area will further the economic and political goals of both nations. Israel is America's closest ally in the Middle East, sharing our commitment to freedom and democracy and our opposition to Soviet encroachments in the area. Israeli consumers have already proven their preference for American exports. Through this bill, Israel will be able to increase its own exports, stengthen its economy, and decrease its dependence on foreign aid. In agreeing to accept this challenge in mutual cooperation, Israel joins the United States in setting an example the economic benefits of which will not go unnoticed by other forward-looking nations with which we trade.●

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COLEMAN of Texas). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2268.

The question was taken.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

COMMENDING PRESIDENT DUARTE AND PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS ON RECENT VACCINATION CAMPAIGN IN EL SALVADOR

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speakers, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 145) to commend President Jose Napoleon Duarte and the participating international humanitarian organizations for their compassion, vision, and leadership in carrying out the recent vaccination campaign in El Salvador, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 145

Whereas President Jose Napoleon Duarte has served the people of El Salvador with dedication, honor, and distinction during turbulent political times since his democratic election to office in 1984;

Whereas El Salvador's children, if unprotected, would be highly vulnerable to horrible, crippling diseases such as pertussis, tetanus, diphtheria, measles, and polio;

Whereas less than 20 percent of children in the developing world are immunized against these diseases and as a result 5,000,000 children die and an additional 5,000,000 are mentally or physically disabled each year;

Whereas in El Salvador, a comprehensive effort to immunize that nation's children has not occurred since 1975, thereby leaving a generation of children, approximately 900,000, exposed to life-threatening but preventable diseases;

Whereas beginning in February 1985, President Jose Napoleon Duarte initiated and coordinated a thorough, well-organized, and effective immunization program in El Salvador on three separate days (February 3, March 3, and April 21, 1985), thereby immunizing and protecting the lives of more than 300,000 Salvadoran children, with more to be innoculated during a comprehensive follow up campaign;

Whereas several organizations and agencies such as the United Nations Children's Fund, United States Agency for International Development, the Roman Catholic Church, Project Hope, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Rotary, the Pan-American Health Organization, and others, lent their financial support, expertise, and technical assistance, thereby contributing to the success of the vaccination campaign;

Whereas on each of those three days, this humanitarian project resulted in a near cease-fire so that more than 18,000 Salvadoran volunteers and medical staff could safely participate in the immunization program which took place at more than 2,000 sites throughout the country;

Whereas the United Nations Children's Fund, and the many other organizations leading the fight to save children, have embarked upon a campaign to immunize all the world's children by 1990; and

Whereas President Duarte's successful project in El Salvador will serve as a model for similarly constructed programs throughout the developing world so that the goal of worldwide child immunization may be achieved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That on the occasion of his May 1985 visit to the United States, the House of Representatives applauds President Jose Napolean Duarte and the Government of El Salvador and expresses its deep appreciation for his effective leadership in the campaign to immunize and protect the children of El Salvador.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time a I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 145, which commends President Duarte and the participating international humanitarian organizations for their compassion, vision, and leadership in carrying out the recent vaccination campaign in El Salvador.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution, sponsored by our friend from New Jersey, Congressman SMITH seeks to enhance international awareness on what has been a miraculous undertaking by President Duarte, UNICEF, PAHO, and the Agency for International Development: a major, national campaign to immunize the children of El Salvador.

Mr. Speaker, the American public and the rest of the international community are under the impression that U.S. policy in Central America is limited to military involvement. The recent success of this immunization campaign demonstrates that this is just not the case.

Through a coordinated effort by UNICEF, USAID and several humanitarian organizations, President Duarte spearheaded a national campaign which resulted in over 200,000 children being immunized against several deadly diseases including diphtheria, polio, and the measles. The last vaccination drive took place on April 20.

The Subcommittee on Human Rights and international organizations has been very active in promoting the child survival revolution by authorizing money for the child survival fund and by increasing our contributions to UNICEF. The amended text of the resolution, which was agreed to in the Foreign Affairs Committee, reflects the fact that the Pan American Health Organization rendered an invaluable service in implementing this national campaign.

Given that President Duarte is due to arrive in Washington within the month, I think congressional passage of this resolution would demonstrate our support for his valiant efforts to save the lives of hundreds of thousands of children. Further, it would send a message to the international community that the United States is committed to fostering humanitarian relief and social development in El Salvador.

Mr. Speaker, it is also important to note that the Catholic Church in El Salvador played a vital role in this campaign by negotiating a temporary cease-fire between the guerrillas and the Government so that thousands of children in the rural countryside of this war-torn nation could benefit from this program. I want to commend Congressman SMITH for his leadership in this area; he witnessed the last immunization drive in El Salvador and has been an outspoken leader in promoting the child survival revolution in the Congress. I strongly urge our colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I offer my support for this resolution commending President Jose Napoleon Duarte and the concerned international humanitarian organizations for their outstanding work in the Salvadoran vaccination campaign.

Earlier this year, President Duarte initiated a massive health program in El Salvador which immunized more than 300,000 Salvadoran children. A followup innoculation program will add thousands more to the list of children who will be protected against the ravages of the many diseases prevalent in that part of Central America. President Duarte effectively coordinated this effort with numerous international organizations including the U.N. Children's Fund, and others.

Because of the unprecedented success of this vaccination campaign, El Salvador's program will serve as a model for programs in the developing world.

Once again, President Duarte has shown his leadership and his deep interest in the welfare of his people. Through his efforts, future generations of Salvadoran children will live normal healthy lives. The world needs more leaders of President Duarte's stature. He had displayed leadership, energy and vision in his service to the people of El Salvador, and has moved boldly to bring peace to that war-torn nation.

I am certain that my colleagues will join me in offering our praises for President Duarte's noteworthy accomplishments both in the political sphere as well as in the area of improving the well-being of the Salvadoran people.

My colleagues, I am certain that you will join me in supporting House Resolution 145.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the principal sponsor of this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding time to me, and I appreciate the kind remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], the chairman of the subcommittee, as well as the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

Mr. Speaker, a couple of Sundays ago, on April 21, I went to El Salvador to observe and participate in a mass child immunization campaign organized and personally led by President Jose Napolean Duarte.

I was joined in El Salvador by Mark Tavlarides, staff director of the Subcommittee on Human Rights, a very professional and hard working member of the Foreign Affairs' Committee staff, and while in San Salvador, met up with many distinguished people including Dr. Albert Sabine, developer of the oral polio vaccine a quarter of a century ago.

House Resolution 145 recognizes and salutes President Duarte for his vision, compassion and leadership in leading this campaign. The resolution also commends numerous agencies and organizations for their crucial role in the success of the program.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is extremely important for this Congress to appropriately cite the dynamic leadership exhibited by President Duarte in the immunization program. It is estimated that up to 300,000 Salvadoran children were immunized or are in the process of being immunized and thereby protected from painful debilitating and even fatal diseases such as whooping cough, diphtheria, tetanus, measles, and polio. Significantly, tens of thousands more will be vaccinated in a follow up effort. It is clear, though, that without President Duarte's leadership, there would not have been an immunization campaign in El Salvador.

Mr. Speaker, the campaign was a model of good planning, effective management, and interagency cooperation. Key to the vaccine campaign's success was the participation by U.S. Agency for International Development UNICEF, PAHO, and several other agencies and organizations. I am very proud of our Government's contribution to this humanitarian effort. Very proud indeed. It underscores our commitment to the well-being and safety of the people of El Salvador, especially her children.

I would also like to point out to my colleagues that there are many individuals who are much deserving of praise including James Grant, Executive Director of UNICEF and a true champion of children, Dr. Benjamin Valdez, Minister of Health in El Salvador, and Dr. Carlyle Guerra De Macedo, Director of the Pan American Health Organization. These are just a few, there are obviously many others.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the Roman Catholic Church, in a further manifestation of its sacred mission to the world, put its full weight and resources behind the campaign and even mediated a cease-fire so the children living in contested areas of El Salvador could be immunized and thus protected.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the major obstacle to the immunization of all the world's children is not expense—it is relatively inexpensive—nor is it lack of interest on the part of volunteers and medical staff. Indeed, the El Salvador program benefited from more than 20 international and local organizations as well as more than 18,000 Salvadoran volunteers and medical staff.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, the chief problem lies in the lack of leadership at the highest echelons of governments. With proper leadership at the top, like in El Salvador, millions of children could be saved. It is so sad and regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that only 20 percent of the world's families are aware of and take advantage of the new low-cost immunizations which could protect their children. As a result, more than 5 million children die and a further 5 million more are mentally and physically disabled each year from these easily preventable diseases.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, President Duarte provided an inspiring example to the rest of the developing world, as to how to close the gap between available immunization services and children actually immunized in a country. In El Salvador, hundreds of thousands were in need of vaccines to protect them from these chronic diseases, and now many are protected. Despite the wartorn status of his country, President Duarte had the vision and courage to lead a nationwide effort to protect his country's children. We must encourage other leaders in the developing world to do likewise.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report to my colleagues that few people in El Salvador were unaware of the national immunization campaign. With President Duarte leading the project, radio stations, churches, banks, health groups, community based organizations, and schools all participated in the promotion, as well as, the implementation of the vaccine campaign. By establishing conveniently located vaccination points—over 2,000 in El Salvador—and by coordinating specific dates and times, President Duarte ensured that more parents would be aware of the immunization program.

Thus, thousands of El Salvadoran children were immunized and an overwhelming percentage of children returned to receive all three doses which are needed for these vaccinations to be effective. Mass innoculations were provided on February 3, March 3, and April 21.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that President Duarte's effort in El Salvador will serve as a model for similarly needed programs throughout the developing world. El Salvador is a success story, an inspiration and an example to be duplicated.

I would like to take this opportunity in closing to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and international organizations, Mr. YATRON, and ranking member, Mr. SOLOMON, for their strong support and origional cosponsorship of this resolution. I would also like to thank the distinguished chairman of the full Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. FASCELL, and ranking member, Mr. BROOMFIELD, for their support. Finally I would like to thank Mr. BARNES, chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs and ranking member Mr. LAGOMARSINO and all 67 House Members who cosponsored this resolution.

□ 1400

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the ranking minority member on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution, of which I am pleased to be a cosponsor. And I also commend the gentleman from New Jersey for his leadership on this resolution and for his taking the initiative to go down to El Salvador to see firsthand the immunization program; and also Chairman YATRON, and staff member Mark Tavlarides.

Mr. Speaker, the successful completion of a three-stage vaccination campaign in El Salvador has been one of the most dramatic and positive developments in the recent history of that troubled country. I am sure that much of the credit for this success goes to President Duarte. His wide leadership is supported by an overwhelming majority of the Salvadoran people and is instrumental in contributing to the stabilization of the country, to the greater observance of human rights, and to progress in meeting the needs of the people.

There are those of us in Congress, particularly on this side of the aisle, who are often critical of overwrought congressional resolutions that seem only to focus on problems—resolutions that criticize friends and allies of the United States. And so I am particularly proud to support a resolution like this, which congratulates a good friend and ally on a job well done. What a testimony it is for the world to see a democratically elected leader achieve a cease-fire in a time of civil insurrection in order to achieve a humanitarian purpose. Would to God the unelected tryants in Ethiopia, for example, show the same compassion toward those starving people in the northern provinces of their country.

And so I strongly support this resolution. I commend Mr. SMITH for offering it. And I urge its unanimous adoption by the House.

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 145, to commend President Duarte and the several international humanitarian organizations on their recent mass vaccination campaign in El Salvador. I would also like to commend the sponsor of the resolution, our colleague, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey for bringing this important matter to our attention. I also want to thank Mr. YATRON, chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations and Mr. BARNES, chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs for the expeditious way in which they agreed to move this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, President Duarte and the international humanitarian organizations that participated deserve credit for arranging a 3-day period during which over 300,000 Salvadoran children were innoculated against killing and crippling diseases that confront El Salvador and the rest of the underdeveloped world. This successful project will serve as an example to the rest of the world as to what can be accomplished to improve health standards even under the most trying circumstances.

I would like to take particular note of the excellent work of the Pan American Health Organization, both in the immunization program in El Salvador and elsewhere in the region. Through the efforts of the Pan American Health Organization, the number of cases of poliomyelitis in Central and South America have been substantially reduced. Of equal importance for the health of the people, the Pan American Health Organization will soon launch a campaign to eradicate the indigenous transmission of wild polio virus by the year 1990. This program will require the same type of public and private cooperation which made the immunization in El Salvador so successful and deserves the active support of the governments of this hemisphere.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of House Resolution 145.●

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 145, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate has been concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair will now put the question on each motion on which further proceedings were postponed in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order: H.R. 2268, and House Resolution 145, both by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic votes after the first such vote in this series.

UNITED STATES-ISRAEL FREE TRADE IMPLEMENTATION ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 2268.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2268, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 422, nays 0, answered "present" 3, not voting 9, as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 2246

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of the bill, H.R. 2246.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1403

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of the bill, H.R. 1403.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1229

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of the bill, H.R. 1229.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

VIETNAM VETERANS RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 128) to designate May 7, 1985, as "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House the minority has no objection to the legislation being considered.

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. GARCIA], and the other members of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee for bringing up Senate Joint Resolution 128, which would designate today, May 7, "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day."

On May 2, I introduced an identical measure, House Joint Resolution 276, which was also referred to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. I am pleased to see this great body consider a measure with the same intent.

Our Vietnam veterans had to readjust to a society that, as a whole, found it difficult to understand their experiences and their needs. The Committee on Veterans' Affairs and the Congress have attempted, quite successfully I believe, to ease this readjustment by providing a comprehensive benefits program designed specifically for Vietnam veterans.

Setting aside this special day, the 10th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam era, to recognize our Vietnam veterans is a very appropriate and important step. They have earned our respect and our praise for their noble efforts and their sacrifices in a country on the other side of the world.

"Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day" makes a major statement. It emphasizes that we are listening and that we do care. I'm proud to give my strong support to this measure, and I know it will go a long way toward increasing the public's awareness of the Vietnam veteran and his concerns.●

● Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago today, with the fall of Saigon, our Nation's longest war came to a final close. The anniversary of that ending is a time for reflection for all Americans, and our reflections of the war are as many and varied as we are.

Indeed, the war in Southeast Asia was emotional, misunderstood, divisive, and it often pitted honorable people one against the other. There is one thought, however, Mr. Speaker, one reflection on the war that I believe is universal.

It is that all Americans are grateful for the honorable service and considerable sacrifices made by the almost 9 million men and women who served their country in uniform during this period. And while I know my fellow citizens would concur in what I have to say, I want to take this opportunity to express my personal thanks to each and every one of these fine Americans.

Vietnam veterans have recently been the subject of a poll by ABC and the Washington Post. Its results are most interesting, but in my view, not surprising. The poll clearly indicates that most of these veterans are better citizens because of their military experience. It shows, of course, that scars of war often remain but that these fine individuals have triumphed over social, economic, and educational difficulties to become some of our finest citizens. The fact is, in my view, they have always been among our finest citizens.

There is no question that special needs do exist among Vietnam veterans, and as a member of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs, I am proud to be involved in the effort to meet those needs through necessary legislation and specific Federal programs. Indeed, it is our duty to meet those needs. However, in our recognition of the needs of some Vietnam veterans, let us rise above the oft-repeated critical statements concerning the ability of these young Americans to readjust to civilian life after their service in Vietnam. The ABC-Post poll puts to rest some of these critical myths about Vietnam veterans and it is my hope that this country will finally realize that Vietnam veterans deserve to be recognized for their service, their strength and their successes as well as their needs.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I failed to mention a group of Vietnam veterans on whom the poll could not make comment, a group who cannot hear our thanks today, a group for whom there has been no homecoming. I am speaking, of course, of the 2,477 American servicemen still missing in Southeast Asia. As we commemorate an end to war, let us renew our commitment to gaining a full accounting for each and every servicemember whose fate remains unknown. Until this is achieved, there can be no end to the war for these men and for their families.

Mr. Speaker, Vietnam veterans willingly served their country when their country called. They did their duty as did millions of other Americans who were called to arms in previous wars. I salute these veterans as noble representatives of all that is good in America. Their patriotism and valor flows through the veins of all our citizens.

Vietnam veterans, like their comrades before them, have served us well and they deserve our everlasting thanks. May that be the lesson of Vietnam that is foremost in our minds on this 10th anniversary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.●

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 128

Whereas over three million American fighting men and women who served in the Vietnam theater for over a decade acquitted themselves in the highest traditions of American service personnel;

Whereas more than fifty-seven thousand Americans lost their lives there, and an additional two thousand four hundred Americans are still listed as missing in action in Southeast Asia;

Whereas thousands of Vietnam veterans still suffer physically and psychologically from the effects of the war, including many who are permanently disabled;

Whereas regardless of the ultimate verdict of history about United States involvement in that war, the service that patriotic Americans performed in the Vietnam theater is deserving of continued and reemphasized grateful recognition;

Whereas the Nation is now beginning to review in a more dispassionate and evenhanded manner the history of our involvement in the Vietnam conflict;

Whereas for too long the Nation failed to honor the service of and respond appropriately to the needs of Vietnam veterans and was instead anxious to place the Vietnam experience behind it; and

Whereas May 7, 1985, marks the tenth anniversary of the official end of America's involvement in the conflict in Vietnam: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 7, 1985, is designated "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS WEEK

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 64) to designate the week beginning May 5, 1985, as "National Correctional Officers Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation being considered.

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANSEN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 100, a resolution to declare the week of May 5, 1985, as "National Correctional Officers Week," and its Senate companion which is before us today, Senate Joint Resolution 64.

As sponsor of the House version of the resolution, I want to express my appreciation and that of our Nation's correctional officers to all of our colleagues who have added their names as cosponsors of this resolution which points to the vital significance of correctional officers. I respectfully request unanimous consent that the names of all of the cosponsors be printed in the RECORD after my remarks.

We passed a similar resolution during the 98th Congress, and it led to ceremonies throughout the country which honored correctional officers for their important work. I was privileged to personally participate in a ceremony at the Great Hall of the Department of Justice along with Chief Justice Warren Burger and many uniformed members of correctional officers from throughout the country.

Correctional officers perform an essential task that few of us would be able to perform. Our criminal justice system operates under the premise that with proper guidance those who have been found guilty of criminal charges can be helped to return to a lawful way of life. This system breaks down without correctional officers, because if they are not there to shepherd this process, who will be?

Correctional officers have often been portrayed as cruel, as uncaring, and in some instances worse than those individuals with whom they are charged. Isn't it amazing what we are led to believe simply because it makes a more tantalizing plot?

If it is anything that has impressed me during my work on this resolution, it is that correctional officers are a strong opposite to the Hollywood version. They are very caring. They often take more grief than they have to take. They are committed to their profession, as is any true professional. And, sadly, they are not sufficiently appreciated. It was this element more than anything else that led me to sponsoring this resolution.

Over the past few months, my office has been contacted by correctional and police associations from throughout the country who are working very hard to make this commemorative week come about. Several States have planned commemorations of their own based upon the expectation of the passage of this resolution, and I am certainly pleased that we will not disappoint them.

We have been faced with several important issues in recent weeks, and I know that there will be some among us who will say that we shouldn't spend our time on commemorative resolutions of this type. We are a body of many views, and the one I have just described is certainly not mine. I believe that it is important that we pause occasionally to say "thank you" to Americans who perform tasks important to our society, and this is one of those times.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of our colleagues to support the passage of this resolution, and thereby House Joint Resolution 100, a resolution declaring the week of May 5, 1985, as "National Correctional Officers Week."

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I also take this time to thank the chairman of this committee and the ranking Republican for the expeditious handling of this very important matter. As one who represents many correctional officers, I know well the service they render in their States, their localities, and in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I want to voice my support for Senate Joint Resolution 64. This resolution will establish National Correctional Officers Week.

We have honored many Americans in this body, and the men and women who serve the public each day in prisons across our country deserve this small gesture of thanks.

Who among us has not called for a crackdown on crime? We should realize that the cost of safe streets is additional burdens on the people working in our correctional institutions.

And the corrections officers already have a tough job. The prisons are overcrowded. Racial tensions, bad enough on the outside, are intensified in close quarters. The corrections officer works in a constant state of alert, a constant state of danger.

When we do hear about corrections officers, it is when the pressures burst within a prison and they are hurt, or worse.

This resolution is long overdue. We should recognize the contribution corrections officers make each day to the safety of all of us. They do a tough job well, day in and day out, without applaud or reward. It is time for us to say thank you.

● Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, this past weekend marked the beginning of National Correctional Officers Week. I rise today to encourage my colleagues to recognize and pay tribute to this exceptional group of professionals.

As a former law enforcement official, I know of the unique pressures and frustrations felt by correctional officers. Their responsibilities are greatly different, yet no less important, than the policemen who patrol our streets. Correctional officers usually handle convicted felons restricted to a confined area. They must control violence in this environment, plus promote rehabilitation and prepare prisoners for release.

I am proud to join the Nation in honoring our courageous correctional officers. The Texas Department of Corrections has 6,000 dedicated correctional officers who epitomize the attitude, morale, and professionalism set forth in the declaration of National Correctional Officer's Week. They are responsible for the daily operations to include custody and control of 38,000 inmates, incarcerated in 27 major institutions throughout the State of Texas.

Texas correctional officers are committed to exerting a positive influence and taking a national leadership role in promoting continued professional growth, education, and training for all correctional officers to meet the increasing challenges and demands of their profession. These Texans serve as national role models in developing and implementing innovative standards for correctional services and methods for measuring compliance. They will continue to significantly contribute to shaping national correctional policies and procedures.

As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, I would also like to pay tribute to the men and women who serve as correctional officers in the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps. Over 5,000 correctional officers work in military prisons around the world. Additionally, the military correctional divisions of the armed services are continually improving themselves through professional affiliation in the Military Corrections Committee of the American Correctional Association and, as such, deserves our gratitude for the superb job done by the correctional officers who protect our servicemen and women.

The qualities I have attributed to the correctional officers of Texas are applicable to their colleagues across America. On this occasion, I would like to congratulate all correctional officers and encourage them to maintain their strong performance in a difficult job.●

● Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 64, the National Correctional Officers Week. The resolution will name the week of May 5 as National Correctional Officers Week.

Mr. Speaker, there are about 300,000 correctional officers nationally. These officers are dedicated, hard-working professionals who perform the task necessary to an orderly society.

They often risk their lives in daily performance of work, working under conditions which would be difficult for most of us to bear.

Mr. Speaker, I have a bill in to make murder of correctional officers by inmates a capital offense.

We are proud of all correctional officers but in particular the correctional officers at the Marion Federal Prison and our State institutions. Thank you.●

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in designating the week of May 5 as National Correctional Officers Week.

The men and women on the front lines of our correctional system do a very difficult and often thankless task. As we are all too accustomed to hearing, dangerous and overcrowded conditions exist in most of this country's prisons. From time to time, this situation has lead to violent confrontations between prisoners and correctional officers.

We have justifiably embarked on a national policy aimed at removing violent criminals from our society. More of them are behind bars today than ever before and for the first time in two decades, the crime rate is on the decline.

The job done by prison guards and parole officers is vital if we are to be successful in our national war on crime. I urge unanimous approval for Senate Joint Resolution 64 in recognition of the important work done by this dedicated group of people.●

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 64

Whereas American correctional officers who work in our jails and prisons are currently responsible for the containment and control of over six hundred thousand prisoners;

Whereas correctional officers must protect inmates from violence while encouraging them to develop skills and attitudes that can help them become productive members of society following their release;

Whereas the morale of correctional officers is affected by many factors, and the public perception of the role of correctional officers is more often based upon dramatization rather than factual review;

Whereas good job performance requires correctional officers to absorb the adverse attitudes present in confinement while maintaining themselves as professionals in order to have their actions appreciated and accepted by the public at large;

Whereas correctional officers had been similarly honored by many States and localities in 1984;

Whereas correctional officers had been similarly honored by a similar joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled in 1984; and

Whereas the attitude and morale of correctional officers is a matter worthy of serious congressional attention: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning May 5, 1985, hereby is designated "National Correctional Officers Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DIGESTIVE DISEASES AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 94) to designate the week beginning May 12, 1985, as "National Digestive Diseases Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation being considered.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 94

Whereas digestive diseases represent one of the most serious health problems of the Nation in terms of human discomfort and pain, mortality, personal expenditures for treatment, and working hours lost;

Whereas digestive diseases rank among other forms of illness as the third largest burden on the economy of the Nation;

Whereas 20,000,000 Americans suffer from chronic digestive diseases and disorders, and more than 14,000,000 cases of acute digestive diseases are treated in the Nation each year;

Whereas digestive diseases account for one-third of all malignant growths and for some of the most common acute infections;

Whereas more Americans are hospitalized with digestive diseases than with any other form of illness;

Whereas digestive diseases account for 25 percent of all surgical operations and comprise one of the most common causes of disability in the working force;

Whereas digestive diseases represent more than $17,000,000,000 annually in direct health care costs and represent a total economic burden of almost $50,000,000,000 annually;

Whereas more than 200 deaths annually are caused by each of at least 100 different diseases and disorders of the gastrointestinal tract;

Whereas the people of the Nation should be concerned with research into the causes, cures, prevention, and clinical treatment of digestive diseases and related nutrition problems and should recognize prevention and treatment of digestive diseases as a major health priority;

Whereas national lay and professional digestive diseases organizations, individually and through the Coalition of Digestive Diseases Organizations and the Federation of Digestive Diseases Societies, are committed to promoting awareness and understanding, among members of the general public and the health care community, of digestive tract disorders;

Whereas the National Digestive Diseases Advisory Board, and the National Institutes of Health through its National Digestive Diseases Education and Information Clearinghouse, are committed to encourage and coordinate these educational efforts;

Whereas the National Digestive Diseases Education Program is a coordinated effort to educate the public and the health care community as to the seriousness of digestive diseases and to provide information on treatment, prevention, and control; and

Whereas the second anniversary of the National Digestive Diseases Education Program occurs during the week beginning May 12, 1985: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning May 12, 1985, hereby is designated "National Digestive Diseases Awareness Week", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all public officials and the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1827

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed from the list of cosponsors of H.R. 1827.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL OSTEOPOROSIS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 61) to designate the week of May 1, 1985, through May 7, 1985, as "National Osteoporosis Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I would like to yield to the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE], who is the chief sponsor of House Joint Resolution 46.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA], chairman of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, and the ranking minority member of the committee, Mr. HANSEN, for bringing this important issue to the floor. I rise in full support of Senate Joint Resolution 61, which is virtually identical to House Joint Resolution 46, a bill which I introduced into this Chamber. I think it is important to note that my resolution received the support of more than half the Members of the House. I appreciate the interest of my colleagues in this important issue.

As the author of the companion House bill, I am pleased that today we are considering legislation that, as amended, will designate the week of May 20 to 26 as "National Osteoporosis Awareness Week." We have the opportunity to bring to national awareness information on a disease that disables and kills thousands each year.

Osteoporosis is a disease that principally strikes women, the onset of which begins after menopause. One in four women over the age of 45 can be expected to suffer from this disease which is characterized by weakened bones that break and fracture. Hip fractures, which are often suffered by older people, may actually be caused by bones which are so brittle that they simply break, thus causing a fall, rather than the fall causing broken bones.

As a consequence, osteoporosis is responsible for the death of 50,000 women yearly who die from the complications that result from hip fractures. This is 10,000 more than the number who die annually from breast cancer, making osteoporosis the 12th leading cause of death. Unlike breast cancer and other such diseases, osteoporosis appears to be preventable. It has been found that 50 percent of bone fractures could be avoided by adding adequate levels of calcium to the diet. By following a regimen which includes adequate calcium, exercise, and in some cases, estrogen supplementation, it is possible to prevent the development of this disease.

Prevention is one way to address the increasing health care costs related to osteoporosis. Currently the costs are estimated to be between $3.8 billion and $6 billion. With the growing elderly population, these costs can reasonably be expected to increase.

While osteoporosis affects between 15 and 20 million individuals in the United States alone, it is still relatively unknown—more than three-fourths of American women know nothing about this disease. For that reason, by designating "National Osteoporosis Awareness Week," we can begin to focus attention on this problem. We have within our means the ability to reduce the pain, deformity, disability, and cost associated with osteoporosis. Let this week be the beginning of an educational campaign that will ultimately add osteoporosis to the list of those diseases which no longer are a threat to our society.

I thank my colleagues for their consideration of this bill and I urge unanimous consent of Senate Joint Resolution 61.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 61

Whereas fifteen to twenty million persons in the United States are afflicted with osteoporosis, and generative bone condition;

Whereas approximately 25 percent of postmenopausal women in the United States develop osteoporosis;

Whereas among those who live to be age ninety, 32 percent of women and 17 percent of men will suffer a hip fracture due mostly to osteoporosis;

Whereas more than fifty thousand older women and many older men die each year in the United States as a result of such complications;

Whereas hip fracture complications related to osteoporosis often result in loss of independence for older persons;

Whereas approximately $3,800,000,000 is expended annually in the United States for health care costs relating to osteoporosis;

Whereas osteoporosis is associated with the loss of bone tissue by estrogen lack and low calcium intake;

Whereas the majority of men and women are unaware of the condition of osteoporosis; and

Whereas the best treatment of osteoporosis is prevention through education: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of May 1, 1985, through May 7, 1985, is designated as "National Osteoporosis Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate activities.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GARCIA

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARCIA: Page 2, line 3, strike out "May 1, 1985, through May 7, 1985," and insert in lieu thereof "May 20, 1985, through May 26, 1985,".

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GARCIA

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title amendment offered by Mr. GARCIA: Amend the title so to read: "A joint resolution to designate the week of May 20, 1985, through May 26, 1985, as 'National Osteoporosis Awareness Week'."

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ASTHMA AND ALLERGY AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 83) designating the week beginning on May 5, 1985, as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I would like to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'BRIEN] who is the chief sponsor of the House bill, House Joint Resolution 170.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that a majority of our colleagues have joined me in sponsoring House Joint Resolution 170, now identified as Senate Joint Resolution 83 to designate this week as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week."

Allergic diseases know no age, race or geographic boundaries, and their toll on society is enormous. Taken together, asthma and allergic diseases represent a huge public health problem.

One out of every six Americans is afflicted in some way by these illnesses.

An estimated 5,000 individuals die each year from asthma, despite common medical knowledge and treatments capable of preventing such deaths.

As many as 9 million Americans are asthmatic, over a third of whom are children.

Hay fever, perhaps the most common allergic disease, afflicts an estimated 15 million of our neighbors.

About 8 million work days a year are lost due to hay fever and asthma.

Occupational allergic diseases are now believed to be a major cause of workplace-caused illness.

About 130-million school days are missed each year because of hay fever and asthma.

Many other ailments of the skin, joints, kidneys, lungs, intestines, glands as well as some parasitic, blood, infectious, and malignant disorders are now believed to have major allergic and immunologic components.

The total annual cost of these incurable immunologic diseases was estimated at $4 billion in 1981, and indirect costs alone, such as lost wages, probably exceed $800 million a year for hay fever and asthma alone.

Obviously, the Awareness Week which we create here today will not cure the diseases. However, by bringing the problem to the attention of the American public, the efforts of researchers—public and private—doctors, teachers, and volunteers of all types, are highlighted. From such effort, the work of the public and private institutions devoted to conquering the many related diseases is made easier.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for recognizing the importance of the job many individuals and groups are doing to reduce the suffering caused by these debilitating diseases, and for making it possible to increase the impact of the informational message about the diseases which the Awareness Week provides.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 83

Whereas asthma and allergic diseases result in physical, emotional, and economic hardship for more than thirty-five million Americans and their families;

Whereas thousands of Americans, many of them young, die each year from asthma even though sufficient medical knowledge and resources exist to prevent many asthma-related deaths;

Whereas student absenteeism is due in significant part to asthma and allergic diseases;

Whereas environmental conditions in the workplace often cause or exacerbate asthma and allergic diseases among employees;

Whereas many hospital patients suffer allergic reactions to prescribed medications;

Whereas it is estimated that the American public pays $4,000,000,000 per year in medical bills directly attributable to the treatment and diagnoses of asthma and allergic diseases and pays another $2,000,000,000 per year as a result of the indirect social cost of such illnesses;

Whereas, because of recent developments in the study of immunology, health care providers are better equipped to diagnose and treat asthma and allergic diseases; and

Whereas increased public awareness of recent scientific advancements in the study of immunology will help many of the common misconceptions concerning asthma, allergic diseases, and the victims of those illnesses: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning on May 5, 1985, is hereby designated as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENIOR CENTER WEEK

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 60) to designate the week of May 12, 1985, through May 18, 1985, as "Senior Center Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I would like to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ROWLAND] who is the chief sponsor of the House bill, House Joint Resolution 146.

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Utah yielding. As you know, I introduced House Joint Resolution 146, which is identical to Senate Joint Resolution 60, the resolution being considered today. With over 218 cosponsors, the enactment of this measure will give special recognition to our Nation's senior centers by designating the second week in May as Senior Center Week.

Our older Americans appreciate having access to the many services provided by these centers. I want to thank my colleagues for signing onto this legislation commemorating the week of May 12–18, 1985, as Senior Center Week.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follow:

S.J. RES. 60

Whereas local communities support over eight thousand senior centers and there is hardly a city or town without one;

Whereas senior centers affirm the dignity, self-worth, and independence of older persons by facilitating their decisions and action, tapping their experiences, skills, and knowledge, and enabling their continued contribution to the community;

Whereas senior centers, encouraged and supported by the Older Americans Act, function as service delivery focal points, helping older persons to help themselves and each other, and offering service or access to community services as needed;

Whereas the national theme for Senior Center Week is "Senior Centers are Wellness Centers", and senior centers nationwide are viewed as centers to promote the well-being of older persons—emotionally and physically; and

Whereas the month of May has historically been proclaimed Older Americans Month, and communities across the country are giving special recognition to older persons and the role of senior centers in serving them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the second week in May, May 12 through May 18, 1985, is designated as "Senior Center Week" and the President is authorized and requested to include this designation of Senior Center Week as part of the proclamation of Older Americans Month, calling upon the people of the United States to honor older Americans and these local organizations that bring together activities and services for their benefit.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YOUTH SUICIDE PREVENTION MONTH

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 53) to authorize and request the President to designate the month of June 1985 as "Youth Suicide Prevention Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation being considered.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 53

Whereas the youth of society represent the hope for the future;

Whereas the rate of youth suicide has increased more than threefold in the last two decades;

Whereas over five thousand young Americans took their lives last year, many more attempted suicide, and countless families were affected;

Whereas youth suicide is a phenomenon which must be addressed by a concerned society; and

Whereas youth suicide is a national problem which can only be solved through the combined efforts of individuals, families, communities, organizations, and government to educate society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America Congress assembled, That the month of June 1985 is designated as "Youth Suicide Prevention Month" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the Governors of the several States, the chief officials of local governments, and the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate programs and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE MONTH

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution of (S.J. Res. 65) designating the month of November 1985 as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but simply would like to inform the House that the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I would like to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOWERY] who is the chief sponsor of the House bill, House Joint Resolution 193.

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, Alzheimer's disease is a surprisingly common disorder which destroys certain vital brain cells causing a form of senile dementia. Alzheimer's disease affects between 5 and 10 percent of all of our citizens over the age of 65.

Precise figures are not available because there are no completely reliable diagnostic methods yet.

We do know, however, that Alzheimer's disease afflicted almost 3 million people or 1 adult in every 3 American families. Alzheimer's disease victims now constitute 50 to 60 percent of the 1.3 million Americans in nursing homes, accounting for more than one-half of the $25 billion spent annually for nursing home care. And by the year 2050, unless a cure is found, it is estimated that more than 3 million people will be afflicted, and the custodial cost will rise to more than $30 billion a year as a result of Alzheimer's disease.

Alzheimer's disease currently claims over 100,000 lives a year. It is awesome in the affliction that it causes and the pain that it causes to families.

We are raising the consciousness of the American people and through this legislation by declaring the month of November National Alzheimer's Disease Month I think we will acquaint more and more Americans with this problem.

I would like to insert the following article from Time magazine of July 11, 1983:

SLOW, STEADY, AND HEARTBREAKING

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE IS A DEVASTATING ILLNESS OF ADVANCING AGE

"You look inside your mind and see nothing but black."—A victim.

The first signs are small, puzzling and all too easy to dismiss. For Chicago Journalist Charles Leroux, it was his mother's diminishing ability to manage her checkbook and count change. For Frank Holmes, a retired Boston businessman, it was the wild spending sprees by his once prudent wife and her increasing tendency to garble phone messages. For Eleanor Zimmerlein, an Illinois farmer's wife, it was the decline in the quality of her husband's handiwork: "Suddenly the row of shingles he'd put on the roof would be crooked, and he couldn't saw a straight line." And for Chicago Office Clerk Eleanor Marzillo, it began with her husband's difficulty in shaving, first his trim mustache got bushier and bushier, then one day he shaved half of it off. At the same time, Marzillo recalls, rags were mysteriously collecting in the family car. "I couldn't figure out what Tony was doing with these rags," she says. "It turned out he knew how to start the car and how to drive, but he couldn't figure out how to use the windshield wipers or defroster any more."

Aberrations such as these mark the onset of Alzheimer's disease (AD), the insidious and heartbreaking malady of advancing age. The memory lapses, confusion and dementia inevitably get worse. The intelligent and athletic Mrs. Holmes, now 65, forgot how to cook: she set a chicken ablaze by trying to roast it over all four burners of her stove. She also forgot how to play tennis and ultimately she had trouble recognizing her friends. Once an active Y.M.C.A. employee, Tony Marzillo, 61, gradually lost all ability to care for himself, becoming incontinent, unruly and destructive. "It was like chasing a 6-ft.-tall toddler around," his wife recalls, "except you knew that a toddler would eventually learn the rules of the house." Today both Marzillo and Holmes are institutionalized. Says Eleanor Marzillo of her husband: "He cannot speak, he cannot eat, he cannot ask for water."

The relentlessness of Alzheimer's disease makes it a nightmare for families of the patients. The affliction's rising incidence threatens to make it a nightmare for the country at large. By far the leading cause of mental deterioration among the elderly, AD affects between 5% and 10% of all people over 65. Among them: former Movie Star Rita Hayworth, 64. Because most AD patients must eventually be placed in institutions, the disease puts tremendous demands on the nation's health-care resources. Alzheimer's victims constitute 50% to 60% of the 1.3 million people in nursing homes, accounting for more than half of the $25 to $26 billion spent annually on such care.

The disease will become more common and take an even greater toll as the U.S. population continues to age. On July 1, the U.S. reached a milestone: for the first time there are more Americans over 65 (27.4 million) than teen-agers (26.5 million). In March, Health and Human Resources Secretary Margaret Heckler created a special AD task force and proposed to increase federal funds for AD research to $25 million in 1984, up from $17 million in 1981. Says Heckler: "Every breakthrough we achieve is a step toward the reuniting of families and friends, the lifting of the veil of confusion and isolation from Americans who deserve days and years of celebration in their final years, not days and years of drift."

Alzheimer's disease was first identified in 1906 by German Physician Alois Alzheimer. His patient, a 51-year-old woman, suffered loss of memory, disorientation and later, severe dementia. After her death, Alzheimer conducted an autopsy on her brain and found the two distinctive characteristics of the disease: tangled clumps of nerve fibers and patches of disintegrated nerve-cell branches. Because Alzheimer's patient was relatively young, AD was at first considered a disease of middle age; similar symptoms in elderly people were simply regarded as a natural consequence of aging. Today this view has been discarded. Even in an octogenarian, severe mental confusion "is a disease, not a natural decline," says Katherine Bick, acting deputy director of the National Institute of Neurological Communicative Disorders and Stroke (NINCDS).

Little real progress has been made in the treatment of AD since Alzheimer's day, and even diagnosis remains difficult. The only way to be absolutely certain that a patient has the disorder is to examine the brain after death. Thus, the diagnosis must be approximated by a careful process of elimination. Through CAT scanning and other tests, the physician gradually determines that the patient has not suffered a series of small strokes, does not have Parkinson's disease, a brain tumor, depression, an adverse drug reaction or any other possible cause of dementia. If all tests are negative, AD is diagnosed by default. This conclusion may be further verified with psychological tests.

Alzheimer's disease would be far easier to treat and detect if doctors knew what caused it. The fact that the disease often occurs in several members of the same family suggests that a genetic factor is at work. This factor "is most prominent in very early onset cases," says University of Minnesota Psychiatrist Leonard Heston. In one family, for instance, two out of three siblings developed Alzheimer's by age 27. According to Johns Hopkins Psychiatrist Marshal Folstein, a sibling or child of an AD victim runs a greater than 50% chance of developing the disease by age 90.

Still, heredity alone cannot explain the disease, which often affects individuals whose families have no history of the disorder. "Possibly it comes down to genetic susceptibility triggered by one or more things," suggests Bick of NINCDS. Some doctors speculate that the trigger may be a slow-acting virus, similar to the "slow viruses" that cause such rare brain disorders as kuru and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in man, and scrapie in sheep and goats. Unfortunately, all efforts to isolate an AD virus have failed. Concludes Virologist Joseph Gibbs of the National Institutes of Health: "If slow virus are involved in Alzheimer's, I suspect that the association is remote."

Mr. GARCIA. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HANSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

□ 1450

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to commend my colleague for introducing this resolution.

This disease is one of the most tragic to plague our elderly. It slowly destroys its victim's mind, and finally, his dignity. Modern science has created miracles, helping mankind to deal with a host of diseases and afflictions. I don't know if we will ever be able to cure Alzheimer's, but we must try. Recognition of this disease is a first necessary step it that process, and by declaring November National Alzheimer's Disease Month we are calling attention to an affliction that must be fought, that must be beaten .

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman. What he says is absolutely correct. Progress is being made. In fact, in March 1984, Secretary Heckler appointed a special Alzheimer's disease task force; more funding for research is being recommended and by continually increasing the consciousness of the American people the funding will be coming forth both through Government as well as private sources so that we can eradicate this disease.

Mr. Speaker, before I yield back my time I would like to thank my colleague [BUTLER DERRICK] for his concern and interest in gathering the signatures so that this legislation may be brought to the floor.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution as follows:

S.J. RES. 65

Whereas more than two million Americans are affected by Alzheimer's disease, which is surprisingly common disorder that destroys certain vital cells of the brain;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is the fourth leading cause of death among other Americans;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is responsible for 50 per centum of all nursing home admissions, at an annual cost of more than $20,000,000,000;

Whereas in one-third of all American families one parent will succumb to this disease;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is not a normal consequence of aging; and

Whereas an increase in the national awareness of the problem of Alzheimer's disease may stimulate the interest and concern of the American people, which may lead, in turn, to increased research and eventually to the discovery of a cure for Alzheimer's disease: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of November 1985 is designated as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the several joint resolutions just considered and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ROACHBUSTERS

(Mr. LIVINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, my friend and colleague, the Honorable SILVIO O. CONTE, took this podium to declare his personal war against the crustatorial creatures that inhabit his office. Shortly thereafter, the Times-Picayune, the ranking newspaper of the great city of New Orleans, which by no coincidence must be known to the inner circles of insect society as Cockroach Valhalla, has given great praise to his intentions but offered bleak prospects for his success. Alas, the editorial board of the Times-Picayune is unfortunately correct, for the might of man is no match for the might of mite.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to include the article from the New Orleans Times-Picayune.

ROACHBUSTERS

The history of the U.S. Congress is a hallowed story of more than two centuries of triumph over obstacles, difficulties and assorted forces of iniquity. But Congress may have finally taken on an adversary it cannot hope to overcome: the cockroach.

The Capitol, it seems, has become overrun with roaches. But as New Orleanians could explain to the distinguished members of the Congress, the outcome of the battle can safely be predicted: The roaches are going to win hands (or feelers) down.

Rep. Silvio Conte, D-Mass., who comes from a cold-weather state where roaches are insignificant both individually and as a group and large-scale roach-fighting is a virtually unknown art, has allowed himself to be chivvied into heading the would-be roach-busting campaign. Rep. Conte comes to this formidable task armed with two yellow flyswatters, 35,000 roach traps and a large canister of bug spray.

There has probably never been a combatant who declared a war so hopelessly unprepared for the struggle before him.

By contrast, New Orleanians have been fighting roaches at least since 1718, according to recorded history, and have accumulated a wealth of experience along with a certain superior amusement reserved for those who claim to see a light at the end of the tunnel.

Hardened by generations of roach-fighting and well versed in the almost supernatural cunning and physical stamina of their adversaries, New Orleanians know that anyone armed to battle roaches only with Rep. Conte's meager arsenal is a hopeless novice ripe for swift discomfiture.

Rep. Conte will learn in due course that it may be possible for him to clear his office of the pesky creatures for an hour or maybe a day, perhaps even two days. But as any New Orleanian can attest, the roach has not survived through some 350 million years of changing environments to now fall victim to an untutored native of Massachusetts.

However many individual roaches the congressman may account for with his flyswatters, traps and bug spray, the roach will not only survive but prosper—and return in triumph again and again.

FARM POLICY REFORM ACT OF 1985

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, since he is a member of the Democratic leadership and one of the Members who last week lectured the Republican side on the dilatory tactics that were preventing us from hearing the debate on the State Department authorization bill, which today, now, the Democratic leadership has pulled off the calendar.

Could the gentleman, as a member of that leadership, explain to the House why that bill was pulled today?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would be pleased to explain to the gentleman that it has come to our notice that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] is without the city.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, last week when we were doing something on this side of the aisle that we thought was important, the gentleman lectured us, and I have his words here, that we were in fact doing something that might jeopardize the lives and safety of Americans living abroad.

Is this matter with regard to the chairman so important that the Democratic leadership has now decided that that is not a concern of this body?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs about his itinerary and do not know his reasons.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, so if I understand it then correctly, when the chairman of the committee is engaged in business that he regards as important, then it is all right to jeopardize the lives and safety of people abroad, but when the Republican minority is engaged in things that they regard as important, then the leadership can come on the floor and lecture us?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman misunderstood.

Mr. WALKER. Are we somehow engaged in practices——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman misunderstood my explanation. I have said that so far as I am advised——

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas to address the House for 1 minute?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I simply take this time today to advise my colleagues that I have introduced the Farm Policy Reform Act of 1985, together with cosponsors DASCHLE, CONYERS, BRYANT, WEAVER, EVANS of Illinois, and HAYES, which bill will be filed as a part of the proceedings today and circulated among the Members.

I have asked permission, and I include herewith, a summary of that bill for Members and ask that they give it consideration pending the debate on the farm bill which is forthcoming.

The summary of the bill follows:

SUMMARY—FARM POLICY REFORM ACT OF 1985

TITLE I. AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY SUPPLY MANAGEMENT

Section 101—Supply Management Program

A producer referendum is mandated on August 1, 1985, 1989, 1993, and 1997 to determine by majority vote if a mandatory supply management program will be in effect for the succeeding four-year period for the commodities wheat, corn, grain sorghums, barely, oats, rye, upland cotton, rice, and soybeans. If the referendum fails, the farm program will be established at the discretion of the Secretary.

If a referendum is approved, each producer will be assigned a normal crop acreage (NCA) equivalent to the average number of acres cultivated, including farm program acres retired, during the four preceding years. Each producer must set aside 15% of his NCA. This determines eligible crop acres. Each producer will submit planting intentions to USDA. If the producer's total farm and nonfarm income is less than $200,000, the producer will receive acreage allotments in accordance with that requested. Producers with gross incomes in excess of $200,000 must request supplemental acreage allotments for each commodity.

The Secretary, after determining a national marketing quota for each commodity, by totaling estimated domestic demand, export demand, food aid requirements, and reserve requirements, will prorate the remaining needed production to all producers requesting supplemental allotments through a formula which requires an increasingly greater set-aside percentage as producer gross income increases. Producers who earn more than 50% of their gross income from nonfarm sources will be required to set aside an additional 10% of their eligible crop acres.

The Secretary may award bonus acres to all producers if the total of all allotment requests does not exceed the national marketing quota.

Nonrecourse loans will be made available for a period of 36 months and the loan rates shall equal 70% of parity for the 1986 crop year and will increase by 2% each year thereafter until 1996. Target price programs are eliminated.

At the time acreage allotments are assigned, the Secretary shall issue marketing certificates for each commodity based on county average yield or proven farm yield, whichever is higher. The certificate may be adjusted by the Secretary to reflect on-farm use. If production exceeds the amount in the marketing certificate, the surplus may be used for on-farm use, applied to the subsequent year's marketing certificate, donated for Title II, P.L. 480 use, or sold to the Commodity Credit Corporation for 50% of the loan rate.

Producers must apply approved conservation measures to set-aside acres. The Secretary may permit haying and grazing set-aside acres and may make a payment for land used for wildlife use.

A farmer disaster reserve is created to replace crop insurance. Each producer must contribute a portion of his production, determined on an actuarially sound basis, to the reserve. In the event of a disaster, the producer will receive commodities from the reserve equivalent to 90% of his marketing certificate less the amount actually produced. However, the value of commodities received under this program may not exceed $360,000 annually.

Section 102—Wool and Mohair

The National Wool Act of 1954 is extended for five years.

Section 103—Suspension of Permanent Program

Sections of current law which would conflict with this program are suspended.

TITLE II. AGRICULTURAL CREDIT

Section 201—Guaranteed Loans

Limits FmHA guaranteed farm operating and farm real estate loans to 10% of loans made in those categories.

Section 202—Limited Resource Real Estate Loans

Clarifies authority for FmHA to make limited resource real estate loans.

Section 203—Record Keeping Training

Requires record keeping training for limited resource borrowers.

Section 204—Limits on Operating Loans

Establishes a two-tiered debt ceiling on operating loans. For direct loans, the limit would be $200,000, except that no more than 25% of the funds could be used for loans above $100,000. For guaranteed loans, the limit would be $400,000, except that no more than 25% of the guarantee authority could be for loans above $200,000. Total FmHA indebtedness could not exceed $500,000 per farmer.

Section 205—Limited Resource Operating Loans

Clarifies authority for FmHA to make limited resource operating loans.

Sections 206-210—Emergency Loans

Reforms the FmHA emergency loan program by redirecting toward family-sized farms. The reforms include limiting loans to family-size farms, limiting loans to farmers who cannot get credit elsewhere, and reducing the individual loan ceiling from $500,000 to $200,000.

Section 211—Loan Deferrals

Expands authority for the deferral of principal and interest for up to 5 years as long as the producer can project a positive cash flow under the support price schedule in Title I.

Section 212—Loan Defaults

Clarifies FmHA Procedures for handling loan defaults.

Section 213—County Committees

Expands FmHA county committees to 5 members of which three must be farmer-elected.

Section 214—Prompt Approval of Loans

Establishes definite time limits for approval of FmHA loans.

Section 215—Farm Program Appeals

Establishes a new procedure for the appeal of FmHA loan applications. The major components include informal meetings to facilitate resolution of disputes at local level, one formal hearing where informal meetings are unsuccessful, and the availability of an administrative law judge at the state level to conduct the formal hearing and provide independent resolution.

Section 216—Disposition and Leasing of Farmland

Clarifies procedures for disposition of farmland held in inventory by FmHA. Limits the leasing or sale of land to farmers who are eligible for FmHA operating or real estate loans, with first priority going to limited resource farmers.

Section 217—Release of Normal Income Security

Provides for minimum standards for the release of income security for family living and operating expenses.

Section 218—Loan Summary Statements

Requires FmHA to provide each borrower with a loan status reoprt to provide farmers with necessary information to better manage their debts.

Section 219—Family Farm Definition

Clarifies definition of a "family farm" specifying that individuals owning farm must provide a majority of the labor.

Section 220—Limited Resource Loan Amounts

Restores the original minimum quota to require that at least 25% of FmHA operating and real estate loans go to limited resource borrowers.

Section 221—Farm and Home Plan Study

Provides for a study of the appropriateness of FmHA's "Farm and Home Plan" and proposed substitutes.

TITLE III. AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Subtitle A

Sections 301-302—Sales for Foreign Currencies

Authorized Title I, P.L. 480 sales for local currencies to developing countries with per capity GNP of $500 or below.

Section 303—Use of Private Entities

Grants may be made to private entities for projects designed to improve storage and marketing or to stimulate or expand private enterprise in friendly countries.

Section 304—Intermediate Credit

Requires using not less than $500 million annually for an intermediate export credit program.

Section 305—Quantities for Famine Relief

Minimum tonnage under Title II, P.L. 480 is increased from 1.7 to 3.25 million metric tons grain equivalent over a six year period.

Section 306—Multiyear Agreements

Title II, P.L. 480 amended to permit multiyear agreements with nonprofit organizations.

Section 307—Disaster Reserve

Voluntary agencies authorized to maintain an operating reserve of no less than 15% of approved levels in drought and disaster prone counties.

Section 308—Processed Product and Fortified Grain Reserve

Processed and fortified foods will be prepositioned in the United States to ensure timely delivery of commodities.

Section 309—Authorization

Title II, P.L. 480 funding increased from $1.0 billion to $1.9 billion.

Section 310—Authorization to Purchase Foreign Currencies

Funding for Title II sponsors to utilize local currencies generated from Title I is increased from $7.5 million to $9.5 million.

Section 311—Multilateral Agreements

Encourages multilateral agreements with other food exporting nations to fulfill food aid requirements of needy nations.

Subtitle B—Agricultural Imports

Section 320—Agricultural Imports

Instructs the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize existing law to the maximum extent practicable to minimize food imports.

Section 321—Labeling Imported Meat

Requires imported meat to be so labeled with words to indicate its country of origin.

Section 322—Serving Imported Meat

Requires that eating establishments inform individuals purchasing food of the fact that such food products are imported.

TITLE IV. SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION

Subtitle A—Soil and Water Conservation

Section 401—Training of Soil Conservation Personnel

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and carry out a training program for soil conservation service employees.

Section 402—Dry Land Farming

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to promote energy and water conservation through dry land farming.

Section 403—Local and State Committees

Instructs the Secretary to take the needed actions to strengthen the role of local and state committees.

Section 404—Agricultural Conservation Program

Instructs the Secretary of Agriculture to require all producers to use Agricultural Conservation Program payments, grants and aid in accordance with a conservation plan approved by the local soil and water conservation district.

Section 405—Conservation Reserve Program

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into contracts of 10 years in order to promote soil and water conservation on erosion prone land.

Section 406—Water Conservation Program

Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into contracts of 5 years in order to reduce the use of water from underground aquifers to irrigate land.

Subtitle B—Highly Erodible Land Conservation

Sections 410-415

Instructs the Secretary of Agriculture to make any person or producer who plows out new highly erodible land ineligible for agricultural programs for that year. Producers would be ineligible for price supports, loans and guarantees, crop insurance, or disaster payments. Local agricultural stabilization and Conservation County Committees are to be used to administer the program.

TITLE V. FOOD ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Subtitle A—Food Stamp Program

Section 501—Adjustment of Trinity Food Plan

Increases the Thrifty Food Plan (TFP) to reflect actual food prices. Bases the food stamp allotment on the projected average cost of the TFP in the coming year. Food stamp recipients would receive a benefit reflecting the true cost of purchasing the TFP.

Section 502—Earned Income Deduction

Adjusts income deductions to enhance work incentives and better reflect actual excess shelter and dependent care costs.

In order to recognize the taxes and work related expenses and provide a work incentive for food stamp recipients, current law requires that 18% of any earned income be disregarded in establishing a recipient household Food stamp eligibility and benefit level. Prior to amendment in 1981, the disregard for earning was 20%.

Section 503—Dependent Care and Excess Shelter Deductions

Separates and raises the maximum dependent care deduction to $160 per month for all child care costs incurred, and the excess shelter deduction to $175 per month.

Section 504—Calculation of Income

Permits uneven proration of family income to be calculated either on a prospective or retrospective basis.

Section 505—Supplementation of Allotments

Permits supplementing the allotments of households that experience an income loss of $100 or more during a given month.

Section 506—Resource Limitations

Increases asset limits and changes the treatment of financial resources to reflect actual availability.

These provisions would raise the liquid asset limit applied to individuals and households to two or more without elderly members from $1,500 to $2,250. Similarly, it would raise the limit applied to households of two or more with an elderly member from $3,000 to $3,500. The exempt value of a non-excluded vehicle would be increased from $4,500 to $5,500.

Section 507—Personal Property Limitations

Non-liquid asset requirements would be waived for up to four months in ares of high unemployment and high farm foreclosures.

Section 508—Food Stamp Information

Requires states to provide reasonable program information to potential recipient populations and matches dollar for dollar state expenditures for this purpose.

Section 509—Authorization and Appropriations

Authorizes the appropriations of such sums as necessary for fiscal years ending September 30, 1986 through September 30, 1989.

Subtitle B—Child Nutrition Program

Section 502—Summer Food Service Program for Children

Permits private non-profit agencies to sponsor summer food service program and reduces restrictions for participation.

Section 521—School Breakfast

Increases subsidy to school breakfast program by 6¢ per meal.

Subtitle C—Food Distribution Programs

Section 530—Commodity Supplemental Food

Extends for four years the authorization for the Commodity Supplemental Food Program.

Section 531—Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program

Extends Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program (TEFPA) through 1989.

Subtitle D—Effecitve Date

Section 540—Effective Date

Title V shall be effective on October 1, 1985.

[NOTE.—This bill does not address the dairy program and in the absence of legislative action, the support price for milk will revert to a minimum support level of 75 percent of parity on October 1, 1985. However, it is the intent of the author to include a dairy program consistent with the commodity provisions of Title I.]

OPPORTUNITY TO CORRECT TRADE IMBALANCE LOST IN THE DUST AT BONN

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, the first 5 months' U.S. record of food imports flies in the face of surplus domestic grain supplies. In fact, at this rate, the United States, the world's best producer of food grains, will import 20 billion dollars' worth of food products, nearly half as much as we will export, half the value of what we export. Trade barriers and the dollar value imbalance clearly are at the root of this particular food import flood.

Yet the opportunity to address this problem and resolve this trade imbalance, the $124 billion imbalance of trade in 1984, has been lost in the dust of Bonn. Clearly, the cosmetic approach to the problems of the international economy needs substantive answers, not euphemisms. The President's failure at Bonn to make any progress is yet another blow to our agricultural economy.

Mr. Speaker, I am inserting a copy of an article by Lee Egerstrom of the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch which documents the magnitude of this problem. The article is as follows:

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch, Apr. 29, 1985]

DESPITE SURPLUSES, U.S. SETS RECORD AG IMPORTS

(By Lee Egerstrom)

Back up 20 or more years and speakers pandering to farm groups would tell demeaning stories about city slickers. One favorite was in the form of a question, "What do we need farmers for when we have so many grocery stores?"

That used to be funny. It isn't anymore. And not simply because Northern commodity producers have become pretty slick themselves.

Charles Goode, an economist with USDA's Economic Research Service, has concluded that America set a record for agricultural trade in fiscal 1984, but the record was for imports.

Farm product imports reached $18.9 billion in the fiscal year, an increase of $2.5 billion over 1983. That is shocking in this land of food abundance even though imports of non-agricultural products climbed to $295 billion compared with $229 billion the previous year.

All imports in the first half of the current fiscal year are well ahead of last year's pace. Agricultural imports during the first five months of this year—October through February—were valued at $8.2 billion compared with $7.5 billion a year ago.

Some of this is attributed to increased imports of citrus and vegetables after two rough winters in Florida that have reduced domestic production. And in some cases, such as coffee, rubber, fruit juices, vegetable oils and cocoa products, the increase in import value results from higher world prices.

But Goode said some of the increase is directly attributed to the working of world markets, with the strong U.S. dollar giving domestic products a substantial price disadvantage against commodities from other countries.

This was highlighted earlier this year when Cargill announced it was bringing a load of Argentine wheat to Southeastern ports. It canceled the deal, but it noted that it was economically feasible.

But Argentina is only one cereal grain exporting country where trading prices undercut U.S. commodities that are denominated in dollars.

While few people outside the grain trade have been watching, Canada has shipped 13,362 metric tons of wheat to U.S. markets since October. And Goode said one metric ton of wheat has come into the U.S. market from Asia.

In the previous year, a paltry 198 tons of wheat came over the border from Canada.

Meanwhile, Sweden has shipped us 113,000 metric tons of oats in the first five months of this year, compared with 15,000 tons a year ago. And Finland increased its oats exports to America from 44,000 metric tons a year ago to 100,100 tons through the first five months.

Barley, another cash grain important to the farm economy in Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas, also is coming into the domestic market on boats.

Goode said New Zealand has shipped us 15,000 metric tons so far this year. There was no barley trading a year ago. And Canada has increased its barley shipments to the U.S. from 18,000 metric tons a year ago to 49,000 tons so far this year.

At the midway point of the current fiscal year, agricultural imports are on pace to reach $20 billion. That will be better than half the value of U.S. farm exports, according to current projections, and it may be close to two-thirds the value of what we sell.

Farm exports have been a major anchor for the U.S. economy and its balance of trade during the past 15 years. But the farm contribution is declining and is being dwarfed by the total trade imbalance.

Just what will happen to farm trade in the last six months of the current year is difficult to predict. The segmented soybean market suggests a lot of vegetable oil and related products will be imported, and it's likely the U.S. Customs Service will hire cowboys to handle traffic at the borders.

Domestic livestock production is being cut back sharply after continual poor cattle and pork cycles. This suggests there will be higher meat prices later this year. But will any strengthening of prices attract more imports of livestock and processed meats?

Goode said beef imports were among the few commodities to actually decline in the previous fiscal year, falling 16 percent to $1.2 billion. He expects a rebound this year.

And hogs and pork products valued at $703 million—a boost of 10 percent—came into the U.S. market last year. They are likely to be even higher this year despite U.S.-Canadian trade talks aimed at slowing the stampede.

Imports of oilseeds and vegetable oil products jumped 52 percent last year to $796 million, and there are more on the way. The domestic soybean market can't be called either bullish or bearish; rather, it is bizarre.

Jack Cole of Cole Commodities in Minneapolis notes that the nearby contracts for soybean oil show that food companies and other users are trying to pull soybeans out of storage and into the market with daily price increases of late.

Meanwhile, the price for soybeans have been steadily falling, and the price for soybean meal has been falling through the floor. "There is obvious tight supply for oil, but nobody can do anything with the meal," he said.

Prices trail off for all major grains and remain stagnant on soybeans for contracts on distant delivery months that will include the crops now being planted.

"Commodity markets are a scare market," said Cole. "Scare me. Tell me what I better buy today because I won't be able to buy it tomorrow."

At the start of this planting season, the markets are scary but the supplies aren't. Not with Canada, Sweden, Finland, New Zealand, the Common Market, Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia, Australia and most of South America standing by with surpluses of grains, oilseeds and livestock, and currency values that let them put goods on our grocery shelves.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrows, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1617. An act to authorize appropriations to the Secretary of Commerce for the programs of the National Bureau of Standards for fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 1617), "An act to authorize appropriations to the Secretary of Commerce for the programs of the National Bureau of Standards for fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. GORTON, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. RIEGLE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

OBSERVING 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF REA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, in the beginning, when God created the heavens and the Earth, the Earth was a formless wasteland, and darkness covered the abyss, while a mighty wind swept over the waters.

Then God said, "Let there be light," and there was light. God saw how good the light was. God then separated the light from the darkness. God called the light "day," and the darkness He called "night," thus evening came, and morning followed—the first day.

And on the sixth day God created to His image and likeness man, and then woman followed, with the charge to have dominion over all the creatures of the land, and to subdue the Earth to their needs.

Here my friends began the quest for fire and light, for God clearly defined darkness from light, and it was for man to bring light into the darkness. Eventually man conceived light that would shine upon the darkness from fire and he utilized his genius to use his intellect and the tools at his disposal to make light, and thus we had electricity for those who could avail themselves of this great discovery—here my friends was the birth of REA—the Rural Electrification Administration to allow all who would, in partnership with their Government to have light, regardless of where they lived or their station in life—if we were to take all of time, from creation to now, and frame it in the space of 365 days—the last 50 years would be but the last 30 seconds of the 365th day—so we celebrate.

Mr. Speaker, I am so very glad to have this chance to participate in observing the 50th anniversary of the REA. This is an important observance for many reasons * * * and one of them is the fact that when this Congress makes decisions about the program in the future, our Members should be aware of what the REA has meant to rural America.

A lot of people these days do not remember what life was like a half century ago in areas without electric service. When we look back to those days, most of us who grew up in small towns and on farms may remember best the many good things about rural life. But for many people, there was another side to that rural experience. It was a side of hardships, isolation, and doing without many of the things that were part of everyday life for other Americans.

Not long ago, the Texas electric cooperatives went around to talk to some of our people who remembered the old days. One of the stories they collected for their oral history project came from a gentleman named Fain McDougal, a retired rural cooperative manager, at Cuero in south-central Texas. He was talking at one point about a conversation he had many years ago with a child from a family that had recently gotten electric service. Let me give you, word for word, what Mr. McDougal had to say:

> One little girl from up at Yoakum says, "You know, when we first started to school we talked funny, and they made fun of us and the way we dressed. And now we've got lights, radio and television. And we dress like everybody and talk like everybody else. They can't tell us from town kids."

There was another interview in that series I want to give you briefly. Mrs. Ruth Lane of San Angelo. She had this to say about life in the country after the power lines came:

> Now we have been put within the mainstream of American life . . . and I hope future generations can realize how much it has meant to rural America.

The rural electrification movement that began 50 years ago has, indeed, done a great deal for rural people and for our country. It has transformed the quality of rural life. It has made it possible for our farmers to become the world's most efficient producers of food and fiber. And it has been a spur for the development of thousands of new nonfarm businesses and industries and new community facilities in rural communities all across the country.

These are reasons enough to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the program.

We should be celebrating the accomplishments of the program and its leaders, both on the national level and in every local cooperative where people work together to make power systems work to meet their needs. We should be remembering people like President Roosevelt, who created the REA, and the great leaders in Congress who wrote the program legislation and kept it updated to meet changing needs down through the years. We should be noting the great service of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association down through the years.

But celebrating the past is not enough. This is also a time when we should be looking to the future. Times and conditions have changed since the REA was created half a century ago. But there are still great needs and future challenges out there, and the job facing the Rural Electric Program in the years ahead remains a major national challenge. The Rural Electric Program must continue to be an engine for making sure that rural America and its people have a fair chance to participate in future national economic growth. And to fulfill that initial mandate of "Let there be light."

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] at this time.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I particularly want to thank him for taking this special order.

Fifteen years ago we held a special order in this House, commemorating the 35th anniversary of the rural electric cooperative. It is hard to believe it was that long ago, but we had a very successful special order, and some 50 different Members expressed their appreciation for the service that REA had rendered to their districts and to this Nation.

Today, as we celebrate the 50th anniversary, I think it a moment for everyone in America to pause and thank the Lord for the blessing that program has given to rural America. It is terribly important what it has done for the countryside, that at that time had little hope and little promise because it was a dark and dreary landscape at times.

I suppose less than 10 percent of the Nation's people were being served with some kind of a central station electric service. Now it is amazing to realize how many people actually are served by the Rural Electrification Program.

In my district, I have two of the largest in the State of Texas, and some that would be classified as largest in the country. I know what it means to those rural people to have electricity, which they had been deprived of all the years.

The program was started in 1935 by Franklin Roosevelt. We really thought at the time it was a gamble. Could you actually build a cooperative line, a system that the farmers could pool their resources together and get enough service for them to collect money to pay the bill? Could they pay back the money they had borrowed? And it was not certain at all that we could do that.

Yet, though we had a chance to do away with the little old, bitty 25-watt bulb and put in some regular electric systems, they took that gamble, and rural America has not been the same since that date.

I take particular pride in calling to the Members' attention today the fact that the Congressman we had in our district at that time—this was 1937, was the then-new Congressman Lyndon Baynes Johnson. He was one of the greatest promoters of rural electrification in the country. He started the Perdinales Electric Cooperative, at a time when they were told that the land was too bare, the farms and the ranches too far apart, there were not enough people that can subscribe and pay for it, and actually the administration had turned them down.

Then Congressman Lyndon Johnson kept insisting that he had to transform the whole countryside, and electricity was the only vehicle they had to do it.

He went to work, and he finally convinced President Roosevelt, along with the national REA officers, that they would take this gamble out for the REA.

Today, the Perdinales Electric Cooperative is probably the first or the second largest one in the State of Texas. There is no question now; no gamble about it. It is so large now that their problem is one of distribution, of generation, where and how can they get the power to serve the people who they must serve in order to take care of their customers.

Well now, that is a success story, and the same is true of the Blue Bonnet Electric Cooperative down in Giddings—that county, Lee County, just left my district, but it is also a very successful program.

Do I know that those farmers and ranchers actually scratched out a living from their little farm, 50 years ago, to embark on a common cause: that is, electricity.

I want to yield to some of the other Members here, because I know Members want to participate in this special order. I want to call the people's attention to the fact that in the book that has been written about 1½, 2 years ago, about President Johnson.

The author took several liberties that we could take offense to in our district, but some of the chapters in that book were marvelous reading. One chapter dealt with the hill country; how bare and unproductive it was, how the people had gone there because they had no other land, but they could not make a living, and how the women in particular had to do all the work by hand. That meant going to the creek to get water. That meant scrubbing their clothes by hand. That meant washing, individually, every garment they had. That meant toting buckets of water over and over again, and all the other farm chores that were just a matter of physical ordeal.

Yet when they had electricity, that put a new life to them. Now this program is terribly important to this country, and we must not weaken it; we must find ways to see it strengthened.

I want to say to you that we must not allow the Rural Electrification Program to be set aside in this budget, or by this administration.

Many millions of Americans are being served by this program, and they are entitled to the consideration of their Government, and I think this Congress must be certain of that.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I would advise the gentleman that the time being consumed now is under my special order, and the gentleman's special order will follow, so we might interchange time here from time to time.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES], chairman of the subcommittee on the Committee on Agriculture that has jurisdiction over the REA and who has done a magnificent job in guiding legislation related to REA, and has been one of the champions since his years here, since he came to Congress, and as his years as chairman of that subcommittee.

The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I commend our colleagues from Texas, Mr. DE LA GARZA and Mr. PICKLE, for their leadership and efforts in providing this opportunity to recognize and celebrate the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the Rural Electrification Administration.

At the height of the Great Depression our Nation's rural population was caught in a vicious web of poverty, unemployment, and despair. Rural America lacked the basic necessities to meet the challenge of pulling itself out of a situation which threatened its very existence. Then, 50 years ago, under the leadership of President Franklin Roosevelt, hope became a reality with the establishment of the REA.

As much as any other action taken during the 1930's, the electrification of rural America was responsible for holding the countryside together. I can well remember the day the lights were turned on at my family's farm in rural west Tennessee. Our lives, and those of our neighbors, were changed forever by the events which grew out of the creation of the REA.

With the expansion of the REA's mandate in 1949 to include loan assistance to rural telephone companies, rural America became a full partner on our Nation's road to progress.

In its half century of existence, the REA has provided technical assistance and long-term financing to rural electric and telephone systems throughout this country. The REA, along with thousands of rural electric and telephone cooperatives, has played a vital role in bringing the rural areas of America into the mainstream of modern life.

However, the job is not over, and the need for strong, effective REA activities continues today. It's true that 99 percent of America's farms and ranches now have access to central station electric service, and 95 percent have basic telephone service available to them. But the real challenge remains: In order to survive in today's economic environment, and in order to compete in today's climate of deregulation, rural America's needs are constantly changing and developing with the times. The question is not whether electric and telephone services are available to our rural citizens and small businesses; the question is whether these services are affordable.

Without continuing vital programs in the Rural Electrification Administration, I have serious doubts that our Nation's rural areas can stand up to the economic forces which would drive even more thousands of farmers and small businesses into bankruptcy. That's why I intend to fight this administration to the very end to save the REA from elimination, and I encourage all our colleagues to join in these efforts to protect one of the greatest institutions this Government has ever contributed toward the enrichment of its citizens.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman, and I certainly would commend the gentleman for the great work he has done in this area.

I might mention that it is so gratifying as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to go out into the countryside and to see these REA cooperatives in North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, throughout the South and the West and all of the areas of our country. I have taken it upon myself now—I mentioned it once when I was speaking to a co-op—I want to see that last pole, that last mile of line. I have seen it now. Just last month I was in Deaf Smith County, TX, and I went out to a little community named Friona, and my friend who was driving me around, I was telling him the story, the last pole, the last mile of line. He said, "Well, if you don't mind going out of the way about 5 minutes, I'll show you." That is way out in west Texas, in Deaf Smith County, and we went out. There was the last pole, the last mile of line, and it came down to a water pump that irrigated about 200 acres of grain out there. And, believe me, that was the last pole because beyond there I think I could see the Pacific Ocean. Everything from there was just flat, going west, and to me it was a beautiful sight to see against the sky, that beautiful west Texas sky, that line coming out, knowing that someone could reap, hopefully, a profit, which not too many of our farmers are doing at this time, but that there was this partnership that brought this line out there where not even a hawk was flying but yet each one benefited from it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ROWLAND].

Mr. ROWLAND. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, you and the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Tennessee have certainly painted a graphic picture of what the coming of electricity through the REA to the rural areas of our country has meant.

Mr. Speaker, in a recent newspaper article about the coming of electricity to rural America, a farmer who was giving witness in a country church was quoted as saying:

"Brothers and sisters, I want to tell you this. The greatest thing on Earth is to have the love of God in your heart. And the next greatest thing is to have electricity in your house."

When President Roosevelt signed the Rural Electrification Act on May 11, 1935, he revolutionized much of America. Until then, a large part of the country's population still did not have the electric light, let alone central heating and air conditioning. People still relied on kerosene lamps and wood-burning stoves. Many older Americans tell you that among their most vivid memories are those of constantly hauling wood and water during their younger years.

Electricity not only brought new conveniences for rural families, it brought new opportunities. Farm operations were revitalized and new businesses and industries came to town. New jobs opened up, along with a new promise for our rural communities which is still in the process of being realized.

Georgia is the birthplace of the Rural Electrification Administration. President Roosevelt himself recalled that he began to think about how to bring electricity to rural areas while staying at his cottage in Warm Springs, GA, where he had to pay four times the amount he paid for electricity at his estate in Hyde Park, NY.

At the time REA went into effect, only one out of every 10 farms had electric service. Even after REA came into being, rural residents had to struggle to get electricity. But within a few years, they overcame all obstacles and the lights were turned on throughout the country.

Today, rural communities are still not getting an even break. Based on the amount they contribute in motor fuel taxes, rural areas deserve more Federal road funds. Many of our largest cities have grown too big too fast, and the blight that resulted has led to a range of social problems. The more rapid development of rural America can help alleviate those problems, and help improve the quality of life for urban and rural residents alike.

The REA has paved the way for that development.

Congratulations to the Rural Electrification Program on its 50th anniversary.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

□ 1520

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota, a very prominent member of our committee and a friend of REA [Mr. DASCHLE].

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me and I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER].

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from South Dakota for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the gentleman in the well, the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee, for taking out this special order.

My district, of course, adjoins that of the gentleman from South Dakota. Unlike the gentleman, I do not represent an entire State, but almost. At least so it seems.

According to some statistics, my district is the most rural in the country, at least depending on how you measure it. Certainly there has been no program that has helped to create the economic backbone of my district or of the gentleman's or of many rural districts in the country than the REA Program.

I would just like to associate myself with the remarks of all the gentleman who have been participating in this special order to say that this is a great program that deserves our support. I would like to work with everybody on both sides of the aisle in making sure that we maintain the program in spite of an onslaught from the administration in the Federal budget. That is not a program that I think can be reasonably cut.

I would like to compliment everybody that has been a part of helping to build this program and make it what it is for rural America.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored and privileged to be a part of today's special order to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program.

Many of my colleagues will no doubt concentrate their remarks on the actual historical events surrounding the enactment of the REA program. My remarks will take a different tack. I want to concentrate these couple of minutes on my experience with the people who live with rural electrification every day, the people of rural Minnesota.

When I first came to Congress in 1981 I knew of rural electrification. My hometown of Slayton, MN, located in the southwest corner of the State, is located in a farming area. My high school friends from the farm were totally dependent on rural electrification. I grew up with their memories of having electric and telephone service at a reasonable cost miles away from our town.

Those memories I brought to this body, but my real lesson on the importance of the program has been learned the last few years. Working directly with the local cooperative members, listening to their concerns, successes, and hopes for the future gives me a personal insight into the REA people.

We started holding annual meetings on REA, inviting the board members of each cooperative and their general managers in the district, and we spent the evening talking about the program. There, I heard some of the history of rural electrification coming to rural areas, bringing with it the accessibility of modern conveniences to our producers of food and fiber. Just as important, though, was the close knit bond of trust and friendship we have developed at these meetings. We put politics aside and got down to talking about the real problems and solutions rural electric subscribers face daily.

I think these annual town meetings are unique among projects my colleagues have initiated in this Chamber. Through this sense of working together, hearing each other out, we have developed a strong bond between us.

I guess what I am trying to say is that it is the people in the rural electric cooperative movement who have made the program a success, and allows us to celebrate its 50th anniversary today. I can honestly say, that as a group, there are no finer individuals than those who are a part of the nearly 1,000 member-owned rural electric systems in the country. Those member-owned systems in Minnesota have provided me with an insight into the importance of the program I will never forget. If I would have come to Congress to do nothing more than work for the interests of the rural electric cooperative members, my time and effort would have been well spent.

We must now look to the challenges ahead so that in 50 years, Members of this body can celebrate the 100th anniversary of the REA program.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, in paying tribute to the Rural Electrification Program today and this week, I think it is instructive to note that the leaders of the program have had to fight day and night for survival for the past 4 years.

If it had not been for their unstinting efforts and the support of the majority of this House of Congress, the Reagan administration would have had its way and be presiding over the burial of the program at the moment when those of us who know the importance of rural electrification to America are planning to celebrate the 50th anniversary of REA.

I find it particularily disturbing to read that the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration has said that he can't support the Rural Electrification Program. I am concerned that instead of carrying out the responsibilities of his office, and to fairly administer the laws of the land, he is more concerned with devising ways and means of weakening and dismantling REA.

The Rural Electrification Program is looked upon as one of the greatest government-to-people kinds of program that has ever existed. It is the envy of Third and Fourth World governments around the world.

And the reason is quite simple. It is a great program, that was administered over most of its years by a dedicated and exceptionally good staff, and it was put into effect by thousands of determined and hard-working people in the rural areas of 46 States. It is their work that we are paying tribute to here today, and I believe that the leaders working in the Rural Electrification Program today have done, and are doing a great and patriotic service to their Nation by refusing to buckle under the administration's efforts to destroy the program.

I would call upon the administration, though they have refused to allocate a dime toward commemorating this great program and its golden anniversary, to abandon their policies of trying to systematically dismantle the REA, and recognize its value to the country—to strenthen its services such as those provided by the Engineering Standards Division, rather than trying to palm them off as unnecessary activities of government.

Fifty years ago, the President signed Executive Order 7037 and gave rural Americans the opportunity to enjoy the benefits of electricity and modern living. Forty-nine years ago, the very Chamber echoed with the thunder of debate as the Rural Electrification Act came before the House for consideration.

Even then, though rural Americans were living under disgraceful conditions, there were those who tried to deny them programs that would correct these conditions. Rural electrification has always had its enemies. And it aways will. We have been right in our support and maintenance of the REA and its program. It has been, and will continue to be, a foundation of hope and progress in the future for rural America.

Mr. Speaker, I also take the floor today to highlight the importance of the Rural Electrification Administration in another important area of rural America. That area is the assistance provided in rural communities for rural telephone service.

Mr. Speaker, the establishment of the REA Telephone Program in 1949 was an important milestone for rural America. Because of the depression and the unavailability of loan funds to maintain the small telephone systems that serve rural areas, the number of American farms with telephone service declined. By 1949, only 38 percent of farms had telephones.

With REA money, the rebuilding of these systems has progressed steadily. Many telephone systems started with 8- and 10-party lines, an operator and crank telephones. Over the years, these have been upgraded considerably. By 1983, approximately 96 percent of farms had telephone service. About 85 percent of customers served by REA borrowers have single party service.

But, the job is not done. REA money continues to be needed. An estimated 260,000 miles of cable is exposed to the extreme weather conditions prevalent in rural areas and must be buried. Rural Telcos are exchanging their older electromechanical switches for the new digital technology at a rate that will leave them far behind their urban counterparts. About 15 percent of REA telephone customers are still on party-line service—including 4- 5-, and 8-party lines. And the Bureau of the Census estimated in its 1983 annual housing survey, that over 10 percent of households—as opposed to farms—in non-SMA areas do not have access to telephone service.

Resolving these problems and maintaining affordable service will not be easy for rural Telcos. Deregulation is pushing telephone rates up, especially in rural areas. Keeping a strong REA will be essential.

In addition to providing funds for upgrading service, REA has provided many services to help small telephone systems. Such services are provided by the telecommunications engineering and standards division. Using feedback from borrowers about technical problems, REA's engineers work with manufacturers and consultants to design new products to address these problems. Thus, the private sector is stimulated to manufacture new products tailored to the special needs of rural telephone service. Such products are now widely used by REA borrowers and nonborrowers alike. Some are used around the world. The REA-established uniform equipment in construction standards are also widely used.

Finally, I want to point out the unique, national impact of the REA Telephone Program. It is partly because of REA that we now have nearly universal telephone service. This House has recognized the importance of a universal telephone network to the economy as a whole. Clearly, the service is more valuable if the caller is able to reach anyone in the country in rural or urban areas. Businesses rely more and more on the telephone for their transactions. When telephone service is available to all, everyone benefits.

In the interest of rural citizens, in the interest of the Nation, both the REA programs and its telephone program must continue.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his cooperation always in the endeavors that we pursue in behalf of bringing light to rural America.

I might add that another thing, the bounty which has come to those people living in rural America has been shared because, through the private or public, I guess you might say, association; the National Rural Electric Cooperatives Association. They share the technology; they share their bounty around the world. I have seen some of their activities in the Philippines and Central America and Africa. They have tried to bring to other areas of the world that which we have so ably mastered in this country.

That beautiful partnership between the people organized in partnership with the Government, using the resources, using their own resources, because when we talk about tax money, it is not tax money; it is yours and my tax dollars. The peoples' money. Sometimes the people wisely put some added money of their own to that which they have submitted to the Government to put it together to work for the benefit of both.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, following on the chairman's last remarks, the spirit of cooperation has been the secret of the REA movement from its inception in 1936. The Federal Government undertook a project to allow neighbors working with neighbors; farmers with farmers. Rural citizens with not quite urban citizens, but small towns and small communities to work together, jointly with their Government in order to bring about a dream. A dream of area coverage or of universal service. The dream that all Americans, whether they live in the country or whether they live in town, could have central station power. Or, as later, telephone service.

The concept of area coverage was born, and I submit today that it has served this Nation well. The Federal Government's involvement in and its assistance to the electric utilities dates back to that early inception. I think we need to draw one distinction at this point as we celebrate the 50th anniversary.

In the beginning, the so-called investor-owned utilities fought the REA. Today, we have no one in the electric utility industry fighting that which the House Agriculture Committee and others who we have heard from today, are suggesting for the future; the next 50 years of rural electrification.

Today, 50 years later, rural electric cooperatives are still operating in the areas which other utilities cannot or will not serve for very good economic reasons. Furthermore, by providing low-interest, insured loans to telephone systems which could not afford or qualify for commercial loans, the REA Telephone Loan Program brought telephone service to those same areas.

Given the tremendous positive role that agriculture and other rural-based resource industries play in the economy of our Nation, and the fact that rural areas are typically the most difficult and expensive to serve for both electric and telephone utilities, there is a strong and valid reason for continued Federal assistance to REA.

I would hasten to point out that no one within the rural electric movement is suggesting that they should be exempt from the Budget Acts; that they should be exempt from what is necessary to bring about a balanced budget for our Nation as a whole.

We acknowledge that there are some costs involved. There always has been a cost involved to bring electrical service to rural, sparsely settled areas. I think that anyone who will examine closely the results of the last 50 years would come to the same conclusion: It has been a good investment, Mr. Speaker, as you have suggested, of our tax dollars. They are our dollars; the charge we have in the Congress is to make those investments and make them pay dividends for the Nation as a whole.

Today, 98 percent of our farms are electrified, but that does not mean the job for REA is over. Population density is still low, and in some areas getting lower. The cost of getting electric service to our Nation's farms and ranches is still high today. The REA still has a vital role to play looking ahead to the future.

Mr. Speaker, I know as one who spent 9½ years of my adult life involved in the Rural Electric Program, as a manager of a rural electric cooperative; as one who has seen time and time again the leadership of our rural areas come together, look at the problems at hand and put together a solution that is good for them and good for our Nation. Those problems that some talk about today with rural electrification that prompt some to suggest that the days are over.

I think that once again we will see the leadership of rural electrification throughout this Nation come together, provide for future responses, whether it be another CFC, a self-help lending program to assist ourselves in doing that which we cannot do individually, or whatever it might be, the term that our cooperatives like to use is, "We are owned by those we serve," and Mr. Speaker, I think your comments suggest that rural electric cooperatives are owned by all Americans, and I hope all who are listening and watching and will be reading and observing the day that you commemorate today with this special order, that everyone will feel a sense of pride in that their small part of this investment has been a good investment for them and for all of America.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman. He is part of our celebration in that he has been an integral part as a manager of a co-op. I wholeheartedly concur with him that America should be proud that that is our investment, that is our return, not a CD of 9 percent, or investment of 12 percent, or whatever; but, rather, it has been an investment in enhancing the quality of life for Americans, of enhancing the opportunities in rural America, of enhancing the economic growth in rural America.

This cannot be measured in dollars and cents, but I assure the gentleman it is a lot more than 15- or 20- or 30-percent return. For his participation, I think we should give him a special commendation, since he has been an integral part of the process that we legislate. He has worked with the REA as a co-op manager.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON], a member of our committee.

Mr. EMERSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in paying tribute to the Rural Electrification Administration on the occasion of its 50th anniversary. I thank my chairman for making this tribute possible.

When the REA was created in 1935, only 10 percent of the Nation's rural families had electricity in their homes and farms. Since then rural America has come to enjoy a vastly improved standard of living and productivity on America's farms has increased many times over. Nearly 1,000 member-owned electric systems provide power to more than 25 million people in 46 States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. Without the REA, it is quite possible that many of these people would still be without electric service today.

The task of providing electricity to rural areas has never been an easy one. Our rural electric systems operate and maintain nearly half of this country's power lines, but they reach an average of only five consumers along a mile of line. In addition, lines must often cover rough terrain and remote areas where accessibility for maintenance crews is very difficult. These were the factors that prevented electricity from reaching rural America in the early part of this century, and in order to overcome these difficulties, rural America forged a partnership with the Federal Government that continues to be the linchpin of our rural electric system today.

Mr. Speaker, that it is why I believe it is so important that we pause today on the 50th anniversary of the REA to remember how far we have come and to think about where we can go from here if we continue this worthwhile commitment. Because there is electricity, farmers will continue to increase their productivity to better feed a hungry world. Because there is electricity, new industries we hope will continue to locate in rural areas, providing jobs and improving the economic climate of these areas. Because there is electricity, rural America will grow and diversify both economically and socially in ways no one ever dreamed of a few decades ago. And because there is electricity, Americans can now recognize that rural living offers both an attractive and desirable lifestyle in which to work and raise a family.

Over the years, the REA has helped many dreams become a reality. As we move forward in our efforts to improve the rural economy, there can be no doubt that the REA will continue to be an important key to our success.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI].

Mr. KANJORSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I am pleased to follow my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri on the opposite side of the aisle, because I, too, would like to say that I represent not a rural area, but a Pennsylvania area with a very small rural population and a very small part of the aspect of rural electrification has affected my district, but those citizens of my district realize the importance of electrification and the telephone to the rural areas of America.

We in Pennsylvania, although not having taken part in much of the subsidies that the Rural Electrification Administration has provided, appreciate what it has done for the rural farmer and the rural communities in America, and I, as one Member representing a district that is not particularly affected by the rural needs of America, pledge my support for the continued type of development of the infrastructure of America such as rural electrification.

But I would like to say one further thing, and commend my fellow Members from the South and the West, and many of the rural areas of America, that this is an example of a national policy program that developed in the days of the New Deal that have established themselves as not only good thought but well worked programs that have served all America, and that as we move through this Congress and the future Congresses, particularly with the change in philosophy that has occurred in America, and sometimes the attempt to throw the baby out with the bathwater, I would say that some of us in Pennsylvania, and New York, and the industrial Northeast, and the industrial central part of America will be asking you to support programs that will offer subsidies to our area of the country, too, because they, too, will reflect upon the needs of the people in the cities and the urban areas of America.

As we pledge to support you in the South, and the West, and in rural America, we would ask your indulgence to consider some of the philosophical needs of the people in the cities and the urban parts of America, and if we can put aside our political disagreements, and sometimes our philosophical misunderstandings, and realize that a public policy that serves America totally, completely, as REA has these 50 years, it can serve all Americans well, and those in need, whether they be in urban America or rural America, should have the interest and attention of this Congress. I ask you in the future to give us that type of consideration.

I would like to offer on the part of Pennsylvania and my constituents congratulations to the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman for his contribution and concur in his philosophy and thinking, and how gratifying it is for me to tell the gentleman that that is exactly what we have been doing; that we have been working with our urban colleagues.

As a matter of fact, it was trying to bring what the inner city had, or the urban area had, to rural America to make us equal, and not only with power and light but with the telephone. I not too long ago remember someone telling me: "Why should not a grandmother in the last hollow in the mountains in West Virginia not be able to call her grandchild who lives in California? Why?"

Well, through the REA we have brought the rural telephone to the menu, to see that last pole out in that last hollow in West Virginia. We have brought that grandmother, as you see the ads on the television, to talk to her grandaughter. A little hollow in West Virginia has as much right to talk to a grandaughter in California as someone in New York City, or Atlanta, or a big town like Mission, TX, which is my hometown.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for America's rural electrification program. As someone who grew up on a farm in northeast Kansas, I know firsthand what rural electrification has meant to the farms and rural communities across this great land. Clyde Ellis, the first general manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, put it best:

> The wires which tied the houses of rural people together also seemed to unite their spirits. Beginning in the early days and growing through the years, there has been some unusual quality about the rural electrification program which has drawn people of diverse political and social views together in a common purpose.

With the passage of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, the Federal Government undertook the challenge of assuring that the farmers, ranchers, businesses, and individual residents of rural America would have access to reliable, central station electric service at costs reasonably comparable to those charged to consumers in the urban and suburban areas of the Nation.

To pursue this goal, Congress created the Rural Electrification Administration [REA], now an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. In the 53-year period from 1881, when the first central generating system went into service, to 1936, when REA was created, only 10 percent of all farms in the United States were receiving electric service. In its near half-century of existence, REA has provided technical assistance and long-term financing to rural electric and telephone systems throughout the Nation, and thus has played a vital role in bringing the rural areas of our Nation into the mainstream of modern life. The success of this effort is well established by the fact that some 99 percent of the Nation's farms and ranches now have access to central station electric service. Also attesting to the quality and soundness of the Federal investment in rural electrification and telephone is the fact that of the more than $20 billion in loans and loan guarantees made since the inception of the program, losses have been less than $50,000—a peerless record by anyone's standard. Electric power encourages industrial and economic development in rural areas, and results in a rural market of electrical appliances and equipment estimated at more than $1 billion per year.

The REA loan program continues to be a vital element in providing reliable electric service to rural areas at affordable rates. Rural electric cooperatives are still operating in the areas which other utilities could not, or would not, serve, as was the case when the REA program was created nearly 50 years ago. Co-ops, by and large, serve thinly populated areas. They have built and maintain 50 percent of the Nation's electric lines, but account for less than 10 percent of its total electricity sales. The average electric cooperative's revenue per mile of installed line is about 8 percent of that enjoyed by the average power company, and their consumer density is just 13 percent of the typical investor-owned utility. At the same time, however, the co-ops' investment per consumer is 162 percent of the investment of the power companies. Adding to these handicaps is the fact that the growth in co-op consumers' demand for electricity has now fallen to between 2 percent and 4 percent per year, compared with 8 percent to 12 percent a decade ago.

All of this, combined with enormously higher utility construction and operating costs, has contributed to the difficult financial and economic conditions in which electric cooperatives now operate. And most of all, this is why the preservation of a stable and adequate REA lending program as the centerpiece of rural electric financing is so important to the future survival of rural electrification.

Mr. Speaker, in my home State of Kansas, the first electric loan under the Rural Electrification Act was to the Cooperative Electric Power & Light Co. of Iola. The first rural electric cooperative in Kansas to energize, however, was the Brown-Atchison Cooperative Association, headquartered in Holton, which is located in the Second Congressional District. Special ceremonies marking the energizing of 88 miles of line took place on April 1, 1938. The Kansas Electric Cooperatives, Inc., was formed on August 18, 1941. Membership in this group has grown to include all 37 electric distribution cooperatives that served consumer/members in Kansas. Today, there are 35 distribution cooperatives in the membership of KEC, plus the two generation and transmission cooperatives, Sunflower EC and KepCo.

In addition, REA loans to telephone borrowers in Kansas provide modern telephone service for an estimated 141,377 rural subscribers over 42,582 miles of line. When the REA telephone loan program was authorized by Congress in 1949, only 68.3 percent of the farms in Kansas had telephones, and much of this was obsolete service. Today, more than 96 percent of the State's 74,000 farms, as well as many rural homes and businesses, have telephones, and a much greater proportion is modern dial service. The first REA telephone loan in the State of Kansas was approved on April 17, 1951, to the W.E.G. Telephone, Inc., of the community of Gardner.

Mr. Speaker, in closing let me just say that I believe the multitude of benefits and opportunities that the rural electric and telephone systems have provided to rural America, and, in particular, to northeast Kansas, cannot be overestimated. These programs have changed untold numbers of rural lives for the better. The many good men and women of the Rural Electrification Administration truly have been doing outstanding work over the past 50 years, and they deserve our thanks, commendations, and continued support.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for his leadership in this area, and I thank him for giving me the opportunity to participate in this program today.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

(Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Chairman DE LA GARZA and Mr. PICKLE for scheduling this special order commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration.

In the early 1930's, South Carolina leaders knew that if the State was ever to regain its position of leadership in this country, its rural areas must be brought into the 20th century.

Up until this time, electricity was confined to the towns and cities where power could serve large groups of people over small areas of land. The power companies said it was uneconomical for them to serve rural areas.

President Roosevelt during this time created the Rural Electrification Administration by Executive order to provide funds for electrical power to rural America.

Even though President Roosevelt was a man of great vision, he probably did not realize he had initiated one of the most successful programs of all times.

Today in South Carolina, there are 20 nonprofit electric distribution cooperatives serving rural and suburban areas, with 30,000 members scattered over 47,000 miles of powerlines or nearly 70 percent of the total land area of the State.

When the REA telephone loan program was authorized by Congress in 1949, only 8.5 percent of the farms in South Carolina had telephones and much of this was obsolete service.

Today that amount is 95 percent and REA loans to telephone borrowers in South Carolina provide modern telephone service for an estimated 172,000 rural subscribers over 22,155 miles of line.

Members of the South Carolina electric and telephone cooperatives, and all those across this Nation, are a living testimonial to the American spirit and ingenuity.

When others said there was no way to do it, these men and women brought rural South Carolina into the 20th century. America is a better place today because of them.

But now rural America is facing the most serious economic crisis since the Great Depression, with 1984 showing an overwhelming number of farm foreclosures and business failures.

This is no time to compound an already critical situation by overburdening rural electric and telephone systems. They are essential elements in promoting and sustaining an improved rural economy.

We must continue the mission REA was charged with 50 years ago—to provide adequate, reliable, and affordably priced electric and telephone service to the rural consumer.

The job of REA is not finished.

For instance, in the telephone program, many plants date from the 1950's when the REA first began taking effect and now need to be replaced.

Most telephone cooperatives cannot obtain commercial loans, since REA holds the first lien on the assets of its borrowers. The REA can accommodate some of these liens, but in recent years has been reluctant to do so. Because of this restrictive REA policy in the granting of lien accommodations, commercial lenders are unwilling to make loans to REA borrowers.

As well, the telecommunications marketplace is changing constantly, and rural America should not be denied an opportunity to share in the telecommunications explosion.

Mr. Speaker, all Federal programs should be required to prove their merit. I believe the REA has and continues to be an American success story.

Rural electric and telephone cooperatives have become a national resource providing us all with a higher standard of living and a better way of life. We must work to keep the cooperatives viable.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, the REA has printed a book entitled "The Next Greatest Thing," depicting the 50 years of the REA, and I want to give a quote from whence the title came. A farmer giving witness in a rural Tennessee church in the early 1940's finished his words by saying this:

> Brothers and sisters, I want to tell you this. The greatest thing on earth is to have the love of God in your heart, and the next greatest thing is to have electricity in your house.

Mr. Speaker, I quote a farmer from rural Tennessee who shall remain unnamed.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 50th anniversary of rural electrification in America. For rural America, this is not just an anniversary of an event to be marked on a calendar each year. It is a celebration of a beginning.

The bringing of electricity to America's plains, its valleys and its hills marked the beginning of a new America.

When President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed an Executive order creating the Rural Electrification Administration May 11, 1935, he lit the spark for the raging fire of change to sweep this country. Sometimes the fire moved slowly, creeping into crevices of doubt and opposition. The first fire break it jumped was the U.S. House of Representatives. This bill establishing REA as an agency squeezed out of Representative Sam Rayburn's committee by one vote.

One vote determined the difference between darkness and light in rural America. One vote put electricity into homes where children squinted by lamplight to quench the desire to learn, to reach horizons beyond the darkness.

One vote started the journey toward eliminating drudgery on the family farm. Without that vote, how long would farm families have been letting the bucket down into the well and drawing it out by rope, then carrying the filled buckets to the iron pots and tin tubs to scrub clothes by hand? How long would women have stood for hours lifting the hot irons out of the coals? How long would they have stoked and fed the firebox to keep the woodstove going in the dead heat of summer to preserve food for their families to eat the coming winter?

Without that one vote, where would American agriculture be? How long would it have been before dairy farmers could have switched from milking by hand to electrical milk machines? How long would it have been before the milk was pumped directly into temperature-controlled vats free of bacteria?

Where would we be had President Roosevelt not come to Warm Springs, GA, and realized that his electricity bill there was more than at his estate in Hyde Park? Where would we be without his recognition of a need and the foresight to light the spark which set the fire of rural electrification raging?

Had it not been for the foresight of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, had it not been for that one vote in committee in the U.S. House of Representatives, the light of knowledge and progress would not be shining as brightly in my home State of Georgia and in the rest of rural America. Without that light, our past 50 years might not have seen us as great a nation as we have become.

And, that is why we focus on this 50th anniversary of rural electrification.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my chairman for letting me have this opportunity to join him and others in commemorating this great anniversary.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Speaker, a lot has been said over the years about universal telephone service and about the role of the Rural Electrification Administration in helping to bring the magic of the talking wire to the back roads and rural farms of this great Nation. It is fitting, on this, the 50th anniversary of the REA Program—and the 36th year of the REA Telephone Program—to stop and reflect on the critical importance of REA, then and now.

Most people of my generation are astonished to hear that the quality of telephone service in this land was at an alltime low following World War II. Phone service was better in the early part of the century, when Mr. Alexander Graham Bell's patents expired and newly organized independent phone systems mushroomed in every small town across America. And yet, rural America went largely unserved, simply because it cost so much to bring telephone service to large areas with too few people. But over the next 30 years, rural citizens helped themselves get into the telephone business, and by 1929, literally hundreds of systems were established. Granted, they generally had inferior equipment and provided inadequate service. But by 1945, following 15 years of depression and war, telephone service in this country was worse than it had been two decades earlier. Most of the small independents simply operated the equipment until it stopped and then went out of business.

All that began to change, when in 1949, following 4 years of effort in Congress by rural interests, President

Harry S. Truman signed the telephone amendment to the Rural Electrification Act, making long-term, low-interest loans available to rural telephone systems. That year, fewer than two out of five rural homes and businesses had telephone service of any kind, and most of what did exist was inferior multiparty. The "whoop and holler" "hello central" magneto telephone system was still very much in evidence in rural America.

There is a small telephone cooperative in my district, Santa Rosa Telephone Cooperative in Vernon, TX, with very close and compelling ties to the Rural Electrification Administration. Its story is best told in the words of its founding manager, Carl Freeling:

I spent the first 52 years of my life on a rural farm without a telephone. When my mother died, I learned of it three days after her funeral. In World War II, one of my brothers was killed in action on the day I received a letter from him. I was notified of his death by telegram seven days later.

The problems of day-to-day living were almost as great. Farm commodity prices varied so violently that it was impossible for us, living 16 miles from town, to keep up with them. We had to make a trip to town in advance to see what kind of prices our products were bringing and we delivered them the next day, often only to learn that the market had dropped and we were left with the choice of selling at a loss or not at all. Eventually I had to move to town where I could have a telephone and find out about changes in commodity prices. We couldn't get commercial telephone service in our rural area for love nor money until a bill was passed in Washington permitting the REA to loan us money to finance our own cooperative telephone system. I immediately made myself available to establish and organize a telephone cooperative in our area. We held a meeting with the mayor, the bankers and a few of the leading farmers. About 20 of us discussed the possibility of organizing an REA telephone cooperative. The newspaper, the Vernon Record, promised to give the project free publicity. That was all the encouragement I needed. I held a meeting in the vicinity of the small, rural settlement of Tolbert, TX and 75 farmers attended. After I had explained my purpose, I received not only the unanimous support of those present, but also cash deposits of five dollars and promises to pay and additional forty-five dollars each when their telephone was installed.

This enthusiastic reception gave me a shot in the arm. I held similar meetings in eight more communities with the same success * * * and the prospects for success seemed bright when our loan was approved by the REA in 1952 * * *.

Initially, the costs of service seemed prohibitive, but by offering good telephone service and using constant persuasion our system slowly grew.

Looking back over this development as I am retiring, I have never regretted any part of it. I receive constant thanks from many individuals for the profits they have gotten from their telephones. The most isolated subscribers are the happiest. It's amazing what the cooperative telephone system has done for rural America.

Carl Freeling retired from Santa Rosa, in 1968, and passed away 2 years later, but under the guidance of manager Howard Thomas, who has been with the system since 1958, the cooperative has continued to prosper. Subscriber growth is slow in west Texas, but today every Santa Rosa customer has single-party dial telephone service. Manager Thomas reports that the company today is a very successful venture serving 2,200 customers in 14 counties over an area of approximately 2,000 square miles. He says they have less than one subscriber per mile of line, and each one of those customers are very appreciative of the quality telephone service they are receiving.

Indeed, the telephone loan programs of REA have done a magnificant job of helping to bring modern, efficient telephone service to our rural citizens. And yet, as we approach the 1990's, the REA mission is as critical to rural America as it was back at the middle of this century. In 1985, close to 12 percent of America's nonmetropolitan households still do not have access to telephone service.

Fully 16 percent of the customers served by REA telephone borrowers are still communicating on multiparty; 2-, 4-, and even 8-party lines.

Deregulation has been a boon to the telephone industry, if what I read in the papers can be believed. Unfortunately, I know that that is not necessarily so, since the revenues historically gained from long-distance service by local operators is declining, and the result is hitting rural areas the hardest. Next month the Federal Communications Commission's residential subscriber line charge will take effect, adding another dollar to consumers' phone bills. This charge will rise to $2 next year. Let's hope it stops there, as the FCC has promised. Otherwise, I know quite a few rural folks won't be able to pay their phone bill.

Speaking of deregulation, the entire telephone industry is just beginning to emerge from a protracted period of drastic change—change that has left small, independent, rural telephone companies reeling. Many didn't know if they would be in business a year down the road. Now that the industry is settling into its new, deregulated phase, rural phone systems are better able to evaluate their futures, and are again lining up for help from their old friend, REA. REA is needed more than ever by small, rural telephone systems. Witness its current first-time current first-time loan applications, which total close to $90 million, or its entire backlog of loan applications of half a billion dollars.

Thanks to the ERA telephone loan programs, rural Americans pay fair rates for their local telephone service. But their local service is far different from yours or mine. Consider this: While you or I might be able to pick up the phone, and on a local call, dial any one of 3 million citizens, can you imagine what it's like calling your child's school or the hospital—long distance? REA telephone borrowers reach an average of only 5.8 customers per mile of line compared to thousands in urban America. And it costs an average of almost $2,000 per rural customer to provide the service that we have all come to take for granted. In some areas, it costs as much as $7,000 to provide a household with a phone, which is substantially more than it costs in urban areas.

Most REA borrowers could not dream of paying commercial interest rates. Few can even afford to pay the rate charged by the rural telephone bank—9.5 percent.

What about universal telephone service? To a large degree, REA is responsible for it; for your ability to pick up the phone and reach virtually anyone in the country. We can't afford to abandon our commitment—either to universal service or to rural America. Can you imagine going backwards to a time when you couldn't call a relative on the farm? It could happen. But not as long as the REA programs are intact. Having a phone in Vernon, TX makes the phone in New York City or Washington, DC more valuable, since it creates that unbroken link in a truly universal telephone network.

As modern technology continues to create new and sometimes mystifying capabilities like data transmission and computer shopping by phone, rural America must be allowed to keep pace, to constantly upgrade its telecommunications systems—first to single party, digitalized service, then to compatibility with this vast array of new technology, or run the risk of finding itself forever disenfranchised from the mainstream that is America.

Today, with the REA Program in its 50th year, and the telephone programs of REA in their 36th year, much has changed from the days when Carl Freeling met with the farmers of Tolbert, TX to organize the Santa Rosa co-op. No, modern, efficient telephone service didn't just happen. The real story of the development of rural telephony is not one story, but hundreds of individual stories. The buried cables leading to a customer's pushbutton telephone follow a path that someone walked 36 years ago to get the signatures and memberships that led to the establishment of a telephone cooperative.

REA telephone borrowers are proud of their history, their record of service, and their record of complete and total repayment to the agency that made it all possible—the REA.

Let me offer my congratulations on this 50th anniversary, with best wishes for another 50 years of service to the people of rural America.

51-059 O-86-22 (Pt. 8)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Texas, [Mr. DE LA GARZA] for organizing this special order on the 50th anniversary of what is undoubtedly one of the most successful Federal efforts in the history of this Nation—the Rural Electrification Administration.

The people of Minnesota have many special reasons to celebrate this birthday. First, much of our State is rural. Thousands of farms depend on the REA for the electricity that drives modern-day agriculture. Second, former Minnesota Congressman and Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland is also now the head of the National Rural Electrific Cooperation Association. Finally, in my district of southeastern Minnesota, we shared in a very special way this heritage known to many simply as "the day the lights came on." Red Wing, MN, which is in Goodhue County, was the sight of the very first experiment by the Northern States Power Co. to see whether extending electricity to farms was practical. On Christmas Eve, 1923, a 6.3 mile experimental Red Wing line was energized to serve several Burnside farms including the Burnside Consolidated School.

The Red Wing Republican Eagle, Red Wing's daily paper, made special mention of this event recently by commenting on the U.S. Postal Service decision to issue a special stamp commemorating the first electric lines to rural America. Instead of Red Wing, the stamp will commemorate Madison, SD, where the small rural community of Renner was energized on that same Christmas Eve in 1923.

Whoever gets the credit for being the first rural community to receive electricity, we have all shared in the benefits many times over, the benefit of electrification that the REA helped to bring to all of rural America. To close my comments on this special part of our history, I would like to quote Partick Dahl, who recently wrote in Midwest News:

"The coming of the light and power to rural areas, the first magic glow of the naked bulb in the farm home, was witnessed by farm families with awe. Even today, the recounting of that high and moving moment imparts a sense of wonder. Countless stories are still told of that night: of children, and parents, too, running through their homes, turning lights on and off, of women quietly weeping to see new appliances—their electric servants—really working.

Rural life and work, rural society itself, was transformed forever.

Those words speak volumes about the importance of the REA to the development of rural America. Today we celebrate 50 years of success for this vital program.

□ 1550

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I think we might add here another side of the partnership, because we do not exclude the public utility companies, the privately owned utility companies, but rather they are part of this unique partnership in that they complement. They are a capitalistic for-profit type of corporation and they could not come for profit to many areas, so there came then the REA, not to the exclusion, not in competition, but to complement and that partnership now extends to such a degree that the investor-owned rural electric cooperative, which is in partnership with the people, its membership, their users, with a Government who assists them in financing, with the private public utility company who many times sells the power to the REA. It is not a competition. It is not an exclusion, but rather a partnership.

I guess that is the beauty of our system. That is the beauty of our country. That is the thing that we have fought and died for. Without attaching any emotional involvement, that is what it is all about, the ingenuity of the American tradition, the American mind in the Congress and outside the Congress, working in unison, that when the private sector reaches a point where it cannot service, then not in competition, but in complementing, we find a way in which Government can involve itself, hopefuly always not to the detriment, but rather to complement, the one to fulfill the need and in unison.

So here we have a three-cornered hat partnership, the Government, the public utility, the private investor-owned REA, all working in unison, not one against the other, but bringing light to rural America.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

I yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH].

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wish to thank my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] for his leadership in organizing this opportunity to pay tribute to one of the most successful Government programs in our Nation's history, the Rural Electrification Administration.

Since its creation on May 11, 1935, the REA has been a significant contributor to the development of our rural communities across this country. Today, nearly 1,000 member-owned rural electric systems provide service to about 25 million people in 46 States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Ninety-nine percent of our farms and rural homes are electrified today, largely with power provided by REA-financed generation and transmission facilities.

This achievement is no small feat, particularly in a Nation with the broad geographic expanse that separates many of our rural residences. For example, the representatives of REA who have come to visit the Capitol this week from my home State of Nebraska can attest to the sparseness of population across the Great Plains and Sandhills areas, where in one case in my home congressional district, 47 miles separate nearest residences.

Without the vital provisions of financing and engineering assistance for cooperatives and other electrical companies in the countryside, many of our rural areas might still be without electricity to power the milking machine, television sets, and the yardlights that speckle the rural landscape on those crystal-clear nights that are familiar to those of us with rural backgrounds.

Today, nearly all of us take for granted the conveniences that electricity offers in our daily lives. Yet as one who watched as the REA was founded and developed during its early years, I can recall the days when electricity wasn't available to the average farm family. In those days of the kerosene lantern and the washboard, perhaps no one foresaw the manner in which "the electric" would come to influence our way of living.

Indeed, no one probably would have guessed the tremendous influence of the Rural Electrification Administration 50 years ago, either. At that time, in the midst of the Great Depression, rural electrification was originated to help put people back to work. While this was the original idea, little time passed before it became evident that the gigantic task of lighting the countryside would require the skills and organization of a group of professionals with expertise in engineering and management, and an understanding of the rural life that would be so revolutionized by this wonderful gift.

In foresight of this development, a fellow Nebraskan, the late Senator George Norris, took the leadership in converting the REA to an independent lending agency with $40 million in loan authority, to be extended to farmer cooperatives, public utility districts, and municipally owned power companies.

The rest is history, as the REA program has grown steadily, along with the electrical needs of rural America. In 1941, more than 100 million dollars' worth of loans were made for the first time by the agency. By this time, REA-financed cooperatives and companies had over a million customers.

This growth has continued to the current day. To date, the cumulative amount of loans and guarantee commitments made to REA borrowers has totaled over $50 billion. And in this time of harsh financial conditions in the heartland, only $44,478 in loan principal and interest losses have been recorded—a loss ratio of approximately one ten-thousandth of 1 percent.

Certainly, this phenomenal record speaks for itself. I would like to take this opportunity to heartily commend all who have been instrumental in the efforts of the REA to light our homes, to bind together our rural communities, and to provide rural America with a new lifestyle that otherwise might not have been achieved. I look forward to a continued cooperative effort between the Federal Government and rural America, to ensure the continued vitality of our rural electrical system.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman.

Forgive me for intervening periodically with personal experiences, but as I travel throughout this country and abroad, most of our travel is at night to get to a hearing for the next morning or to get from one place to the next place to be there for the hearing the following morning; we are so blessed and it is so beautiful as you fly across America, to fly across rural America, to see those lights out there. You can tell the size of the community. You can tell that they have a little football stadium, or a little league stadium. You fly in many other parts of the country and see these wonderful things.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE], who I think has the time next after me and clearly has a number of very distinguished Members who want to participate in what I think is a very educational special order already begun by his colleague, the gentleman from Texas, so I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] be allowed to proceed next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

COMMEMORATION OF THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE RURAL ELECTRIFICATION PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, first, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Georgia for his kindness and generosity.

This would be an added tribute to rural America and to the REA.

Let me just conclude by saying that in many other countries, including Europe, you will see darkness as you fly across the countryside, no lights, no bluish-greenish lights. Now and then in Africa and some other areas you will see a bonfire. You see a flicker that you know is somebody burning some logs. This is their power. This is their light.

Throughout America you see those bluish-greenish lights throughout the countryside and you know that it is a public utility or the REA complementing each other and bringing light to rural America.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, for yielding to me these last few minutes.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] for this special order. I am pleased to continue that special order.

I particularly want to thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] for his courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago, this body held a special order to express support for the Rural Electrification Administration and to celebrate the 35th anniversary of the REA. Joining me during that first session of the 92d Congress were some of the staunch supporters of the REA. Today, I join with my friend KIKA DE LA GARZA, along with many of our colleagues, in celebrating the 50th anniversary of REA. This program is a great and good program that just keeps getting better.

The Rural Electrification Administration was created on May 11, 1935, by Executive Order 7037 by President Franklin Roosevelt. REA was made an agency of the Government exactly 1 year later with passage of the Rural Electrification Act.

When REA was created, only about 10 percent of the Nation's rural families had central station electric service. Rural America, for many, was a dark and dreary landscape, offering some promise and hope, but without that one critical element necessary to make this rich and fertile countryside productive and properous—electricity. One young Congressman from the 10th District in Texas was extremely dedicated to the cause of getting electricity to his constituents. Lyndon Johnson knew then, as we know now, that electricity can change for the better the lives of rural Americans.

Since the Rural Electrification Administration began, more than 99 percent of America's rural areas have received reliable, central station electric service, and more than 25 million people, including most of the Nation's farmers and ranchers, are served by the nonprofit, locally owned electric cooperatives made possible by the REA. One of the direct benefits resulting from the creation of this small Government agency was the creation of the most productive agricultural industry in the world. In the 1920's, before rural electrification, the American farmer could feed himself and about 20 other people. By the 1950's with much of rural America benefiting from rural electrification, that same farmer was able to feed himself and about 50 others. Today's American farmer feeds more than 75 people.

Agricultural production improvements are not the sole benefit of rural electrification, however, as a result of bringing electricity to light up the countryside, vast improvements in the quality of life in rural America have evolved. The educational testing levels of rural children improved markedly upon the advent of rural electrification. People who live in rural America today have the advantage of modern health care with access to the highly sophisticated medical technology. Rural American housing has also improved. The advent of rural electrification has enabled, in many sections of the country, central heating and air-conditioning and a resulting improvement in the general health of rural people of all ages. Rural telephone service has brought neighbor close to neighbor, within quick calling distance of friends and communities.

Rural electric cooperatives, capitalizing on the experience and expertise that brought rural electrification in the countryside, have taken the initiative in many communities to bring needed facilities and services such as community health care facilities, water and sewer improvements, irrigation projects, and more. Just recently, the Pedernales Electric Cooperative, in the central Texas hill country and part of my congressional district, has instituted a communications system in their area for emergencies that is so good that the city of Austin is looking at it as an example for a system they might institute. PEC has already had many other services going as has Bluebonnet Electric Cooperative which is also located in my district.

These, and other rural electric systems across the country, have worked to bring business and industry to the communities they serve, to provide the vital off-farm jobs that diversify the rural economy and that provide the means of support that allow young people and small family farmers to stay in the communities in which they were raised, and where they might wish to stay. In fact rural electric borrowers, in the past 20 years, have assisted in the creation of more than three-quarters of 1 million new jobs in rural America, jobs that keep people on the farm and out of the already impacted cities.

These are troubled times in rural America. People who come from farming backgrounds and who want to continue to farm, committed young farmers who employ the best techniques to achieve maximum efficiency are being driven off the farms by the thousands each month because of a variety of economic conditions. Without the economic diversity created in part by these rural electric systems, that situation would be far worse than it is now.

Times have been tough in rural America before. But, since the coming of essential light and power made possible by rural electrification, there has always been a friend in the rural community—the rural electric cooperatives—whose leaders are concerned activists willing to lend a hand to solve whatever problems are present at the time, leaders who remain committed to the improvement of life in rural America, to the concept that agriculture, America's most vital industry, must be preserved and must flourish.

Mr. PICKLE. We do have several speakers and I would be willing to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE].

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program.

In tracing the history of electrification of rural America, we are reminded of the high ideals, aspirations, and determination of the American people. A half century ago, rural Americans saw their need for electric power and light and worked with each other and the Federal Government to realize this dream. As a skeptical world watched, these pioneers created their own cooperative rural electrification program that has grown to over 1,000 co-ops across our Nation today. User-owned rural electric service not only enhanced the quality of life of the rural communities, but has made all of America a greater nation by the creation of jobs, advanced technology for hospitals, better serviced schools, and increased productivity to feed our Nation and a hungry world.

Since its inception, the Rural Electrification Program has made vast improvements in life on our farms and across rural America. At a time when our farmers face great economic adversities, we must continue to nurture and carry on the dream envisioned by rural pioneers 50 years ago.

□ 1600

Mr. PICKLE. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution. His State has been one of the best participants in the REA Program we have in this country, and many of our leaders in the program came from Carolina. We appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, as we all rise this afternoon to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electric Program, I really can't help but observe how far we have come in our goal of electrifying rural America since the Rural Electrification Administration was created by Executive order in 1935.

Quite frankly, the REA Program was born out of the American sense of equality—that people who reside in rural areas should have substantially similar utility service as their urban counterparts.

And, as I have mentioned on the House floor on previous occasions, that certainly wasn't the case in 1936 when one of my predecessors, Garner Withrow, who served Wisconsin's Third Congessional District as a Progressive and a Republican for more than 15 years, took the well of the House to speak in favor of the very first REA authorizing legislation.

He eloquently pointed out that of the 6.8 million farms in the United States in 1936, over 6 million were without electricity. Even with the advent of the electric milking machine, America's dairyland—Wisconsin—had but 20 percent of its farms wired for electricity. And some States, such as Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, were barely at the 1-percent level.

In short, the lack of electricity created a dramatic difference between life in urban America and life in rural America—a variance that was incompatible with our basic concept of equality.

And, as Republican Congressman Charles Wolverton of New Jersey so appropriately noted on the floor that same day in 1936, the REA would come to establish a permanent and comprehensive national rural electrification policy that not only bring the conveniences and comforts of electricity to American farmers, but would also stimulate American industry by greatly increasing the demand for electrical equipment and appliances.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from a rural electrification rate of 11 percent in 1936, we can now boast a near-perfect 99-percent level. Does that mean the job of REA is finished?

Hardly. On the contrary, we've just begun and, fortunately, are nearing completion of but the first phase of providing electrical service to rural America at reasonable costs.

As the REA begins its second 50 years and the second phase of its overall mission, we must consider those changes that will permit the program to respond and adapt to the ever-growing diversification of electrical needs in rural America while, at the same time, preserving the program's essential purpose. And, Mr. Speaker, that's a lot easier said than done.

It will take carefully crafted legislation to make the necessary adjustments in the program to preserve and extend our investment in the future of rural America. And, make no mistake about it, the challenges to that future are many.

Technological innovations for rural America are drastically altering the quantity of electricity needed by farmers. The exodus of many city dwellers to rural areas will increase the quantity and diversity of utility services demanded.

Thus, if we ever needed a healthy and dynamic REA to meet these new and dramatic challenges, it is today. Accordingly, as we pause to reflect on its first 50 years, we cannot help but consider the future of the Rural Electric Program as well.

It was rather ironic last weekend traveling through my district I stopped into a bakery in one of my towns to obviously buy some sweets to eat along the road, and as we were paying for it at the cashier's counter the lady there started bringing up some of her problems where she lives. She said: "You know, I live out here outside of town." It is near one of the more urban communities in my district. And she said a number of things were wrong and then she finished it by saying: "And, you know, I am on the Rural Electric Program so my rates are a lot higher than my neighbors who live in town."

What that points out is a fallacy which has existed so often, unfortunately, in this community, this town. That is that rural electrification provides a subsidy and, therefore, cheaper rates, rural electric rates to rural people than the urban consumers have at the same level of service. That is not true. She bore out those facts last weekend and we have seen those facts evidenced many, many times.

So the challenge of the REA in the future is going to be much. It is going to be providing the increased demand for electrical services. It is going to be responding to the changing electrical and technological needs of rural America, and most important it is going to be the challenge of trying to provide that service at rates equal to and not higher than our urban brothers and sisters.

The mission has started. It deserves a great commemoration for the progress it has made, but it is not completed.

I thank the gentleman very much for yielding me this opportunity to join with him in this celebration.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman and thank him for his comments, and I know all those who participate in the REA Program appreciate his comments.

I think it is good for us to repeat again what the Members have said, that today, after 50 years of the operation of the REA, over 99 percent of the farmers in this country participate in the REA Program. And they can receive reliable, central station electric service.

Today, after 50 years in operation, over 25 million Americans receive electricity through these cooperative programs.

Now, that is important to know that that kind of service has been given to them by nonprofit, locally owned electric cooperatives made possible by the REA.

One of the direct benefits resulting from the creation of this small governmental agency was the creation of the most productive agricultural industry in the world. Today our agricultural production is the envy of the world.

If there is any one thing that the U.S.S.R. covets from us it would be our capacity to produce from our agricultural resources. They cannot do it. They try, and it seems like each year they have a shortage and they call on us for help. And we are glad to help.

But with all of their vastness of land, still they do not have that productivity, and I think a lot of it is the result of the REA Program.

In the 1920's, before rural electrification, the American farmer could feed himself and about 20 other people. By the 1950's, with much of rural electrification benefiting our people, that same farmer was able to feed himself and about 50 other people. Today the American farmer feeds more than 75 people.

Now, that is productivity and that shows you how much we have increased, threefold, in production.

Agricultural production improvements are not the sole beneficiary of rural electrification. However, as a result of bringing the electricity to light up our countryside, vast improvements in the quality of life in rural America have evolved.

The educational testing levels of rural children have improved markedly upon the advent of rural electrification. People who live in rural America today have the advantage of modern health care with access to the highly sophisticated medical technology that was beyond their dreams 50 years ago. Rural America housing has improved. The advent of rural electrification has enabled in many sections of the country central heating and air-conditioning, and a resulting improvement in the general health of rural people of all ages.

Rural telephone service also has brought service neighbor to neighbor within quick calling distance of friends in the community.

So all of these services have come about because of rural electification and we should be grateful and salute this program on its 50th anniversary.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I am pleased to yield to our distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] who knows something first hand of this great program.

□ 1610

Mr. WRIGHT. I thank my very good friend JAKE PICKLE for having yielded to me. I am grateful to him for having had the foresight to take this time in order that some of us on the House floor might say a few words of nostalgia, of gratitude, and of the progress that has occurred on the rural scene since that 50 years ago when rural electrification made its debut.

There are a few of us left who can remember childhoods when there was no rural electrification.

As a student in elementary school I used to visit my friends on their farms. There were no electric lights, they used lanterns. Sometimes they used candles, usually if they were lucky they used lanterns.

There was no such thing as a telephone on most Texas farms. Those outside my hometown of Weatherford certainly were not blessed with telephones. Fewer than 10 percent of the farms had the benefit of any use of electricity whatever. There were no electric pumps by which they could pump water. Many of them had windmills. They were dependent upon the vagaries of the weather and the water tables underneath them for their sustenance, for their health, for the well-being of their farms.

With the coming of rural electrification progress began to spread across America's landscape. America's farm families, over so many years, denied the privileges that had so long been available to their city kinsmen, became better customers and there burgeoned an entire new market for such things as deep freezers, refrigerators, electric fans, ultimately air-conditioning and television and telephones and all those things that symbolize this abundant American life that we enjoy and celebrate in this country.

I think on this occasion it is worth observing that rural electrification in the process of one generation turned America around from a stage in which fewer than 10 percent of our farms had the benefit of its benign services to one in which more than 90 percent of those farms enjoyed electrification.

When it was begun there were some who claimed that it was a terrible invasion on the part of Government in competition with private industry. The truth of it is that the private electric companies had chosen not to extend their electric service to farms because it was too costly, because it did not pay them, in the bottom line, to see to it that those American families had the benefits of electric service.

When we provided rural electrification with the benefit of a benign Government, a Government who reached the hand of friendship out across the miles to help those farm families to enjoy a part of this abundant life that is America, everybody benefited. The city electric companies did not lose anything. All along they had had the privilege, if they desired, to extend electric service to the farms and had not done so. And so it was no unfair competition to them. The marketplace, alone and unattended, the real selfish motive of profit its only goal, would not have provided service for many, many years, quite probably decades, to rural America.

It is in those occasions in those instances when it is not profitable for private industry to do that which is beneficial and in the public interest that a Government that serves its people, that is responsive to its people, has found that it can provide the difference, can create an atmosphere conducive to letting it be possible for these people through the organization of cooperatives to do it for themselves. We made that possible through low-interest-rate loans.

The Government has lost no money as a result of them. In fact, the entire economy is infinitely richer because of the broadening of the buying power and the participation in this economy by millions upon millions of additional people. I think the same thing may be said for such intuitive things as the Tennessee Valley Authority and other things that our Government has done to make life more abundant for America's farm families and other families previously denied.

On this 50th anniversary I certainly want to congratulate my friend Jake Pickle for having brought this to our attention.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. Speaker, I was amused at his recollection of the early days of REA when he visited some of his rural farms out of Weatherford. It brought back to my memory some of my own experiences on a more limited basis. But I just wondered today how many Members of this body or those who might be listening can remember the days when we had to use the kerosene lamp. I wonder how many of you have had the chore of filling up the lamps at night so that you might have illumination during the evening.

I recall one of the comments that President Johnson used to say that that kerosene lamp caused him to have more ambition than almost anything he had to do except milking the cows. And that one of the almost hateful tasks he had was each night he had to somehow get that kerosene 5-gallon can and empty it out into the lamps. He said always the kerosene would get on your hands. Usually we had lost the little stopper on it and you would have an Irish potato and that sufficed. You could just slap that old potato on there and that held it pretty good.

But I will tell you, when you go to pour it out from that can into the lamps or into small buckets it always spilled over, it got on your hands, your hair, on your clothes, you would smell it all night. You would go inside the house at night and you could not get the wick lit just right, you would either get too much wick or too little wick to too much air or not enough kerosene. The lamp would get colored and sometimes you would have to blow it out and clean it and start all over again.

I imagine many a young man took a vow that "If ever I can get away from the kerosene lamp I will try to make something out of myself." I say that kind of facetiously but there is a lot of truth in it. So that is my recollection of the early days of the kerosene lamp. I remember them.

I vouchsafe that you would remember them too.

I yield to my good friend from Maryland.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the city man from Maryland.

Mr. MITCHELL. For the education of a poor old city fellow, what was the advantage of the Irish potato? What qualities does it have?

Mr. PICKLE. The potato was actually the stopper on the kerosene lamp. You always somehow lost a little screw, the little lid on it. When you did not have a lid on it you could not just let it go.

Mr. MITCHELL. So you used the Irish potato.

Mr. PICKLE. It served as a lid. You would just clamp it on there, the Irish potato.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the gentleman yield a bit further for the education of this poor urban fellow?

Did the Irish potato have some absorptive capacities that took up some of the fumes?

Mr. PICKLE. The Irish potato did nothing but serve as a stopper, and it was not perfect because sometimes when you would stick it on the kerosene would come out and you would think it would be a good air seal but no such thing.

□ 1620

Mr. WRIGHT. If the gentleman would yield, I think our friend from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL] needs to understand that no one sought then to eat an Irish potato that had been soaked by kerosene. That was not recommended.

In fact, it was highly discouraged. That served no purpose whatever in giving flavor to the potato. In fact, it saved the kerosene itself from evaportation and saved some spillage and possible danger, you know, if somebody had struck a match or a flickering ash had fallen from the fireplace onto that kerosene that might have spilled out on the floor, you could have had a fire.

Now, kerosene did have certain other values. Among them, if you had Bantam chickens or other types of chickens——

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the gentleman yield at that point? What kind of chicken?

Mr. WRIGHT. I would say a Bantam chicken, primarily, or another kind of chicken that had scales on its legs. You could rub those scales with "coal oil" which was a name applied to kerosene by some, and the scales would fall off, as if by magic. It was a marvelously wonderous medicinal purpose that it served.

But one did not eat the Irish potato, notwithstanding.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I thank both of the gentlemen; really I came here to learn and I have been very well educated in the last 2 or 3 minutes of this dialog.

Mr. PICKLE. I appreciate the gentleman's inquiry, and I know that he needs to be educated about these matters.

Let me say to the gentleman that the Irish potato helped, but it was quite difficult because after a time, the potato would just shrink a little, shrivel, and when you go to put that lid back on, you did not always get the same little ring you had made before, so you would be cutting another one. Pretty soon you would cut that potato up, and then it would spill off completely. It was not an easy task, and I tell you, living on a farm those days.

Now we tell about these things lightly. The fact of the matter is, it is well to remember that that is how we lived in rural America in those days, and the hardship you had with the lamp, the difficulty of hauling water, the great ordeals that our womenfolks went through as they tried to iron or wash. All of that disappeared, essentially, when we got the RE going full swing.

So it is good for us to recall these things, and though we might make light of it, it is a serious thing for us to remember.

I yield to the gentleman from west Texas, who is a real farm boy if we ever had one in the House.

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding, and I must say, in the recent colloquy between the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Texas, my difficulty in remembering is somewhat greater. I was 2½ years old when electricity first came to our farm, but I can remember as well today as that day that one little wire hanging from the ceiling with the one light bulb on the end and the electricity coming in. I can remember it as though I see it today. How, I do not know; I remember very few other things.

I certainly do not remember the difficulties of kerosene at that age. I was not entrusted with the lighting of the lamp at that age; I was too little. But I fully remember.

Mr. PICKLE. Some of us more mature Members can remember those days.

Mr. STENHOLM. I would say this, Mr. Speaker. It is particularly fitting that the gentleman from Maryland has participated today, since he is waiting for another special order today which I intend to participate with him in: The commemoration of the Small Business Week for the United States.

In my district alone, I have 12 rural electric cooperatives with headquarters within my district. I have another 7 who have lines that come within my district, and I think that many of the things that he and I both will say in our recognition of the importance of small business, will be particularly apropos and applicable to the Rural Electric Program, because those rural electrics provide many jobs, they provide many job opportunities, they in fact provide many opportunities for other small businesses who have been created within those rural communities and those small towns. That is what small businesses are all about.

I think it is very fitting that we recognize both the Rural Electric Program in its 50th anniversary, but also as we celebrate Small Business Week, we recognize we are talking about one and the same: Small businesses, working together to provide the jobs to provide that which has made America the great country we are.

I would further say to the gentleman from Texas, knowing a little further of your background, of the tremendous role that you have played throughout your political career and even before that, in seeing that we have gotten to this point of the 50th anniversary. The activities that you have been a part in, I know that others will join with me in saying "Thank you, Jake" to the gentleman for the tremendous leadership that you provided.

When I was a rural electric manager and president of the Texas Electric Cooperatives Association, working from the other side of the desk, or the other side of this Chamber, you might say, in recognizing the importance of those who have recognized, as the majority leader so eloquently expressed himself before.

Today I say thank you to a colleague.

Mr. PICKLE. I appreciate your comments very much. As a former manager of a rural electrification system, you can speak firsthand of the great good work that those cooperatives do, and that we hope they continue.

They have grown, and they have prospered. It is good for us to remember how much they really have grown. Let me give an example. When we started out in the Pedernales Electric Cooperative—of course, there were no users, and they said you could not get 100 people signed up. You could not get 200 people on the whole system, and they turned him, their Congressman, Lyndon Johnson down.

I remember he put on contests; he would say to different people: "If you'll go out and get people to subscribe, I'll get the one who signs up the most this month, I'll give him a hat."

I remember one man, E. Bade Smith, won the contest, one hat. One time he got 55 people to sign up. That was a monumental task, but that was quite an accomplishment.

Now from the days where we had no members, today we look at Pedernales Electric Cooperative. Today they have over 65,000 users on that one system alone. In the Blue Bonnet, which is located at Giddings in Lee County just below our city of Austin, that cooperative today has 42,000 people signed up who use electricity from that system.

Now that is over 105,000 people. That is almost half as many people in the whole district when we started out years ago. So it is good for us to remember how much we have done, how much we have accomplished, and therefore it is well for us to pause today to remember the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electric Cooperative Program.

I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma at this point.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do seek recognition.

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to have the opportunity to speak before this body commemorating 50 years of electrification to rural America. I can remember when the lights came on for the first time in my rural area south of Bennington in southern Oklahoma. Electricity changed our lifestyle as it did for many rural Americans. The pride of rural Americans in themselves and their accomplishments grew as rural areas became plugged into the rest of the world.

The "night the lights came on" has become an unforgettable event in the lives of many rural people. Yet, today we take for granted this efficient system of nearly 1,000 member-owned rural electric systems that provide service to about 25 million people in 46 States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

The year 1935 was the beginning of rural development with President Franklin D. Roosevelt's signing the law that created the Rural Electrification Administration. Now, 50 years later we stand at the edge of decision. Will this Congress accept the ideaology of this administration to terminate a program that has been successful and changed the lives of so many people. REA changed the philosophy of rural Americans and their outlook on life. It was a light that overshadowed the darkness and despair of the period.

Today, we have the same kind of despair and tragedy in rural America as we see more than 50,000 farmers expected to be forced off the land this year. Electricity was the only light at the end of the tunnel for rural Americans in the late 1930's and early 1940's. For many it was the spark of hope as they realized that finally someone was taking notice of rural problems.

It is tragic that in a year that we are commemorating 50 years of successful service to rural America from the REA Program that this administration is proposing termination of REA. If the administration has their way it will be a blackout in rural America, because with fewer people on the lines rural users will not be able to afford the cost of electricity. Deregulation of the telephone company has already increased the rate of telephone subscribers.

It's not a coming storm that will affect rural electricity as portrayed so vividly in Thomas Hart Benton's painting. It's a storm that's already here. And, if the administration has anything to do with it then it won't blow over. It's a storm that will knock out the power to the homes and farms of every rural American. Combined with proposals to downgrade soil conservation programs and given agriculture's current economic status rural homes and farms face the biggest Dust Bowl and blackout since the 1920's and 1930's.

Anyone who was involved in the blackout a few years ago in New York City can describe the chaos and terror that struck the city that summer night. That same apparent danger is visible today in the proposals that have been made in the budget concerning REA.

When REA was created in 1935, only 10 percent of U.S. farms had electricity. By providing low interest loans to rural electric cooperatives, REA brought electric power to millions of rural homes that private utilities found unprofitable to serve. Today, 99 percent of U.S. farms have electricity.

A big enough breakerbox couldn't be built to absorb all the shocks that rural America will take as a result of the proposals by this administration. Without affordable power and continued quality service, rural America will virtually shut down. Granted the rural people will suffer, but higher electric rates will transfer to consumers through the purchase of food in the grocery store.

The administration has a choice today, to continue its efforts to weaken the bonds of a structure that has been a 50-year success or to use a tool that can provide rural development that will build jobs and keep farmers and ranchers on the farm and provide a cheap food policy for the consumer. We must decide. Are we going to throw the switch on rural America? Let's keep the current flowing across this great country and through its rural communities. Fifty years from now, will historians recall 1985 as the year that the REA Program was used to strengthen rural America or will they recall that 1985 was the year the administration terminated REA and the rural citizen have their electric bills increased 50 to 100 percent for some rural electric co-ops. If that occurs, then President Reagan has accomplished his purpose of exploiting the farmers from American soil—that surely will be a sad and tragic day.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman.

The gentleman from Oklahoma heads up the Rural Electrification caucus for this Congress, and probably does as much as any Member of this Congress to advance the cause of rural America. His activities here the last few years have been very significant, and he certainly knows whereof he speaks when he talks about the value of rural America and the importance the REA Program plays in that program.

I would remind the gentleman that time was when REA's got started with 3 percent money, you could borrow money at very low rates. Now, 30 or 40 years ago 3 percent was not such a low rate. It was a pretty average rate. Today it seems like an extremely small figure. We have gotten away from that, and rightly so, and the co-ops now get money at the cost of Government, as they should be, but, in addition, now the cooperatives have formed their Cooperative Finance Corp. into which they have bought shares, and that program has built. So today when a cooperative goes to borrow money, it does not come just straight to the Government for appropriated funds, but they also can participate in their CFC; in other words, they are building up a financing mechanism to finance their own program, and that is good.

I am told just recently by the cooperative in my district, the Blue Bonnet, that they have asked for a loan of some $29 million. The REA would pay 70 percent of that loan and the CFC would pay 30 percent. In other words, it is a sharing program, and that amount is growing, so that if things continue on the present course, the cooperatives will be largely able to finance themselves.

I think the present administration thinks the REA is another social program and therefore they ought to cut back on it or do away with it. It is not a social program. It is an investment in America that is as important as our educational system and many other programs. So we must tell that story.

Now, today as I conclude this special order I want to commend the Rural Electrification for their 50 years of service to the American people. It has been a magnificent gift to the American citizen, and we should be grateful for it.

I would hope that the co-ops, though, out across our land would remember that they represent the people on the farms, by and large, and they are the ones they are serving. They are not serving themselves, they are not a utility, in the sense of the big private companies. They are supposed to be serving rural America. And I would hope that they would ask the members of these cooperatives what they want, what kind of service can they give. I would hope that the members who belong to the cooperatives go to their annual meetings and just do not take it for granted that the cooperatives are going to treat you right.

You go there and voice your opinion and cast your ballot; have a say-so in that cooperative so that they know what you are thinking and how you are feeling. If you have got some disagreement, remind them that the program belongs to you, not just a cooperative or someone else, but belongs to you, one of the members.

I would hope that the co-ops also would expand their services as they have in many different fields now, from electricity to housing to telephone service, and even today they are implementing on many of their farms solar systems. What a perfect system it is to augment their own farms.

So I think a lot of things can be developed and we can see further growth in both industry and business as we continue this program. It is very important that the people realize the importance to the American people. It is good for us in the Congress to pause long enough to say again that this is a good program; it has meant as much to America as any other one program, and we have got to remember it.

I think if I was to paint a last scene here before I leave, I would ask you a question, I would ask you people this question: What is the most peaceful scene that you can imagine? If someone were to ask you, what is the most restful or peaceful scene that you can have?

I will tell you what I think it is. I think it is being able to go to bed at night on a farm and listen outside and hear the tinkling of the windmill. A gentle breeze, blowing strong enough to turn that wheel; you hear the clinking and tinkling of the mill knowing that there is wind; water is being pumped; maybe a little rain. As you look out now, with REA in, you can see the illumination of a night light made possible by the cooperative. That is a restful scene. That is good for America. Let us keep it that way.

The accomplishments of the REA Program are truly deserving of much praise. It is appropriate that this body take note of those accomplishments. I want to thank my good friend and colleague, KIKA DE LA GARZA, for his leadership on this issue. I also want to salute this body for its role in the establishment and continued concern and efforts on behalf of electrification for rural America. I hope we will indicate our support for this program by continuing our present funding for the REA at the fiscal year 1985 level.

● Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the past 50 years the Rural Electrification Administration [REA] has played an invaluable role in the development of our rural areas. It continues this tradition today, providing many of our rural communities and outlying areas the electricity needed to light their homes, and the power necessary to operate local businesses and industries.

This tradition of excellence is now under attack. The Reagan administration's budget for fiscal year 1986 calls for, among other things, the phase out of all REA loan programs by 1990. While this proposal leaves no doubt as to the future of the REA in the eyes of President Reagan and OMB, it cannot be interpreted as a recent decision, based solely on current budget realities. No; the REA was lined up in the gunsights of OMB long before the administration's budget was released. The call for a complete phase out is only the final salvo in a war of attrition which the administration has been staging with the REA over the past few years.

These efforts have been successful to date. The staff of the REA has declined to its lowest level since 1938. On June 30 of this year, the agency had 625 employees. It was authorized for 660. Shortly afterwards, the USDA put a freeze on new hiring at REA until the end of the fiscal year. This, in light of the fact that in May 1982, before the Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development of the House Agriculture Committee, REA Administrator Harold Hunter, in response to questions concerning the shortage of manpower at the agency responded that "we're just about to the point now where we're ready to move ahead on that".

The level of morale at REA has followed suit. The employees are now subject to attempts to dismantle the agency through the elimination of essential divisions. "If I wanted to kill the rural electric program, the very first thing I'd do is abolish the engineering standards division," says Bill Matson, general manager of the Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association. That, of course, is exactly what the administration has proposed.

The engineering standards division establishes and enforces standards of safety, quality, and efficiency in the construction of rural electric systems, and provides technical assistance to REA borrowers and REA field representatives and the headquarters staff. These standards require all rural electric systems to use uniform materials, equipment, and plant design, which in turn holds down construction costs and enables rural electric crews to help each other to quickly and safely restore electric service in times of disaster.

The administration rationale for elimination of this division is based upon their unflappable belief that, as with many other Government-administered functions, private industry could carry out this function in a more effective and cost-efficient manner. I think that argument is deserving of some thought. Most private industries, as far as I know, are in business to make a profit. To achieve this goal a company will take a good, hard look at the costs involved in their production and/or service process, and determine whether or not the total costs justify their commitment of time, energy, and capital.

With that in mind, let's take a brief look at the scope of the product and service developed and administered by the REA: Only about five families live along each mile of rural electric line. It takes more than half the Nation's poles and power lines, owned and maintained by 1,000 locally owned, nonprofit rural electric systems, to serve 25 million people in the far corners of our Nation. Nearly 75 percent of all rural electric systems have higher costs and higher rates than neighboring urban facilities.

Does that sound like a scenario that most, if any, private industries would be willing to tackle? Moreover, can we seriously believe that the 50 years of REA experience which have made electricity a reality for our rural areas can be readily duplicated by an untold number of separate private businesses? I think not.

As a member of the House Agriculture Committee, I am keenly aware of the essential services which our rural electrification program has provided for millions of our rural citizens. I am also greatly concerned about the effect that the elimination of this program could have on our agricultural sector, which is currently in its worst throes since the days of the Depression. Then, as now, this program gives our farmers the security of a reliable source of electricity at a reasonable rate. To eliminate the REA would just be one more problem heaped upon our farmers. Moreover, it would seriously hinder the development of our rural areas. In this moment of need, we must work to see that this imprudent and short-signed proposal does not reach fruition.

I urge our colleagues to look beyond the budget-cutting rhetoric of the administration and do everything in our power to see that the REA is not forced to die a quiet yet untimely death.●

● Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, 1985 marks the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration, a program that made electric power a reality for rural America.

The story of the Rural Electrification Administration is remarkable, a shining example of what Americans can accomplish when they work together in their local communities.

The Rural Electrification Administration was created when President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order 7037 on May 11, 1935. One year later, Congress followed and passed the Rural Electrification Act.

Soon after, farms, ranches, and rural homes and businesses began to be transformed. The farmer now had a new "hired hand"—the electric motor. It brought with it unlimited potential for increasing agricultural productivity. Exhausting daily chores became greatly assisted by electric power. Furthermore, electricity furnished extra daylight hours in the farmer's barn allowing more time to be devoted to his harvest.

While the rural economy was being revolutionized, something special was also happening in America's homes. Electricity provided unlimited power and light for work and leisure.

Electric-powered appliances helped with the housework while affording more time to families to do what they enjoyed. More time could now be spent studying, worshipping, relaxing, and playing. Overall, limited leisuretime became more satisfying and work became more productive and rewarding.

Although most Americans today can take electric power and its benefits for granted, it is important for us to recognize the accomplishments of the Rural Electrification Administration. Because the REA and Americans all across this land have toiled for half a century at improving our rural communities, the quality of American life has improved immeasurably.●

● Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join today in paying tribute to the programs that have helped to provide electricity to our rural areas throughout the country. This is a most appropriate special order, because rural electric is most special.

We all too often fail to appreciate the programs that make our lives more livable each day. We become so used to having certain things available that we simply expect that they will always be there.

This hasn't been true for the provision of electric power in rural areas. Many public power companies would not take the risk of expanding into these areas because of the cost of providing service. But people in rural America need electricity just as much if not more than the people in our more populated areas, and the Rural Electrification Administration has helped to provide this assistance over the past 50 years.

More than 25 million Americans get their power from 1,000 rural electric systems that were developed with the help of the Rural Electrification Administration. Many of the people that I represent get their power from an important entity in my congressional district, the Thumb Electric Cooperative, and they pay fair prices for the service they receive. If it wasn't for REA, I know that the lives of these people would be vastly different, and the community structure of this area would also be quite different.

But I am very sad to say that after 50 years of aiding the people who live in rural areas, REA may soon find its ability to continue to provide assistance curtailed if the President's budget is adopted. As he has with so many other important domestic programs, he has said with his budget that the effort is no longer needed. That is not what I hear from the people I represent, and that is not what the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations on which I serve was told my several witnesses. They told us that without REA their lives would change. People would find it difficult to live in certain parts of the country, and many more would face deteriorating service as electric power systems continue to age. But in the view of a few, we would "save" money.

It is true that some suggest that these rural systems should get financing from private sources. But rural areas are not the prime operating areas for investment bankers. And even if such loans would be made available from private lending sources, few electric co-ops could afford the interest rates while those who could would be forced to increase their power rates dramatically.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in the greatness of our country. I believe that this greatness is the product of we recognizing as Americans that our country has diverse needs, and that we will be the strongest when we meet as many of these diverse needs as possible. One-line platitudes are easy, and for this reason many people choose to believe them. But I challenge anyone to meet with people who depend upon rural electric co-ops and hear about the importance they have for their members, and then come back and tell us with a clear conscience that these programs can be cut.

The Rural Electrification Administration has helped millions of Americans since its creation, and the National Rural Electric Cooperatives Association has done stellar work in keeping all of us informed of the continuing need for REA programs. It is a privilege for me to participate in this tribute, and I hope that all of our colleagues will join me in wishing our rural electric programs another successful 50 years.●

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join with my distinguished colleagues, JAKE PICKLE and KIKA DE LA GARZA, in this special order to commemorate the accomplishments of the Rural Electrification Administration.

As a New York State Assemblyman, I had the opportunity to personally learn of the benefits to my upstate rural farm areas of the rural electrification program. As a result, since I have been in Congress, I have consistently been a strong supporter of the rural electrification program.

Through the efforts of cooperative groups such as the Rural Community Assistance Program and the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, a tremendous job has been done over the years of bringing affordable electricity to rural America. Our Nation's farmers and ranchers have been able to provide high-quality food and fiber because rural electrics have provided them with the electric power they needed to become efficient. The over 1,000 rural electrical systems now in operation account for and maintain nearly half the country's power lines. This has allowed our farmers to focus more on expansion and diversification of their economic activities. In so doing it has made America the feeder of the world.

The Rural Electrification Administration has enabled the public and private sector to build a thriving economy where once there were few, if any, job opportunities. Unfortunately, the Reagan administration now proposes, in its fiscal 1986 budget, to cut the legs out from under the rural electrification movement in America. To my mind this would be a tragedy Congress must not allow to happen.

I commend the Rural Electrification Administration, on this, their 50th anniversary, and want to express my continued support for the tremendous job REA programs have done. These programs reflect the indispensible role of electric power to the American farm system.●

● Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join in this celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electric Administration. I extend my congratulations to all the rural electric co-ops who have made such significant contributions in raising the standard of living for our Nation's rural areas.

As a native of rural Kansas and Nebraska, I am aware of the great benefits in rural life made possible by electricity. In appreciation, I wish to extend a special note of recognition to the statewide association, the Kansas Electric Cooperatives.

This year as we debate the future of the REA, we profit from a review of what has made this program a success. By recognizing that a true need was being left unmet, and that private enterprise would find these sparsely populated markets unprofitable, a partnership between Government and nonprofit member-supported cooperatives has been able to bring electric power to rural America. In a model program, both parties have been able to do what they do best. The Federal Government provided the focal point and the seed money while the local organizations were able to shape the delivery of electric service to best fit their needs and resources.

I have only one co-op which represents a very small portion of my district. However, REA was an instrumental factor in those great advances in American farming which we all enjoy today. Much of the productivity of our State's great wheat farms can be traced to the availability of electric power. The REA was charged with bringing power to rural America, a job which they have performed magnificently. The future of REA is a self-sufficient program insuring our hard earned gains will benefit future generations.●

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago, less than 10 percent of all rural Americans enjoyed the benefits of central station electric service. Even in a densely populated State such as Pennsylvania, only 25 percent of the farms and rural homes were electrified.

Today, virtually every corner of the Nation, including some of the most remote areas, are served with electricity, largely because of the work of the Rural Electrification Aministration.

This Saturday, Mr. Speaker, will mark the 50th anniversary of this Agency. It was on May 11, 1935, that then President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed the Executive order creating the REA, an agency that over the years has provided loans, loan guarantees, and other forms of assistance to about 1,100 rural electric utilities and more than 1,000 rural telephone companies in 46 States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, Rota, Saipan, and Tinian.

Quite frankly, if it were not for REA, many parts of this country would be without electric or telephone service.

Those of us from Pennsylvania, however, have a special closeness to the REA Program, primarily because the concept was developed during the 1920's by Pennsylvania Governor Giffort Pinchot.

During that decade, Governor Pinchot commissioned a study of the Commonwealth's electric utility industry and one of the principal recommendations was that everything possible should be done to bring the State's farmers and other rural residents into the 20th century by providing them with electric service.

As a testament of the work done by that study commission, it should be noted that Morris Lewellyn Cooke, the man who directed the electrification study for Governor Pinchot, was chosen by President Roosevelt to head up the REA. In fact, Pennsylvania is particularly proud of its role in the REA because the second administrator of the administration was John M. Carmody, also from the Keystone State.

In addition to serving to extend electric power, initially, and telephone service later, REA was developed as an unemployment relief program. The idea was to provide or guarantee loans to construct rural electric and telephone systems with the assurance that the actual construction would be done by the WPA.

As a Pennsylvanian, Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in honoring the 50th anniversary of this most important program. The services rendered to America's farmers and rural dwellers in the past 50 years cannot be overstated.

The benefits of this program, initially to the millions of unemployed during the Great Depression who were able to earn something and feel productive, and later to thousands of once-isolated families, are visible to the eyes of anyone who has traveled outside our primary and secondary population centers.

I am delighted to offer my anniversary wishes to the Rural Electrification Administration.●

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today we have an opportunity to pay tribute to one of the greatest examples of the cooperative spirit that binds our Nation together * * * the Rural Electric Administration.

Fifty years ago the lights began coming on all over rural America, leaving confused farmers holding on to pull chains, fearing that the light would go out. The confusion soon passed, as farmers began to realize the potential for electricity. Workloads were considerably reduced, productivity increased, and activity on Main Street soared. The electric co-op soon became a vital foundation for rural communities, as powerlines went up around the country.

In its 50 years, the REA has put 25 million consumers on the lines of rural electric systems. Nearly half of the country's powerlines are operated and maintained by the Nation's rural electric systems. The era of the "Dirty Thirties" was transformed forever when the REA brought light to rural America. It is proper to pay tribute to the REA, a stellar example of people and communities working together in a spirit of cooperation.●

● Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I join my colleagues today in marking the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Act. The last 50 years have given rise to dramatic improvements in the quality of life for rural America, due in large part to the farsighted thinking of the originators of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Few other government programs have achieved the remarkable success of this program. Through it, rural America literally came out of an age of darkness into the modern world and at the same time, American agriculture has grown to one of the most imposing economic powerhouses on the globe.

We are now in the midst of writing a new farm bill, one which will be of critical importance to the future of agriculture. As we do so, we surely need to think critically about our policy and where it needs to be reformed. We live in a different world and we need updated policies to lead us into the next 50 years of advancements. However, we should stay mindful of the success Federal agriculture policy has accomplished. The critics, naysayers, and forecasters of doom and gloom see nothing but mistakes and peril in our policies. In their ideological zeal, critics would remove government's constructive hand from farm policy and cast American farmers adrift on an uncertain sea.

To them, I say: "Take a closer look." In our enthusiasm to criticize, improve, and reform, let us not forget what we have achieved. From the bleak, dark days of the Depression and the Dust Bowl, we have an industry which drives 20 percent of our economy, employing 20 percent of our workers, and reaching every corner of the country, indeed the globe. The REA has been a full partner in that success, and will continue as we move into the 21st century.

Cut spending and wring out the waste from government programs, yes. But slash them wholesale without thinking of the consequences, no. REA is of crucial importance and needs continued government support. Rural America is now with lights and telephones, but to continue to develop and grow and meet the challenges of the future, those needs will not wither, they will remain as pressing and crucial as ever before.

Today is truly a remarkable day. Ask any farmer in rural Kansas and he will affirm my amazement and support for the work REA and the network of our Nation's rural electric and telephone cooperatives have done. This is a legacy which must be preserved and built upon, not cast aside. Let's keep those lights burning bright.●

● Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, it is truly a pleasure to be here today to salute the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration [REA]. Most of us here cannot imagine what life before the REA was like, but many of my constituents probably remember it first hand. They remember the difficulties of providing wholesome food for their families because they did not have electric refrigerators. They spent hours performing tasks that now take only seconds because now they have electricity.

With the advent of electricity in rural America came economic development. Rural electric borrowers, in the past 20 years, have assisted in the creation of more than three-quarters of a million new jobs in rural America, not to mention the millions of new jobs that were created because of electrification in general. Today over 50 percent of my constituents live in rural areas, and over 98 percent of them enjoy electrical service. That is pretty impressive, and I give much of the credit to the REA.

The success story does not end with electricity. In 1949, the REA was granted the authority to make loans for telephone service. Never again would the elderly, the young, and the helpless be isolated by the many miles that separated them from their neighbors.

The goal of rural electrification is being met, and all of America has benefited. No longer is rural America isolated from mainstream America. Indeed, rural America is mainstream America.

It is rare to see a cooperation between government and private individuals to be so successful. The last 50 years have proven that such partnerships can work. Arkansans continue to be involved in bringing efficient, inexpensive electricity to our State, and I am proud to offer my congratulations and heartfelt thanks to them on this very important anniversary.●

● Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues today in recognizing the invaluable contribution that the Rural Electrification Administration has made during the past 50 years to thousands of people in rural America as well as our Nation as a whole.

Our Founding Fathers believed that all men were created equal and REA Programs have certainly helped bring equality to living standards in rural areas.

In 1935, electricity reached fewer than 12 percent of our Nation's farms. In 1982, 99 percent of our farms had electricity. REA's responsibility to modernize and strengthen this vast network is as important today as starting the system was 50 years ago.

Economic growth depends upon strong energy networks and REA's role in these networks is crucial to ensuring that rural America shares in the economic growth of our Nation. Without the REA, farm families and small businesses in rural areas could be priced out of the electric market. No doubt, that would be devastating to the economies of rural areas.

We must take this 50th anniversary as an opportunity to repledge our support for the REA and the people which it serves.

TELEPHONE SERVICE IN RURAL AMERICA

In 1949, the mission of the Rural Electrification Administration was expanded to include telephone service when Congress declared a national policy of assuring the availability of adequate telephone service to the widest practical number of rural users.

Undoubtedly, the REA Program has been one of the greatest success stories of our Government and its citizens working together. In my own State of Oklahoma, only 32 percent of the farms had telephones when the program began in 1949. Today, more than 95 percent of the State's farms, as well as many rural homes and businesses, have telephones.

The story of the Panhandle Telephone Co-op in Oklahoma is an excellent example of the success of this effort to improve the quality of living and working in rural areas.

Back in 1950, no commercial telephone company was willing to assume the task of providing telephone service to the rural areas of the Oklahoma Panhandle with extensions into Texas, New Mexico, and Colorado. Even today this co-op has less than one subscriber for every mile of telephone line. The task was not economically attractive, and existing telephone companies were not eager to incur great expense and risk to extend lines into these remote rural areas.

For 6 successive years, 1962 to 1967, the co-op operated at annual losses in its struggle to meet service needs. But it never gave up. Competent managers—formerly Bob Jeffries and currently Gary Kennedy—along with the co-op's succession of dedicated board members, fought hard and made great personal sacrifices to explore every possible way for the struggling co-op to meet its telephone service needs.

In 1974, the co-op was one of the first of the Nation's co-ops to pioneer the cost study method of dividing toll revenues with Southwestern Bell and General Telephone. It was recognized that although this new procedure would require more work and effort from management and employees, it would produce significantly greater toll income to keep local rates low. Ever since, balance sheets and operating statements have steadily improved.

In view of the current changing nature of telecommunications industry, the co-op alerted its customers that telephone service pricing through-out the Nation is changing drastically—more than at any time in history. Court and regulatory commission efforts to induce competition into telephone services are forcing the price of most telephone services to be changed to reflect their precise cost levels. Co-op representatives appeared before a panel of State and Federal commissioners to argue the case for preserving affordable local telephone rates for small rural communities. Universal service at affordable rates must be preserved or we will end up with universal service only for those who can afford it. The deregulation of airline rates has either eliminated service or has produced tremendous increases in airfares for rural towns. Deregulation of telephone services must not force the rural citizen to give up his telephone or even curtail its use.

The opportunity for Panhandle Telephone Co-op to succeed was made possible by a loan from REA. On the 50th anniversary of the REA Program and the 36th anniversary of the telephone program I offer my congratulations to the agency for helping to provide adequate affordable telephone service to constituents in my district. I extend my best wishes for an additional 50 years of service to rural areas throughout the country.●

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere honor and privilege to participate in the special order today commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program.

The REA means a great deal to me and to my district in particular. Out of the 18 REA's serving the State of Florida, 11 are in my district.

Little did President Roosevelt know when he signed an Executive order back in 1935 to create the REA that so many lives would be touched and affected by his hope of bringing power to rural areas.

As of January 1, 1985, Florida's rural electric cooperatives were serving more than 480,000 people over 46,000 miles of line. Over the years, these low densities have continued to present difficult economics for the rural electric systems and in Florida there are only 10.4 consumers per mile of line, a challenging task to this day.

The rural electric leaders of our State and throughout the Nation are to be congratulated on the contributions thay have made to this Nation. Happy 50th anniversary to REA, rural electrification, and to all its leadership and members.●

● Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, light has long symbolized creativity and progress. But light was more than a symbol for the majority of rural Americans in the 1930's who lived without benefit of electricity. Light was a badly needed service. As late as the mid-1930's, 9 out of 10 rural homes were without electric service. Since businesses and factories tended to locate in cities where electric power was readily available, rural economies were vitually dependent on agriculture. Yet without electricity, agricultural production was inefficient, and rural life was characterized by hard work and drudgery.

On May 11, 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt created the Rural Elecrification Administration [REA] by Executive order. REA switched rural America on with electrical power. But it was the involvement of the rural people themselves that really provided power for the electrification effort. Farmer-owned cooperatives, many newly organized for the REA loans, worked energetically and vigorously to obtain REA loans and being electricity to the countryside. Their cooperative efforts brought light to rural America and set the stage for growth and progress.

As we mark the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program, it is worthwhile to remember and recount this story in American history. It is also appropriate to pay tribute to those Americans who today devote their energies to delivering electricity to rural America.

Rural electric systems are consumer-owned utilities serving rural communities throughout the country. More than 1,000 rural electric systems form a rural electric network. In addition, in 39 of the 46 States in which rural electric systems are located, statewide organizations exist. These organizations represent members' interests and coordinate such services as communications, training, purchasing, billing, and research. Through the efforts of all involved in rural electrification, the lifeline of electrical power is brought to farms, homes, schools, community institutions, and commercial enterprises.

On this anniversary occasion, I want to say thank you to those who keep the lights burning across rural America.●

● Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the rural electrification movement, spawned in the New Deal, is one of the great success stories of our recent history. In just 50 years, its efforts have transformed the face of rural America. As the very fine book put out by NRECA, "The Next Greatest Thing: 50 Years of Rural Electrification in America," says:

> Because there is electricity, the American farmer and rancher has been able to increase his productivity to easily feed our nation and to help feed a hungry world—at a cost that allows Americans to spend less of their income for food than people of any other nation in the world. Because there is electricity, millions of acres of otherwise arid or marginal farmland can be irrigated, stabilizing food production and lessening potential perils of drought and famine. Because there is electricity, Americans eat fresh foods of a quality that defies comparison with those of just a generation ago. Because there is electricity, small industries—or large ones—can locate in rural areas, diminishing population pressures on America's cities. Because there is electricity, millions of Americans have a real choice about where and how they want to live.

This is one urban Congressman who understands that the well-being of our cities, and indeed the health of our entire economy, is inextricably bound up with the prosperity of rural America. And while I join in celebrating 50 years of progress, I also share with the rural electric co-ops the belief that, contrary to the opinion of some in this town, the job is not done. There is still much to do in maintaining and building upon work of the past half century.

That is why I have introduced legislation in the House of Representatives that is designed to allow rural co-ops to compete on a more equitable footing with other businesses in providing employee pension benefits. Specifically, my bill aims to correct an oversight in current law in which NRECA's pension is excluded from the increasingly popular salary reduction pension savings program authorized by section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code simply because it is not a profit sharing or stock bonus plan.

Our national pension policy has sought to encourage a broad spectrum of Americans to save for their retirement and section 401(k) was adopted in furtherance of that policy. Yet because of their very nature, the rural electric co-ops do not have stockholders and are nonprofit organizations. Thus, they have been denied the pension benefits available to most public utility companies, for example.

My bill would explicitly allow defined contribution plans of rural electric cooperatives to include a qualified cash or deferred arrangement to encourage pension savings. Since the legislation is narrowly drawn to include only rural electric cooperatives, the revenue loss will be negligible according to the Joint Tax Committee. At a time of great concern over the deficit, this is a very important point in the bill's chances for success.

In closing, I want to congratulate the men and women who have built and sustained the Rural Electrification Program. But, truly, their monument is their work, which has so enriched the lives of millions of rural Americans.●

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate 50 years of the Rural Electric Administration. It is hard to imagine that less than one lifetime ago rural Americans lived much like their pioneering ancestors. Before the coming of REA life in rural America was ruled by the amount of work that could be done by daylight. Without the modern conveniences of electrical appliances and farm equipment life was hard and there seemed little that could be done to improve the standard of living. Only the wealthy could afford electricity in the country. The average rural American could not escape from the daily drudgery of working without the assistance of electricity. That was before Franklin Roosevelt created the REA. This step gave rural Americans the opportunity to help themselves, improve living conditions, and increase agricultural productivity. The Government provided the opportunity but it was the people of rural America that brought about electrification through hard work, organization, and the cooperative. It is this spirit that today keeps over 1,000 rural electric systems serving 25 million consumers in the most remote areas of our Nation. In recognition of this achievement it is fitting that we commemorate the beginnings of this great program.●

● Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct privilege to join my distinguished colleagues J.J. PICKLE and KIKA DE LA GARZA in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Having been raised on a farm I know first hand what a great value REA has been to rural America.

Since 1935 our country has been growing from mud roads and kerosene lanterns to super highways and modern farms, thanks in great part to this great program of electricity and telephones provided by REA.

As one farmer to another I salute these great achievements for America and wish REA well for the future. I want to thank my close friends for taking this time.●

● Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, on May 11, 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an Executive order creating the Rural Electrification Administration [REA] to bring power to rural America. It is one of the greatest success stories launched by any government.

When the agency was created, only 1 out of every 10 farms had electric service. In the early months of the development of REA, it became clear that power companies were not interested in REA's plan to construct electric lines with loan funds that were to be used on an area-wide basis. REA field personnel and the agency's engineers and planners in Washington found instead that it was nonprofit cooperatives, a familiar form of rural business enterprise, which were coming to the forefront, many of them newly organized for the REA loans.

Rural life and work, rural society itself, was transformed forever when rural areas became electrified. The entire process, organizationally and technically, was a test of the ingenuity, resolve and skills of rural citizens and their leaders.

Georgia has several cooperatives which build generating and distributing plants, and provide power at comparatively low costs to thousands of Georgians in rural areas. I have seen first hand what a difference REA can make to bring opportunity to rural users and rural businesses. The facilitation of telephone and electric services has permitted a section of the country that might have been left behind to keep up with more populous areas where the communication and energy industries prosper. The REA has played an important role in unifying numerous small communities and improving the quality of life.

Again, I wanted to take this opportunity to congratulate the Rural Electrification Administration on the occasion of their 50th anniversary. Universal electric and telephone service has become a near-reality because of REA's efforts, and all Americans—urban and rural—have benefited from this achievement.●

● Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, we celebrate today the golden anniversary when opportunity was extended to rural America some 50 years ago—the creation of the rural electrification program which brought electricity to millions who otherwise would have been left in the dark as our Nation surged to the forefront of a bright new age of technology.

Nearly 99 percent of rural households now enjoy the convenience of electricity, a monumental achievement directly related to the establishment of the Rural Electrification Administration. Witness the growth of rural cooperatives in Kentucky today: some 26 electrical distribution cooperatives serve 400,000 separately metered accounts throughout the State.

The economic challenges of the 1980's are similar in scope to those our forebearers faced when the campaign for universal rural electricity was born a half century ago. Absent REA's strong partnership with the rural electric cooperatives, the dream we know today as reality may never have been obtained.

We salute today those whose vision of a better America inspired the rural electrification movement half a century ago. On behalf of their heirs—nearly all rural Americans who now have electricity—we are eternally grateful.●

● Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, May 11—this coming Saturday—marks the 50th anniversary of the birth of the Rural Electrification Administration—more familarly known as the REA. I rise today to commemorate that anniversary and commend the fine job that the REA and rural electric cooperatives have done in "turning on the lights" in rural America.

In 1985, it is difficult to imagine a world without electricity. But in 1935, most of rural America was without electricity, and most rural Americans lived in intolerably primitive conditions. Nowadays, we tend to romanticize about those times when a farmer milked his cows by lantern light or a mother scrubbed her clothes on a washboard or children carried water from the well to the house. As romantic as this scene may be now, it was a tragedy in 1935, and on May 11, 50 years ago, President Franklin Roosevelt signed the Executive order establishing the REA.

This important Executive order, and the Rural Electrification Act—introduced by the late great Sam Rayburn—brought abut the most dramatic change ever in the lives of millions of people in rural areas. Mr. Speaker, farmers no longer had to milk their cows by lantern light, mothers could own labor saving electric appliances, and children could get water from the tap inside the house rather than having to go to the well. Electricity transformed these people's lives from a life of drudgery and slavery to a life of just plain hard work.

After the establishment of the REA, neighbors joined with neighbors to form rural electric cooperatives and worked together to make electricity a reality. These cooperatives are a testament to the American spirit of hard work and ingenuity.

Mr. Speaker, even before I came to this House, and through my position on the Agriculture Committee, I have seen the fine work that rural electric cooperatives have done in bringing electricity to rural areas. The affordable electricity provided by cooperatives has allowed the expansion of agribusiness, and has brought about technological changes that make American Agriculture the envy of the entire world. Also, Mr. Speaker, electric cooperatives have spurred the growth of industry in rural areas, bringing much needed jobs to people who otherwise would have been doomed to a life of unemployment.

As much of a success story as rural electric cooperatives have been, they are still needed as much today as they were back in 1935 to provide affordable electric power to rural America. Unfortunately, on the eve of the REA's 50th anniversary, this administration has made two proposals that would effectively eliminate rural electric cooperatives and the reliable service they provide. One proposal is to eliminate the REA Engineering Standards Division. The other proposal—a plan to replace the REA's general fund rule with a working capital criterion—would make 70 percent of the rural electric cooperatives ineligible for new REA loans or advances on already approved loans. Mr. Speaker, in a time that we are trying to promote economic growth and recovery, it makes little sense for this administration to eliminate one of the best vehicles for economic growth and recovery.

I want to commend the REA and all the rural electric cooperatives for their dedication over the past 50 years, and I look forward to their continued service for the next 50. Thank you.●

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Mr. DE LA GARZA, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] for taking this special order today. I am happy to join with them in paying tribute to the Rural Electrification Administration [REA] on its 50th anniversary.

It seems hard to believe today that up until the mid-1930's only 10 percent of all the farms in this country had electric service. It was not until 1936, when the REA was created by President Roosevelt, that a serious effort was undertaken to "turn on the lights" in rural America. Today, as a result of REA and the very dedicated and hardworking people who made it a success, 99 percent of U.S. farms enjoy electric service.

Mr. Speaker, it would have been worth the effort if this work had only been done to make life more convenient for those in our Nation who chose to farm the land and provide food for America and the rest of the world. That alone would have been a worthy goal. But, the REA's effect has been much greater.

The more than 1,000 rural electric cooperatives across the country have enabled the American farmer and rancher to increase productivity tremendously, for obvious reasons. Small businesses, as well as larger ones, have been able to move to a more rural setting because of the availability of electricity. That has meant new jobs and better opportunities for everyone involved.

Another positive result has been the fact that the REA and the rural cooperatives have become a vital part of the communities they serve. The directors of the co-ops are the leaders in those communities and they have worked over the years to continue to improve the quality of life for these people.

There is no doubt that the REA has been good for Mississippi. Our State is predominately rural and I can tell you that it was the rule rather than the exception to find homes without electricity in the 1930's in my part of the country. The REA helped change all that and the cooperatives are at work today making sure that the systems are updated and things are running smoothly.

Mr. Speaker, we appreciate what the creation of the REA has meant to the people of Mississippi, as well as the rest of rural America. I am proud to take part in this recognition of its golden anniversary.●

● Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to join my colleagues today in offering recognition and praise for a program that in 50 short years has had the most profound of impacts on rural America: the Rural Electrification Program. At the outset, I want to thank my distinguished friend and colleague, the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, KIKA DE LA GARZA, for reserving time today for this special tribute.

As the Representative of a predominately rural district in South Carolina, I can attest to the lifelines, both economic and social, rural electric and telephone cooperatives have provided my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, approximately 340,000 business and residential customers are currently served by rural electric systems in South Carolina—over 3 percent of the total number of rural electric customers nationwide.

In 1935, when the REA Program was established by Executive order by then-President Franklin D. Roosevelt, only 2 percent of South Carolina's farms were electrified. By 1978, that number had climbed to 98 percent.

In addition to the immeasurable impact electrification has had on the lives and well-being of rural Americans, the economic impact of greatly increased agricultural productivity is impressive as well. Farmers whose production feed an average of 20 Americans in 1935, now feed an average of 75 persons per farmer.

As impressive as the statistics regarding increased productivity and economic activity are, perhaps the most lasting and significant impact the rural electric program has had has been on the quality of life in rural America. Not only has rural America been brought directly into the mainstream of life in this great Nation, but the overall health and well-being of these Americans has been greatly enhanced by the provision of basic services most Americans have taken for granted for many decades.

Mr. Speaker, rural electric and telephone services have and will continue to have substantial impacts on rural America. And since 1935, most administration's have worked hand-in-hand to provide the necessary financial mechanisms to allow these services to be delivered efficiently.

In the last Congress, the House passed comprehensive legislation aimed at shoring up the Federal fund which provides the lending base on which this program rests. It was a comprehensive reform package, drafted in recognition of the present constraints on Federal spending, that would have gradually increased interest rates to REA borrowers while rejecting less thoughtful approaches that simply eliminating many of these necessary loan programs.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House Budget Committee, it has been and will continue to be my aim to ensure that all Federal spending is carefully scrutinized and reductions effected equitably. The REA Program will necessarily be a part of this review. I intend to utilize my efforts, however, to ensure that each of my colleagues is aware of the outstanding record of success of this program, and its vital role in rural America.

Proposals aimed at immediately increasing interest costs to borrowers from the REA, as well as interest rates on repayment of existing debt from Federal Power Marketing Administrations—which are often significant sources of energy for rural electric systems—serve only to undermine the services rural electric and telephone cooperative must provide.

In fact, my colleagues might be interested to note that based on 1984 figures, the electric rates charged by rural cooperatives were higher than rates charged by neighboring utilities 72.3 percent of the time. In South Carolina, over one-half of the rural electric cooperatives must charge rates higher than neighboring utilities.

While we must appreciate and acknowledge the very important budget constraints we face, and the need to take effective action to lower Federal deficits, measures aimed simply at undercutting the goals and objectives of successful Federal programs must be rejected.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to work closely with my friend from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], on this issue during this Congress. There are few, if any, programs that have such a positive and significant impact on rural Americans.●

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to join our colleagues in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program.

Special praise should be given to the leaders of the rural electric cooperatives, which serve an important part of the population in my home district in the Florida Keys, and throughout the State of Florida. I salute the dedication and leadership of the president and manager of the Florida Keys Electric Cooperative, the members who own it, and that of the Florida Rural Electric Cooperatives Association. Their accomplishments and progress over the years have helped the Florida Keys accommodate its unpredicatably rapid population growth and development.

The Florida Keys Electric Cooperative, located in Tavernier in the Florida Keys, was organized and incorporated in 1940. Its 45th annual meeting will soon take place. Although not a farming area like other areas served by cooperatives, the community which FKEC serves was in the 1940's primarily a fishing area. This fishing community provided the impetus for bringing electric service into the Florida Keys.

Back then, the Florida Keys consisted of only a few fishing camps, a few houses for commercial fishermen, some stores, a few Red Cross hurricane cottages, and a lot of mangroves. Only 59 consumers received electric power for about 6 hours a day from small generating plants. A few pioneers, who were dissatisfied with the lack of electric service, banded together to request the Federal Rural Electrification Administration to assist them financially in establishing an economically feasible, community-owned and built power system in an area not served by other utilities. As the need for electricity grew, FKEC expanded its operations so that its generating capacity could meet the needs of the populace, businesses, and fishing industry.

Today, the continued success of the operations of the cooperative remains strong. Looking forward, FKEC's most important step for the future power supply of the Florida Keys was an agreement for the interconnection with the City Electric System of Key West and the proposed wheeling of power to the co-op.

This investor-owned utility is a member of a parent organization located in Tallahassee, the Florida Rural Electric Cooperatives Association, which also deserves special mention. The 16 rural electric cooperatives which are members of the association provide dependable service to over 1 million citizens in 49 counties in Florida. These individual cooperatives depend on the insights and guidance of the association's leaders and staff to assist them in their many needs. The association has called on me many times to discuss various legislative issues of interest to them, and I am happy to continue my dialog with them.

Again, I join our colleagues in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the rural electrification of America. This is indeed a noteworthy celebration, for without rural electrification, America—and my congressional district—would have greatly suffered.●

● Mr. HATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to pay tribute to the Rural Electrification Administration [REA] on its 50th anniversary. Hailing from a predominantly rural area in south Georgia, I have witnessed firsthand the positive changes that have taken through the work of the REA.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt had the foresight to establish the REA on May 11, 1935, and he was followed 1 year later with the passage by Congress of the Rural Electrification Act, which funded the REA. The subsequent success of the REA came largely from a concerted effort on the part of millions of Americans throughout the rural areas of the country. As we face what is considered one of the worst financial crises in the Nation's farm belt since the Great Depression, we should take note of the dedication and inner strength of those same Americans, who were able to bounce back from the depression and set the country on a road to prosperity again.

REA cooperatives today bring a standard of living to rural America that is comparable to urban areas. We should indeed be proud of the REA's outstanding record of achievement as we salute 50 years of rural electrification.●

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to join in the tribute to the rural electrification program on this, its 50th anniversary.

Only 50 years ago, millions of rural Americans routinely used wood-burning stoves to cook, kerosene lanterns for light, and hand pumps to get their water. Less than 1 farm in 10 nationwide had the luxury of basic electrical service. This harsh lifestyle was changed by the creation of the Rural Electrification Administration [REA] in 1935. This agency assisted rural communities to obtain financing which permitted them to build generating stations, transmission and distribution lines. The low interest charged kept the cost of electricity equal to what was paid by their urban counterparts. Later, this agency provided the means for rural areas to extend and improve their telephone service.

Today we salute the 50th anniversary of the program which brought rural America some of the comforts which had been available to urban dwellers for years. This program provided affordable, reliable electricity in the quiet corners of the country. These areas were routinely avoided by the large power companies because of the large investment required for startup and the small return on the dollar. From the REA came the electric cooperatives. Today there are still almost 1,000 electric cooperatives located in 46 States. Two cooperatives in my district, southern Maryland and Choptank, serve over 90,000 homes thanks to REA.

Rural America is not as large as it was 50 years ago. Our population is centered around urban areas where electricity is easily and readily available. However, those that have remained in rural areas, many of them ranchers and farmers providing for the needs of their fellow Americans, still depend on the rural electrification program to assure a dependable continuation of affordable energy.

In 1973 the Congress created the revolving fund, an independent, long-term source of capital which provides insured loans to finance the rural cooperatives. The low interest charged for these loans guarantees those receiving electricity in remote areas will pay no more than those in the cities.

In spite of all the service that the REA has provided over the decades, it is in trouble and faces an end of services. The 1986 ceiling is $800 million with no new guaranteed loans scheduled and the lending program is to be phased out entirely in 1990. This demise comes at a time when this program continues to provide the same dependable service it was originally designed to provide. Hundreds of thousands of Americans will be adversely affected by the loss of the Rural Electrification Program.

Much of rural America is facing continuing and escalating financial loss and stress. This problem is further aggravated by the plight of our agricultural industry. We cannot turn our backs on those families who have already sacrificed so much. The basic quality of life requires the availability of affordable electricity.

Mr. Speaker, fellow Members, in 1985, the golden anniversary of the REA and its goal to provide electricity to rural America, it would be a cruel act if we let this important program slip away when it is the backbone of electricity in rural areas. I ask you to join today in saluting the accomplishments of the REA and the rural electrification program and also commit yourselves to protecting this program for the citizens of America who depend on it, and us.●

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I deeply appreciate this opportunity arranged by the gentlemen from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA and Mr. PICKLE] to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program.

There was a time when 90 percent of all rural Americans did not have access to central station electric service. With the establishment of the Rural Electrification Administration by President Roosevelt on May 11, 1935, however, a movement of cooperation between the Government and the rural community was begun that has resulted today in the participation of 25 million Americans in our rural electric systems. Individuals who otherwise would not have had the chance to utilize electricity for light and power were able to do so and farmers began to recognize the potential for electricity in their daily work.

In my home State of Pennsylvania, with a relatively dense population, the number of electrified farms 50 years ago was only 25 percent. Today, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania over 600,000 consumers are served by our nonprofit, consumer-owned rural electric cooperatives.

Rural electrification has a proud history. Virtually every corner of our Nation today has access to electric service, largely because of the work of the Rural Electrification Administration and rural electric cooperatives. The REA has been a very successful Government program that has helped to provide access to electricity to millions of rural Americans while helping to provide lower cost food to our urban population. Thus, the future of the American farmer and rural Americans continues to be linked with our rural electric systems. I am hopeful that this anniversary will serve to underline the importance of having an effective rural electrification system playing a pivotal role in helping us to address the current problems facing the American farmer. The REA has established a true partnership of the people with the Government and congratulations are in order for all those who have participated in a difficult job splendidly done.●

● Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Program which is administered by the Rural Electrification Administration [REA].

The programs of the REA literally brought American farms out of the dark ages and changed the face of rural America forever. Because of the modernization programs of the REA, American farming became the most efficient and productive agricultural endeavor in the world.

Although my district is in an urban area, everyone in my State experiences the benefits of the REA programs—from farmers to urban dwellers with summer homes throughout Wisconsin. I will continue to support the work of the REA and would like to include in the RECORD the following article on the subject which recently appeared in the Milwaukee Journal.

[From the Milwaukee Journal, Apr. 7, 1985]

REA IS 50, MORE POWER TO IT

HATLEY, WI.—Frank Rombalski, 69, scratched the back of his memory for a moment but then wondered, why?

"It's such a nice thing to forget," he said.

But then he reached back again and the memories formed one little smile after another, not because of the things he had forgotten but because of the miracle that allowed them to be put behind.

The miracle is light.

This is the year of anniversaries in America—40 years since Iwo Jima, 10 since the fall of Saigon, and 1 since Cyndi Lauper became a star.

But in some ways more significantly than any of those, 1985 also is the golden anniversary of the act that brought rural America out of the dark ages.

Though it means little to those of us born into a world of blow dryers and electric guitars, around farmhouses the birth of the Rural Electrification Administration is not going unnoticed.

Frank and Louise Rombalski remembered, as did Earl and June Olsen, who live west of Iola. Iola is the home of the Central Wisconsin Electric Cooperative that finally brought electricity to their farms in the mid-1940s.

"It brought the city to the country," Rombalski said.

"It revolutionized rural America," Olsen said.

The REA was conceived and ordered by President Roosevelt, who had concluded that rural America had gone without electricity long enough.

American cities were plugged in by then. There were lights, refrigerators and power to run pumps for indoor plumbing. But the wires seldom stretched to the countryside. Utilities considered farms too far apart to make rural electrification possible and profitable.

Many farmers felt short-changed even if they understood the economics.

"You weren't a second-rate citizen, but you couldn't have refrigeration," said Olsen, 72. "We didn't have water in the house."

Louise Rombalski said, "You had to make do, that's all there was to it."

But after the REA was formed, there was more to it. It offered rural citizens who formed cooperatives the low-cost loans needed to plant poles and string wire along country roads. They then could contract with the utilities that had previously snubbed them and buy current to replace the lanterns in the barns, houses and schools of rural America.

Olsen filled out his membership card on the hood of the organizer's car. Rombalski, who went from farm to farm to enlist co-op members, said some farmers had to save for a few months to get the $5 fee, but that the army of this revolution had no opponents.

Even before the lines went up, farmers hired contractors to prepare their buildings for power.

"The engineers at my place came kitty-corner across a field and, of course, I don't think we cared where they put the poles at the time," Olsen said. "Afterwards, I think they probably could have put them in a little handier place, but we just were glad to get current."

Current in the lines and current with the times. That was when farmers milked cows by hand in the yellow light of kerosene lanterns and tried not to have to go into the hayloft after dark.

"You had to carry that lantern with you, and it wasn't a very safe thing," Olsen said. "There were a few fires that were caused by that, but when electricity came . . . it was a great thing for farmers."

And farm women, for whom life was very hard.

Louise Rombalski, 68, who looked after her nine children and 14 cattle while Frank taught school at Galloway during the 1940s, said: "I only remember the worst part of it, pumping water by hand for 14 cattle twice a day for 45 minutes. The kids would watch me until they'd get tired."

But she couldn't get tired because there was not power for a pump and the water was needed.

June Olsen said:

"You worked all the time. You carried the wood in to heat the stove and that turned into ashes and you had to carry it out. You carried your water in, and then you carried it out. You worked all the time and you were tired by the end of the day. It's a wonder farmers lived to be so old."

Not all lived long enough to see rural America into the bright lights of the 20th century. Olsen's father died in 1937, after the REA was formed but before electricity reached his farm near Rosbolt.

"I often thought of that," Olsen said. "It sure would have been wonderful if he could have seen that. I lived with my mother until she was over 90 years old and I tell you, I was glad she had many years of electricity."

When power reached her farm, Louise Rombalski felt she was joining "the rest of the world, really. We had had nothing, no telephones. If we had good voices we could communicate with the neighbor across the road.

"We just couldn't believe it was happening. We got a break from some faraway place and all of a sudden, things started happening to us."

It was an awe-inspiring, exciting time. First came the poles, then the wire, Frank said, and "all of a sudden you'd see the neighbor had lights and you'd call to one another."

"What a wonderful thing. It was just out of this world, let's put it like that."

When the lights went on inside the house, the bathrooms could follow. Refrigerators, even if they weren't self-defrosting, ended the chore of lowering milk on a rope into the well to cool it, and meant fresh meat didn't have to be stuck away in salt brine in a crock in the basement to prevent spoiling.

It meant coolers for the milk house, power for the milking machine, and a measure of safety in the hayloft. And it meant that people in the country had access to the same conveniences that made life easier in the cities.

For those who could afford more, it meant labor-saving appliances. But for everyone, it meant lights.

"A lot of people said it could never be done, that farmers and rural people could never run their own utility," said Olsen, who, though retired from farming, still is president of the local electric co-op. Romba lski is secretary.

Theirs is one of about 30 electric cooperatives in Wisconsin and, like the others, is collecting notes on the past for a special publication marking the anniversary.

"You're young," his wife told a visitor as she served coffee from a percolator in her thoroughly modern kitchen.

"You don't realize what a struggle we had. When they talk about the good old days, bosh, they can have them.

"We certainly owe Franklin Delano Roosevelt a lot."●

● Mr. LEATH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the Rural Electrification Administration—a program that has helped countless rural Americans acquire something that we all take for granted—electricity. You know, it's hard to mention the REA without thinking of the man who did so much for that program, the man who represented for 42 years the district I now represent—Mr. Bob Poage. I talked with Congressman Poage a couple of weeks ago, when I was down in the district, and we discussed the problems of rural development that existed 50 years ago. "The first thing you had to develop," Mr. Poage said to me, "was the roads. Then you had to have electricity and then water."

But Congressman Poage wasn't one to just sit around and talk about how things should be. From the time he got to Washington Mr. Poage worked tirelessly to ensure adequate funding for the REA. He authored the bill expanding the program to include loans for telephone service, as well as the bill establishing a loan and grant program for rural water and sewer systems. I doubt we can fully appreciate what rural America would be like today without the contributions of Congressman Poage.

And the first step in the process was the creation of the REA. I'm proud to stand here today and tell you that the first REA cooperative in the Nation to begin producing electricity is located in Bartlett, TX, which it is my privilege to represent. I talked just last week with Mr. Horace Keith, who lives down in Bartlett. Mr. Keith not only worked to help string the original power lines, but served for almost 30 years as manager of the cooperative.

He and his wife Marie remembered well what it was like in those days before they had electricity, or telephones, or even roads to speak of. They remembered coal oil lamps, and wood stoves, and how Mrs. Keith washed the clothes for this family of eight children by hand, using a washboard and tub.

They spoke of how the REA program had not just benefited rural areas, but the entire nation's economy as well. "Just think," they said to me, "of the many washing machines, and lamps, and other electric appliances we all bought." And this was a time, let us not forget, when one-quarter of the American people lived in rural areas.

So today, Mr. Speaker, we salute these people who banded together and gave freely of their time, and energy, and know-how; these people who worked tirelessly to see the completion of their dream—a dream of electric service for all. "The most beautiful sight," Mrs. Keith said to me, "was the sight of the smallest shack, miles away from any neighbors, with that electric line now running to it. We didn't want to leave out anyone just because they were far away," she said, "and we didn't."

These people, ladies and gentlemen, are the people who have made America the great Nation she is—a nation where neighbors are brothers, a nation where all work for the good of the community, a nation where no one is left out. I'm reminded of a tree; because as you know, trees need strong roots in order to flourish—in order for the trunk to grow tall; in order for the tree to bear fruit. Without strong roots, that tree withers. Rural America is today, and always has been, the strong roots of our Nation, and may we never forget that America's success is built on that strength.●

● Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, rural electric cooperatives helped to transform the quality of life for millions of farmers and other people in Wisconsin and other parts of rural America over the past 50 years.

When the Rural Electrification Administration [REA] was created 50 years ago, less then 10 percent of all rural families enjoyed basic utility services. In those years before REA, farmers had to endure enormous hardships and struggle with many of the simplest tasks we all now take for granted. Agriculture was a much more back-breaking endeavor than it is today and everything from pumping water to keeping food fresh was a major chore.

Without electricity, there was no easy way to raise water from the well. There were no electric lights or heat, no telephones, no electric irons, no washing machines or stereos, or television, or refrigeration. For Wisconsin's dairy farmers that meant lowering milk on a rope into the well to cool it. It also meant that you tried to avoid the hayloft after dark because of the dangers involved in taking a kerosene lantern with you.

The reason for this was simply that private utilities considered farms too far apart and the countryside too sparsely populated to make rural electrification a profitable commercial proposition. For many of the same reasons that the Federal Government provided assistance to the railroads in their endeavor to establish a transcontinental railroad system, the Federal Government established the goal of bringing electricity to rural areas.

REA offered rural citizens who formed co-ops the low cost loans needed to plant poles and string wire along country roads.

Today, reliable electricity and telephone service is available to 25 million people in 46 States throughout rural America at affordable rates set by farmers and their neighbors who are members and directors of nearly 1,000 member-owned local co-ops.

In Wisconsin, rural electric and telephone co-ops play a vital part in the State's economic picture. The 29 electric co-ops serve more than half of the State's farm and rural population—over 122,000 households. They also provide service to nearly 4,000 small commercial customers. And they have an important role in Wisconsin's tourism industry, providing service to about 32,000 customers for seasonal homes or cottages.

REA has come a long way and produced enormous benefits for rural America, but the job is not yet completed.

That's why I am very pleased to join in honoring REA on its golden anniversary not only to remember the great advances that rural America has enjoyed as a result of its work, but also to wish it and the rural co-ops it supports many more good years of service bringing light to the people of rural America.●

● Mr. THOMAS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this day marks the 50th anniversary of the birth of rural electrification. It is an anniversary of a day that began a transformation of America.

The Rural Electrification Administration is, of course, a national program. But in Georgia, we lay claim to being the State that was the cornerstone of its creation.

It is almost impossible in 1985 to understand the incredible burden of poverty that held rural America in a relentless grip some 50 years ago. It was a yoke that was particularly heavy in the rural South, and it oppressed both our people and our economy.

REA is today such an unqualified success that we tend to take it for granted. And yet, it was a revolutionary concept when it was established, and there were many who predicted its failure.

It succeeded in large measure because it was handed to local people by the Government as a kind of seed, and it was placed in their hands to be planted and nurtured. This organization of local control is very much alive and well today in the system of local REA cooperatives. When you talk about a partnership of local citizens making a government program work as it should, you are talking about REA.

I am very proud of the fact that Mr. Walter Harrison of Millen, GA, in my congressional district, was one of the key leaders in rural electrification in its earliest days, and remains one of its most respected and effective leaders. He is one of the most accomplished and intelligent men I have ever known, and he typifies the citizen leadership of rural electrification.

Today, there are critics who say that REA has worked itself out of a job. They contend it is time for the Government to pull the plug.

They are wrong for at least two reasons.

First, the work of REA is far from complete. It is a thriving, hard-working enterprise, and if its labors are stilled, it would be a tragic step backward toward a rural America that was a national burden rather than a national resource.

Second, the REA has been a program that makes money for the Government in both the loans made to help fund its operation and in the tax revenue that comes from economic activity made possible by REA power.

Mr. Speaker, it is well known that rural America today faces its greatest crisis since the Great Depression. Falling commodity prices, soaring production costs, and declining export trade are just some of the reasons that America's rural economies have been ravaged at a time when the rest of our Nation has enjoyed a period of recovery.

Agriculture and agribusiness remain this Nation's largest employer. But agriculture and rural America have been gravely wounded in recent years. If we compound those problems by an attack on REA, we will do so at our own national economic peril.

Mr. Speaker, I am here to salute REA and the men and women who make it work. The fruits of their labor are their own best testimonial, and I am honored to associate myself with them on this day and at all other times.

At this point I would like to insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article which appeared in the May 3 edition of the Atlanta Constitution by Ms. Priscilla Painton.

I thank my colleagues.

1935: THE YEAR THE LIGHTS CAME ON IN RURAL GEORGIA

(By Priscilla Painton)

Brothers and sisters,
I want to tell you this.
The greatest thing on earth is to have the love of God in your heart,
And the next greatest thing is to have electricity in your house.

—A farmer giving witness in a rural Tennessee church in the early 1940s.

On May 7, 1937, Ethel Caudle was down at a Methodist church in Troup County when someone flipped the switch for the first time. "We were standing on the steps when the lights came on," the 81-year-old said, in a pious whisper. "We went inside and looked at them. What better place could we be?"

By the turn of the century, electricity had turned most of the nation's cities into beacons of the Industrial Revolution. But for rural America, electricity had done nothing except, by its absence, illuminate the farmers' days of drudgery and evenings of fumbling like moles in near darkness.

After sunset, "you just had to feel yourself around," said Murlin Whitlow, 80, of LaGrange.

Then came the Rural Electrification Act, which is 50 years old next week. Less than a year after the order was signed, Mrs. Whitlow's first bulb popped with light and she suddenly knew "how dark it (had been). You realized it more than ever. And when you saw the light, you saw the light and you wanted to keep the light."

Mrs. Whitlow kept the light and discarded much more. She got rid of the stove that she had kept burning at the height of summer because washing, ironing and baking knew no season. She put away the kerosene lamps whose small circle of light had tightened her eyes and wrinkled her brows. And she quit hauling wood and water, the chores that curved her shoulders before old age.

For these, and many other reasons, Mrs. Whitlow and rural residents across the nation next week will commemorate the start of a revolution completed quietly within their lifetimes. On May 11, 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Rural Electrification Act, which made possible the wiring of millions of farms across America. That day, fewer than 11 out of 100 farms in the United States had electricity. Thirty-five years later, 99 out of every 100 farms were hooked up.

Georgians may be able to take some credit for this. Roosevelt blamed a Georgia electric bill for sparking the Rural Electrification Act and the Washington agency that went with it.

"There was only one discordant note in that first stay of mine at Warm Springs." Roosevelt said in 1938 of his Georgia refuge. "When the first-of-the-month bill came in for electric light for my cottage, I found that the charge was 18 cents per kilowatt-hour—about four times as much as I paid in Hyde Park, New York. That started my long study of proper public utility charges for electric current and the whole subject of getting electricity into farm homes."

Fifty years later, the Rural Electrification Administration, which lends money and guarantees loans for the construction of electric power systems, has spawned about 1,000 utility cooperatives nationwide, serving about 25 million people.

Georgia, like many other states, had no statute legalizing the corporate creature that Roosevelt's administration had envisioned would carry out the federal electrification program—a non-profit organization owned and run by its members. So in 1937 the Legislature passed the Electric Membership Corporation Act. Today Georgia has 2.3 million consumers, the highest number in the nation.

About 50 years later, REA is the acronym that has perhaps reached farthest into the political vocabulary of rural America. Not long ago, a woman near Goldsboro, N.C., was interviewed by a reporter before a vote in the State Legislature on the Equal Rights Amendment. "The ERA? Hell yes, I'm for ERA. Never would have had lights without it," she said.

The night the lights came on is often remembered as one of life's apotheoses for many rural families, ranking with marriages and births. Terry Kay, an Atlanta writer and also assistant to the general manager of the company that supplies most of the Georgia cooperatives with electricity, said his family in Vanna, Ga., gathered ceremoniously around the living room's naked bulb.

"We did not move, or speak," he recalled. "My sister, Peggy, who was standing near the wall switch, pulled the switch down, to Off, and the light snapped away. She pushed it to On, and the light reappeared. Off. On. Off. On. Light and shadow danced in the room. And then Gary, my younger brother, moved to my sister, Patsy. . . . He hugged her leg, tugged at her. And he said, 'Peggy, better quit doing that. She's going to burn out all the batteries.' "

"I'M CELEBRATING TODAY"

Even when the lights came during the day, many farmers refused to turn them off until late, out of fear that they would disappear, or just to savor their glow. One Georgia farmer, who told his story to the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, said it was spring and plowing time when the REA brought electricity to his home. "But I wouldn't go to the field," he recalled.

"I wanted to wait in the house and see what happened. The wife told me I was going to wear out the pull chain before we got the lights. I guess I was afraid of the bulbs bursting. They finally came in the late afternoon. There was plenty of light outside, the missis says, 'Aren't you going back out?' 'No,' I says, 'I'm celebrating today. I'm gonna sit here till dark and see how supper eats with a good light.' "

For Mrs. Whitlow, electricity eventually brought a washing machine that relieved her of a ritual whose strainful steps she can still describe:

"You put your clothes in a big old tub of warm water and you put lye soap in it. You rubbed them clothes on a rub board, you battled them on a battling block, we called it, then you rubbed them some more, then you put them in a pot and you boiled them, then you took 'em and wrenched them in three different waters, you wrenched them out of this one, then out of that one, and that one, and . . . then you hung 'em up.

"Now you go to a well and pull up three tubs of water," she said, almost defiantly. "Then you'll realize what a machine means to you."

LIGHT AFFORDED PROTECTION

Because there was no electricity, there were also full days for canning and ironing and baking, summer days during which the stove breathed such heat there seemed no air left for her.

Meanwhile, her husband, William, milked his cows by the faint light of kerosene, worrying first that it not tip over and burn the hay-filled barn, and worrying next that the milk not spoil as it waited for the dairy truck on the side of the road.

There was no electric pump to water his cows, no electric gauger to feed his livestock, no electric motor to unload his cottonseed and shovel it into the barn. So farmers like the Whitlows usually turned in after sunset, ending the day in the same darkness with which they had begun.

From electricity, Mrs. Whitlow learned, strangely, that she could feel afraid in the dimness of moonlight. For man-made light suddenly gave her a sense of protection. "You can see, and you can know what's going on around you. Anything that's starting in on you, anything happening, you can see," she said.

'WATCHING' THE NEW RADIO

That's perhaps why the lights on the farmhouse porch are still her favorite. They used to shine on the path her husband took when he returned to the couple's cottage from visiting his parents nearby. Her mother-in-law "turned that porch light on and watched him home. The light was bright and she could watch him just going home. 'Cause the light would shine all the way down to our little porch," she said.

If electricity made the world seem safer, it also burst the boundaries of life in rural America—to the thrill of some farmers and the bewilderment of others.

Radios were one of the first purchases in newly wired towns and, almost overnight, living rooms were filled with soap operas, pieces of advice and news dispatches.

Although radio broke some farmers' sense of isolation, it gave them one of a different kind.

"You know, people back then, they visited a lot," recalled Mrs. Whitlow. After radio, families stayed home to "watch" the radio, for they invariably looked at it as they listened.

"I kept up with some of the stories. . . and my neighbor across the street couldn't see why I settled down and listened to the stories like I did," said Mrs. Caudle. "And then her daugther gave her a radio, and she started, and when I'd go over, she didn't want me to say a word."●

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to participate today in this special order commemorating the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the Rural Electric Administration by President Franklin Roosevelt.

In 1935, REA was created to provide electric service to those many Americans who lived in the rural parts of our country. At that time, only 10 percent of rural Americans received electricity. The goal of REA from the start was to give technical and financial help to consumer-owned rural electric cooperatives and other utilities who would provide electric service in rural areas. It has done a marvelous job of doing just that for the past 50 years, and will continue to do so in the future.

Being from Pennsylvania, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to point out that the first Administrator of the Rural Electric Administration came from our Commonwealth. Morris Lewellyn Cooke served as President Roosevelt's first Administrator after working on the issue of electric utilities for our Governor Gifford Pinchot in the 1920's. The second REA Administrator, John M. Carmody, also came from Pennsylvania. When you throw in the fact that the first rural electric cooperative in Pennsylvania was established in 1936, 49 years ago you can certainly see how Pennsylvania has been interwined with the history of rural electricity.

Although rural Americans today benefit from electricity, the job of rural electric cooperatives is not over. As new customers arrive in rural areas, they must be connected to electricity with new lines. Of course, the quality of the old lines must be maintained with improvements and repairs. And any new generating plants in rural areas will need assistance in providing adequate and inexpensive supplies of electricity.

For all of these reasons, the Rural Electric Administration should be highly commended on its 50th anniversary, and on behalf of the rural citizens of Pennsylvania, I wish them a fruitful future. The assistance they have provided already to millions of Americans is immeasurable.●

● Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to join in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration, a Federal agency that has helped to literally light up the lives of countless thousands of rural Americans.

Over its 50-year history, REA has helped pay for power supply and distribution facilities serving Coloradans on almost 60,000 miles of line in the State.

When REA was created in 1935, only 11.2 percent of Colorado farms had central station electrical service. Our State's first REA-financed project was activated in Grand Junction in 1937. Since then, REA has loaned more than $700 million to rural Colorado power cooperatives. Today, of the 25,300 farms in our State, over 98 percent have electric service.

The REA's history, both in Colorado and across the country, is one of remarkable investment in our Nation's infrastructure. On behalf of more than 270,000 rural Coloradans who use REA-financed electrical service, let me offer sincere congratulations to the Rural Electrification Administration on its 50th birthday.●

● Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, there are many things that are so much a part of our everyday lives, that we rarely think about them, or imagine what our lives would be like if they weren't there. Such is the case with electricity.

But, some of us who grew up in rural America can remember what life was like without electricity. We can remember coal and wood stoves, summers with no air-conditioning, farms and houses where all the power was supplied by man, mule, or horse. We can remember this, Mr. Speaker, because electricity didn't reach the rural areas of our Nation until Government and the people decided to work together to "electrify" all of America.

In the 1930's, when power lines were becoming a common sight in the cities of our Nation, the people of rural America still operated as they always had. Because of cost and other factors, it became clear that private utility companies were not going to extend their lines and the power they brought to the rural communities.

President Roosevelt saw this problem, and he determined to find a way to bring electricity to all sections of our country.

In May 1935, he signed an Executive order, creating the Rural Electrification Administration [REA]. This order was signed in Warm Springs, GA, which is in the heart of my district.

Under the auspices of REA, cooperatives began to develop, made up of people who wanted electricity on their farms or in their community. These electric membership cooperatives or EMC's became the catalyst that finally stretched power lines into even the most remote sections of our country.

Electricity changed rural America. It gave our farms the capability and machinery to produce enough so that we can now feed the world.

It brought new industry and economic activity to small towns and communities.

Just as it did with all other segments of our country, the coming of electricity opened rural America up to the wonders and effectiveness of modern technology.

That is what we celebrate today when we look at the 50 years since President Roosevelt first set out to spread electric capability. We celebrate the 25 million consumers who now have electricity because of the cooperation and the spirit of willingness that led to rural electrification.

For myself, it's a personal celebration as well. Because I will always remember the wonder and awe a small farm boy felt when he looked across the fields and, for the first time, saw his house ablaze with lights. I remember how electricity brought new life to our farm and community, so it is with gratitude and pride that I join today in celebrating the 50th anniversary of the REA.●

● Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Rural Electrification Administration [REA]. As we all know, REA is responsible for bringing modern, affordable telephone and electric service to rural America. Key to REA's success is its standards setting program for rural utility construction.

Over the years, REA's telecommunications engineering and standards division has worked with REA borrowers, equipment manufacturers, and construction contractors to develop telephone system designs best suited to rural conditions. Because of the high caliber of standards work performed by REA, non-REA borrowers serving all areas of the United States and abroad have chosen to adopt REA specifications for electric and telephone plant construction.

Mr. Speaker, REA's standards have made enormous contribution to the quality of life of rural citizens, and to all Americans by enhancing the public telephone network. Standardization of rural telephone system plants has resulted in high-quality telephone service to and from rural areas. REA is in the best position to establish industry standards for its borrowers because of its expertise in rural telephone service and also because it has the power to enforce its specifications.

I am extremely troubled, Mr. Speaker, that despite its huge success in setting industry standards, REA is currently considering abandoning its function. This would be a serious blow to REA borrowers and nonborrowers who rely on REA standards work, particularly at this time of unprecedented, technological, and regulatory change in the telephone industry. The rural telephone industry depends on REA's publications, which are the only comprehensive publications on rural telephone system design. It also relies on REA's outstanding engineering staff to test new equipment and monitor operational equipment.

REA standards are also responsible for minimizing telephone company costs by ensuring competitive bidding on standardized equipment. It would be absurd to eliminate REA's standards and thereby risk higher telephone construction and maintenance costs, particularly in light of today's rural economic climate. Everyone is painfully aware of rising telephone charges, in the wake of the AT&T divestiture and deregulation. Higher telephone charges are compounding the economic crisis in rural America. Surely we do not want to relinquish a Government operation which is not only doing its job superbly, but also saving consumers money, a cost savings that may mean the difference between being able to afford a telephone and being forced to drop off the telephone network.

While no decision has been made as to the fate of the REA standards program, an alarming number of staff have left the standards division in the last year and their positions are not being filled. This is weakening the agency's ability to perform this vital function.

Mr. Speaker, REA has served the country well in its first 50 years, but it has much to do to ensure that telephone service remains affordable and available to rural citizens in Minnesota and throughout the country. I am extremely proud of the REA program and will work to maintain a strong REA.●

● Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, we are honoring today a successful program, one which has provided opportunities for millions of rural Americans that might never have become available if it had not been for this program—the Rural Electrification Administration.

As the son of a rural mail carrier in Oklahoma, I saw first hand the improvements in the quality of life in rural America which were a direct result of REA.

In much of Oklahoma, as in other rural areas, utility companies cannot provide affordable electric service. The density of population is too low to profitably build powerlines. Without electric cooperatives, the potential most rural areas have for economic development could never be realized.

Rural America has made great strides in developing its potential. While private enterprise can do many things better and more efficiently than government, it has in many cases not been able to provide to rural America the low-cost energy that it provides to urban Americans.

REA has been able to provide electricity to rural Americans who would not be able to afford it otherwise. Urban America depends on rural America to a greater degree than many people realize. If rural America cannot develop its resources to their fullest potential, then neither will America.

I spoke with a group of members from the Oklahoma Association of Rural Electric Cooperatives yesterday. These people recognize the sacrifices all Americans must make if we are to reduce the deficit. They are prepared to accept a reduction of 20 percent in the level of funds available for loans to cooperatives. This reaffirms to me the commitment those in rural America have to building a better future for all Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I give my warmest congratulations to REA on 50 years of work well done, and am happy to honor a group of people committed to making all America a better place.●

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order in the next special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE END OF THE VIETNAM WAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, today, like every day in America and in this Congress, has been very busy. We have exhausted ourselves in speeches here on the floor and our busy days at work in the office. The hustle of the Capitol life whirls around us as it does every day that we come here.

Tonight, the news will be followed again by the weather; will be followed again by the sports; and at midnight, the seventh of May will end and tomorrow will begin another day, in many respects, just like today.

Before this day ends, this day is unusual in that it marks the 10th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam war. I think before this day ends, we all could do well by pausing to remember, to remember that it has been 10 years since our last soldier came home. So we pause to give thanks; we pause to add our prayers for those fallen soldiers whose lives have been lost, and for those whose complete use of their bodies and minds is even today but just a memory.

Memories have clouded in 10 years; we are older, and the experiences of life have dimmed the importance of the past. But after 10 years that war has left a mark on every Vietnam-era veteran, no more removable than the color of our skin or the shape of our bones. While the fire in us no longer burns out of control, the flicker is still there, and will probably last forever.

After 10 long years, a Vietnam veteran is now buried at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. We do not know much about him, but we know more than past wars. We know that this particular veteran was killed in 1973, but the circumstances surrounding his death are unknown. But we know this: We know that for those who witnessed the excruciating agony of this war, it was worse than any of the young men had ever dreamed.

Indescribable human pain; limbs and blood splattered about like a junkyard of human parts; screams and explosions ceaselessly through the night. As the night winds blew cool over the molten lead and still-warm bodies, this body lay totally undistinguished from the thousands of others; not even a name.

So now this young man lies in everlasting peace. Having been dealt the ultimate penalty of war. There is a line in an old spiritual: "All my trials, Lord, will soon be over."

Today we pause, if for no other reason than just to pay tribute. If for no other reason to him and to his comrades and to the millions who served to say, "Thank you; we haven't forgotten." As we pay tribute, let us also rise up as Americans across this land and make a solemn commitment, first to the families of the POW's and MIA's that we as a nation will not be satisfied until, until everyone of the 2,400 POW's and MIA's whose names we do know are accounted for and are returned.

Second, to those Vietnam veterans who daily experience the new wounds of a new war, that we will not stop, that we will not stop until as much as is humanly possible, those wounds are healed. Agent orange and delayed stress; wounds common and wounds unique.

Third, to those veterans whose needs remain, let us commit ourselves once again to a continued and a determined effort to meet them. The GI bill and education; full employment; judicial review. As Members of Congress, we have more reason than perhaps anyone else in the whole country to make that commitment.

This country has a practice that is a good one, I think. This country names cities after its heroes of history. We have taken their names for our children and we put their names on our schools. So far, that has not been the case for Vietnam veterans.

There are no cities; there are no schools for which their names are lent. Only a black marble wall. A monument to withstand the harsh elements of the future. But I see another monument, a monument to the living and to the children of those who live. A monument of laws; a monument to guarantee the commitments that we renew today. A monument to those Vietnam veterans who still experience the war and its toll. For a monument that we today now commit, let us pause, for it is indeed a monument of life.

It is indeed a monument that we can look again with hope, with commitment, with optimism, that those who have survived live on. Because they survived, and because they fought so valiantly, we have learned a great deal as a nation.

□ 1650

We live our life today much better as a result of their sacrifice.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from South Dakota for taking this time to focus more acutely on what today really means, and beyond that to say that when I first came to the Congress, the gentleman from South Dakota was the one who was so actively involved in this area and helped to focus my attention on the problems that our Vietnam veterans were having.

If the gentleman recalls, it was the agent orange issue at that time which he was working so hard on, to make people realize the problems that the veterans were having from exposure to that herbicide during the Vietnam era, and I just appreciate very much the things the gentleman has done to focus attention here.

Mr. Speaker, the war in Vietnam ended for America 10 years ago, and today that experience is still very much on our minds.

We are aware of the superb record of service that our military personnel achieved in Vietnam, their bravery and sacrifice under circumstances that were just as difficult as any our Armed Forces have ever faced.

We remember the suffering which many Vietnamese people went through, both during the years of that conflict and following their country's eventual fall.

And more than ever before, we have begun to fully realize what was at stake there.

We know the United States cannot be the world's policeman and we should rely more often, I am sure, on diplomatic rather than military answers to our problems. But while many people may disagree with the direction we took in Southeast Asia, I also believe most of us realize that our presence in Vietnam was truly motivated by a concern for those human values this country has always represented.

Our forces were fighting for the freedom of South Vietnam and against the spread of totalitarianism throughout that region. We asked for nothing in return other than what we wished for the people we were helping defend. We wanted peace, security, and a continuation of a government based on the consent of the governed.

Representative democracy steadily grew and flourished around the world for nearly 200 years following the formation of our Nation. It had taken great sacrifice to establish freedom as a stable of government, and the generations that followed knew that the efforts which were first necessary to create it were just as necessary to sustain it in their own times. This still holds true today, Mr. Speaker.

It is a sobering fact, however, that totalitarian forces have advanced in recent years while representative democracy has fallen back, and yet, while we did not gain our objectives in Vietnam, we know the struggle against those forces is far from over at this time.

I believe our experience in Vietnam tells us we are still prepared to make the great sacrifices necessary to sustain freedom. Our directions may have changed, but I believe our resolve is greater than ever. In spite of the powerful forces aligned against humanity, I am convinced democracy will eventually regain lost ground and expand its boundaries throughout the entire world. I believe this not because we are necessarily the strongest country in the world but because our cause is true and right.

Today, we remain concerned about the people of South Vietnam who yearned to continue living under representative government, and it appears that they have lost it. We also remain concerned about our MIA's/POW's, and we will continue to search for the truth about their fate.

Mr. Speaker, the entire Nation owes a solemn debt of gratitude to all Americans who have served their country to further the cause of freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman again for what he is doing here again.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. He has been an invaluable member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I cannot think of a Member who has come in in recent years who has contributed more, with more dedication, and with more credibility to the issues facing not only Vietnam veterans but those who have been exposed to atomic and nuclear difficulties and the ramifications of the explosions of nuclear devices than the gentleman from Georgia, and I am very grateful for his contribution today.

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for those comments, and I shall look forward to working with him in the future to continue to do what is just for the veterans of this country.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank, the gentleman.

The war in Vietnam has been characterized many times as the longest and most divisive foreign war ever engaged in by the United States, but regardless of one's feelings about that conflict, I think all of us share a sense of full significance of our massive involvement in the affairs of that small Asian country has yet to be fully understood.

We do know that our experience in Vietnam was a deeply emotional one and one that had a profound effect on the entire generation of young Americans. Those who served on the Committee of Veterans' Affairs, including myself, have a special responsibility, I think, to fully understand and respond to the effects of the Vietnam war on those who served during that controversial era. It is a duty that I believe all of us welcome and even consider a privilege.

For too long, the ambivalence the Nation had toward the war in Vietnam extended to those who fought the war in our behalf. Veterans of Vietnam were either ignored because they were reminders of a national experience that many wanted desperately to forget, or these veterans were subjected to outright hostility, perceived as disturbed, maybe even dangerous individuals, whose values and behavior were somehow suspicious and alien.

The country seemed unable to empathize with these returning veterans. A nation noted for its compassion would not or could not open its heart to its own, denying Vietnam veterans the means and support they needed to finally come home. Throughout the world, our Nation's warriors have been celebrated as heroes, reflecting glory on their culture, but that was before Vietnam.

In his touching, powerful book, "A Rumor of War," Phillip Caputo describes the bonding which occurred between those in combat:

> Two friends of mine died trying to save the corpses of their men from the battlefield. Such devotion, simple and selfless, sentiment of belonging to each other, was one of the decent things that we found in a conflict otherwise notable for its monstrosities.

Reconciliation has begun, and those young men and women we sent to serve in Vietnam are finally coming home to all of us. We must not let this process of once again belonging to one another falter. Our commitment to our Nation's veterans of Vietnam did not end 10 years ago when the last helicopter transported the last Marines out of Saigon. Our commitment did not end on May 7, 1975, when the President proclaimed that the Vietnam era had ended.

Our special national responsibility is ongoing. We will be shamed as a nation if we do not continue to honor that responsibility as we try to do so today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague and highly regarded member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR].

Ms. KAPTUR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, today, May 7 marks the 10th anniversary of the end of the war in Vietnam. During this spring season, a season that is a symbol of nature's unending renewal, it is fitting that we honor the memory of those who fought and died in that war.

Earlier this year, ceremonies took place that commemorated the closing of the Vietnam Veterans War Memorial Foundation, organized by Vietnam veteran Jan Scruggs. It was his mission, and that of thousands of Vietnam veterans and millions of Americans, to build the magnificent memorial to Vietnam veterans that lies adjacent to the Lincoln and Washington Memorials here in this Nation's Capital city. In each of our home communities this spring, we have paid tribute to the 59,000 men and women who died in that war, as well as the thousands who have died from war-related causes since, and the 2,477 still listed as missing in action. In Ohio, there are 148 Vietnam veterans who still have not come home. Today, in our hearts, we light a candle for each and every one of them. We remember them on behalf of the Nation.

Vietnam veterans are sons and daughters, parents, brothers and sisters, fiances, friends, classmates, buddies, and neighbors. They answered this Nation's call. Though our generation, in our lifetime, will never agree on the dimensions and ultimate meaning of that war for America, we know that the Vietnam Veterans of America, in their activities and devotion, have helped heal our Nation since then.

As Time magazine so aptly stated recently, Vietnam was "a bloody rite of passage * * * which cost America its innocence and still haunts its conscience." For America, there can be no turning back the pages of history. Though no testimonial can ever be adequate, we can honor those men and women who made the ultimate sacrifice by remembering them for all time.

Yet, if this Nation, from their sacrifice, develops a deeper understanding of the difficult but imperative challenges of peace in this dangerous and troubled world, we shall have paid them all the finest tribute.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the gentlewoman from Ohio for an excellent statement. Her contribution to Vietnam veterans in particular has been a very significant one, and her participation in the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and her work on so many issues is very deeply appreciated. I thank her for participating in this special order.

□ 1700

There is no Member in this entire body that serves with more ability and who receives more respect and general support than the chairman of our Committee on Veterans' Affairs. He has been able to reach out to every element in the House for support of his work. I gratefully acknowledge his presence and ask his participation at this time with my thanks.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to first thank my distinguished colleague from South Dakota, TOM DASCHLE, for those very kind remarks and commend him for calling this special order to commemorate not only the 10th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam war, but to pay tribute to its American participants.

TOM has been an outspoken advocate for benefits and services geared specifically toward the special needs of Vietnam-era veterans.

As you may know, TOM authored and nurtured the Agent Orange and Atomic Veterans Relief Act, provided the leadership that steered it through this great body and, as a result, we now provide a disability allowance to those veterans suffering from certain conditions that may be associated with exposure to agent orange.

Now, as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment, TOM is working to ensure that all veterans are given ample opportunity to readjust and to be productive.

We're proud to have him as a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and the veterans of this Nation from all wars are fortunate to have him representing their best interests in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said many times—war does not end with ceasefire. Vietnam was no exception. In the years following the war, controversy remained. Vietnam veterans worked to readjust to a society that found it difficult to understand what they had been through, what they had done. Most were successful.

May 7 marks the 10th anniversary of the official end of the Vietnam era. It comes at a time when the psychological wounds of the Vietnam era are beginning to heal. Events of recent years have added much to the healing process.

In November 1982, there was a belated and much-needed thank you performed on The Mall in Washington—the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, 58,022 names on a black granite wall attesting to the high price of war, was dedicated. Last November, a statue of three fighting men was added and the memorial became a national monument. On Memorial Day 1984, a serviceman of the Vietnam war was laid to rest with his comrades from previous wars at the Tomb of the Unknowns.

I'm proud to say that, due to the nonpartisan efforts of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and the House of Representatives, there is now a Comprehensive Benefits Program that recognizes the experiences, the contributions, and the special needs of the Vietnam-era veteran.

The program includes: Treatment for exposure to herbicides and a disability allowance for certain conditions that could be associated with that exposure; readjustment counseling; small business loans; increased job training and job placement assistance, including a landmark program that marks the first time employers have been paid directly to hire and train veterans; special consideration for Vietnam-era veterans seeking Federal employment—this program, the Veterans' Readjustment Appointment Authority, has provided employment opportunities for more than 200,000 Vietnam-era veterans—GI bill education benefits; and posttraumatic stress research and treatment.

In addition, the Veterans' Administration's efforts in carrying out congressional mandates have been noteworthy. Here are the facts:

The VA has assisted more than 6.5 million, or more than two-thirds of all Vietnam-era veterans, in receiving education benefits.

Approximately 600,000 Vietnam-era veterans receive monthly compensation checks for service-connected disabilities and over 21,000 receive pensions for severe disabilities incurred after discharge.

From 1981 through 1983 alone, the VA guaranteed $14.1 billion in GI home loans for Vietnam-era veterans. Vietnam-era veterans receive half of the VA's guaranteed home loans.

Since 1981, the number of VA Readjustment Counseling Centers has increased from 90 to 137, with an additional 52 in the works. More than 250,000 veterans and 50,000 family members have received counseling at these centers; 19,000 veterans visit the centers each month, 6,300 for the first time.

More than 178,000 Vietnam veterans have been given agent orange physical examinations. There have been more than 23,000 inpatient admissions and over 1 million outpatient visits associated with agent orange and herbicide exposure.

These benefits and services, like the wall, have become a symbol of America's increasing willingness to listen to those who survived the war and to remember those who didn't.

There are now over 8 million living Vietnam-era veterans. Approximately 3.4 million served in the Southeast Asia theater of operation; more than 58,000 were killed, 300,000 were wounded, and 75,000 were permanently disabled.

Mr. Speaker, the Vietnam war and our veterans who served and sacrificed in southeast Asia and during the Vietnam-era are a powerful part of our history. They deserve our gratitude and our respect.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the committee chairman very much for his statement.

It is only fitting, I think, that the chairman called a meeting of the Veterans' Affairs Committee today to deal with a number of bills directly affecting the Vietnam veterans and others, but particularly today Vietnam veterans, and I think the legislation as it will come to the floor in the next couple of weeks ought to be considered and supported by every Member in this body for the kind of show of support and the kind of value it will have for the veterans as they are affected. I thank the chairman for his work on this committee and for the leadership he has given all of us.

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield at this time to another active member of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI].

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in today's special order and I commend the gentleman from South Dakota for his initiative in this regard.

Each year I attend Vietnam Veterans Memorial Day ceremonies in my district. Each year I come away with the same troubled feelings. Ten years after the end of the war, the scars are still too visible. The continuing suffering is obvious. I then ask myself what we can do as a country to help these American veterans?

Look into their faces—into their eyes—speak to them. I see confusion, uncertainty, and perhaps that they are searching for something. Is it identity, is it peace of mind, is it a desire to forget or a desire to remember? I don't know the answers to these questions.

I have learned some things, however. Vietnam veterans do appreciate people who show concern for them, people who hold out a helping hand. Above all, I think they are searching for love and acceptance. If we can understand this, then I think we can respond in a way that can help them the most. God knows they certainly deserve at least that much from their fellow Americans.

Out Vietnam veterans are a special group of men and women. They answered the call of their country when it was popular, even fashionable, to condemn our Government and to praise those we were fighting against. Although there is a temptation to try to forget the Vietnam war and that troubled time, we must not forget those 58,000 who died and the thousands of men and women who heroically served in our Armed Forces in Southeast Asia.

There are a number of steps that have been taken and should be continued in the future to provide assistance to our veterans. Programs created specifically for our Vietnam veterans must continue with greater emphasis placed on readjustment counseling, employment training and other valuable services.

In the past few years we have witnessed several events in Washington to honor those who have served in Vietnam. Last year, the remains of an unidentified soldier killed in Vietnam were placed between those of the unknown soldiers from Korea and World War II in Arlington Cemetery. Like the Vietnam Memorial, this was a long overdue but deserved tribute. New York City is currently conducting 2 days of ceremonial events, including the dedication of a Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Lower Manhattan containing the texts of letters written to or from American soldiers, in order to recognize the 250,000 New York men and women who fought in Vietnam.

Ten years after the end of the war, the healing process is beginning and it is important that it be continued. In terms of compassion, understanding, assistance, and acceptance, Americans can do much to let the forgotten vet know that he is forgotten no longer.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI] for his excellent statement, and I appreciate his participation this afternoon.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield now to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], another very active member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague, Mr. DASCHLE, for this opportunity to share his special order today.

This is an unusual day. There are few of us who, when asked the official date of the end of the Vietnam war, could quickly come up with "May 7, 1975," and fewer still who could readily recall where we were or exactly what we were doing on that day. For the most part, our troops had left Vietnam 2 years before, leaving, as they had come, not in platoons and squadrons, but in modest ones and twos, arriving home not to parades but often to anonymity. At the same time, it is a day we cannot let go by unnoticed.

This is not a day to engage in rhetorical breast-beating about who was right and who was wrong in our strategy in Southeast Asia. It is instead a day for remembrance, reconciliation, and recommitment.

It is first a day for remembrance. We remember the people whose lives were touched dramatically changed by the war. We remember the families who grieve for the nearly 57,000 who died in Vietnam. We remember the families who still wonder and wait to learn the fate of the 2,500 POW's and MIA's who have never been accounted for. We remember those who have learned to cope with disabilities—both physical and emotional—suffered as a result of Vietnam. We remember our brothers, sisters, fathers, and friends who served our Nation well. And, we remember the American children and the refugees.

This is a day for reconciliation, a time for all in our society to be reconciled to one another, to look beyond our differences regarding the war in Vietnam and to look toward our commonly shared goals of peace, justice, freedom, and democracy for all people.

Finally, this is a day for recommitment. For the thousands of veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder or from the effects of dioxin exposure or for those who are disabled or unemployed, Vietnam is not over. We must recommit ourselves to addressing their needs. We can pass legislation which presumes service connection for post-traumatic stress disorder; we can further expand agent orange compensation; we can extend the emergency veterans jobs training bill; we can act to keep the entire veterans health care system strong. And, we can continue our efforts to locate our POW's and MIA's.

As we pause today for remembrance, reconciliation and recommitment, we consider the words of Myra MacPherson in the Washington Post:

A quietness comes over those who visit the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Voices are stilled as people lose themselves in private thoughts, as they look at that wall with the names of nearly 58,000 dead or missing. And something else also happens. As you look into that black granite wall, your reflection stares back. That mirror image is a reminder of something long buried, long ignored: We in America are all veterans of Vietnam.

□ 1710

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for a very, very good statement. I appreciate his participation this afternoon. The gentleman from Minnesota has been very active in many of these issues and it is obvious from the statement just provided that he speaks with an eloquence that comes from the heart.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS].

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to commend my colleagues from the Veterans' Affairs Committee for calling this special order.

A decade has proven to be too short a time for us to fully understand the consequences of the Vietnam war. We know the number who died for their names are etched in stone.

We have counted the wounded, but must add to the number of casualties as we learn more about posttraumatic stress syndrome and agent orange.

We know the war cost $150 billion to wage, but many decades will pass before we know the cost of fulfilling our promise to those who served. A generation yet born will be called upon to shoulder that which has rightfully been called the continuing cost of war.

Vietnam was a deeply emotional experience for America. It had a profound effect on an entire generation of young Americans.

Initial American involvement in Vietnam's civil war was not unpopular. But as months turned into years, Americans began to weigh the cost in human lives for interests that no longer seemed vital.

The realities of war visited living rooms throughout the Nation on the nightly news. The absence of solidarity of purpose, that so characterized America in World War II, was mirrored in congressional debates and policies pursued by successive administrations.

Each individual had a special perception of the war. Fathers and mothers; brothers and sisters; those who had fought in other wars and those who never had; combatants and peace marchers. All were left with differing impressions of America's longest war.

The debate raged over our involvement in the war, but ignored those who were called upon to serve their country.

I was exposed to the same anxieties and pressures, during that time, like most people my age: I visited the local recruiter; not old enough to enlist; too young to fully understand war and the extent of Vietnam.

I felt I couldn't fully understand the experiences of classmates and friends who fought in Vietnam. And in turn, they told me they felt they had missed out on something that had occurred while they were away. Understanding is vital if we are to end the lingering divisiveness.

Those of us serving on the Veterans' Affairs Committee have a special responsibility to understand the problems confronting the American veteran. Only through understanding can we hope to be capable stewards of America's promise to those who defended our freedom and liberties.

We must acknowledge that the needs of veterans differ as acutely as the wars in which they fought. Whatever judgment is passed on American involvement in Vietnam, we must own up to the fact that young Americans went to Vietnam to fight for their country.

This is their distinction, this is the honor they share with American veterans of other wars. Their obedience to duty must not be tarnished by feelings of shame, guilt, or our failure to fully understand the changes in our society caused by the Vietnam war.

A Vietnam veteran told me recently that like so many others he received the cold shoulder upon his return from the war. Trying to talk to his family about the problems he faces, he was told by his uncles that they didn't want to hear it because they had won their war.

The shame is ours if we thrust upon the Vietnam veteran our national guilt. The loss is ours if we lock out a generation that has much to contribute. The misfortune is ours if we call upon another generation of Americans to defend our freedom and liberties and they fail to answer the call for fear of future condemnation.

As the leader of the free world, we bear a great responsibility. We must be strong economically for this is the bedrock of our security and prosperity. We must maintain a strong military force capable of defending our Nation and fulfilling our collective security commitments.

It is for these reasons I have supported military spending that I believe strengthens our ability and readiness. It is for these same reasons that I have supported programs that address the problems confronting veterans and rewards them for the sacrifices they have made in protecting our Nation.

Young Americans today considering going into the armed services must be assured that we stand by our commitments to our veterans. That we are genuinely concerned about their future well-being and that of their families. If we fail to make good on our debt to Vietnam veterans then we risk not having the essential ingredient necessary for a strong defense—dedicated men and women.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I think this year in particular as we consider budgetary matters, it is important that we also consider priorities with regard to those commitments that we have already made. They do not go in and out with fads. They do not go in and out with the popularity of a given issue. They remain commitments hard and firm, just as important and just as solid as that marble wall that is a constant reminder, perhaps far more visual than the reminder that we need to make each and every time we consider legislation here on the floor dealing with those veterans and the veterans who preceded them.

I thank the gentleman for his contribution this afternoon and his continued commitment to the Vietnam veterans who count on him and count on all of us for support.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the new chairman of the Vietnam Veterans in Congress, a person who has dedicated a great deal of his career in the House of Vietnam veterans and veterans of all wars, a member of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and a very able one at that, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my distinguished colleague from the Veterans' Affairs Committee, TOM DASCHLE, for requesting this special order.

I am privileged to serve this Congress as chairman of the Vietnam-era Veterans in Congress caucus, a bipartisan, bicameral group of legislators dedicated to helping our Vietnam-era veterans. I can think of no more appropriate observance of this anniversary than rededicating ourselves to helping those Americans who served in Southeast Asia when their country called.

As we as a nation have approached this anniversary of the end of our Vietnam involvement, I have seen many accounts of how our experience there has affected our foreign policy. I have even read accounts of how the country of Vietnam is faring in the aftermath of the war. What I have not seen in any reasonable measure is an accounting of our continuing debt to our Vietnam veterans, or how that debt has yet to be fully repaid.

Yes; there has been a marked change in the way that we as a nation think about our Vietnam veterans. Our Vietnam veterans are increasingly recognized as patriotic Americans who served their country as bravely as did those veterans of earlier, more popular wars. With the construction of the Vietnam Veterans' Memorial and the inclusion of a Vietnam serviceman in the Tomb of the Unknowns, those who served in Vietnam have, symbolically at least, rejoined the mainstream. Vietnam veteran units can now march proudly in our Memorial Day parades.

But while our citizens have come to recognize the courage and dedication of our Vietnam veterans, our Government has been painfully slow to comply. It was the Federal Government which, rightly or wrongly, sent Americans to fight and die in Vietnam. Yet is is the Federal Government that still stands in the way of their complete rehabilitation.

It was U.S. policy to defoliate large portions of Vietnam, which exposed our air and ground troops to agent orange and other toxic herbicides. But the Veterans' Administration has been slow to compensate those affected by these poisons, or to help their families including children suffering genetic defects.

While the issue is endlessly studied and restudied, our Vietnam veterans are told that there simply isn't enough scientific evidence to prove their case. Yet the same Federal Government bought and evacuated the entire community of Times Beach, MO, because it was contaminated with the dioxin contained in agent orange. The parallels to our post-World War II veterans exposed to atomic radiation are apparent. It would be tragic if the VA waits long enough, as with the atomic veterans, the surviving agent organge veterans will become fewer in number and the pressure for Government action will diminish.

Serving in Vietnam often meant postponing a higher education or sacrificing job opportunities. And many Vietnam veterans experienced readjustment problems upon their return and were not easily reintegrated into the work force. Unemployment levels for Vietnam-era veterans have remained consistently above the national average for other Americans of comparable age. And whenever economic conditions worsen, Vietnam-era veterans suffer the brunt of the employment impact.

Yet the GI bill benefits for Vietnam-era veterans have been relatively limited in comparison to those provided for veterans of previous wars. Job and job-training programs targeted at Vietnam-era veterans have been enacted only recently, with relatively limited participation.

Vietnam-era veterans suffered a higher rate of less-than-honorable discharges than did their predecessors in previous wars. Fully a third of the U.S. Marines who served in Vietnam received less-than-honorable discharges. This stigma follows those veterans for the remainder of their lives, making employment and educational opportunities more difficult.

Finally, an estimated 2,400 Americans are still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. This Nation simply cannot rest until a full accounting of those servicemen is rendered. For those veterans and their families, the sacrifice continues. For them, no healing, no reconciliation is possible.

As this 10th anniversary of our withdrawal from Vietnam passes, the spotlight of publicity and commemoration will inevitably fade. Yet for the millions who served there, the memory will never fade. In all too many cases, their sacrifices continue.

It would be unconscionable for our Government to ignore the problems of our Vietnam veterans and those who love them. We must demonstrate the same compassion toward those individuals that we have for the hundreds of thousands of refugees from Southeast Asia who have made new lives on our shores.

As Members of Congress, we must ensure that our Government upholds its obligation to those who answered its call. If we fail in that regard, we surrender forever the moral basis for demanding similar sacrifices from future generations of Americans.

Again I thank Chairman DASCHLE for setting up this special order and Chairman MONTGOMERY for participating and staying with us through the course of it.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the gentleman for an excellent statement and a great deal of food for thought as we consider this 10th anniversary.

Mr. EDGAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. I now yield to my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. EDGAR, a most active member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and a leader in Vietnam veteran issues as well as many others.

Mr. EDGAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding and want to commend the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] for his leadership on the issue of helping to raise the consciousness of the House of Representatives and the other body to the issue of the Vietnam veteran.

Those of us who have been in Congress over the last 10 years, since the shutting down of the Vietnam war, through the period of agonies as Vietnam veterans struggled for some recognition, through the period of time when memorials were established not only here in Washington but throughout the country to recognize the service of these Vietnam veterans, the gentleman has provided a great deal of leadership.

The gentleman from Illinois, Congressman LANE EVANS, I think summed up much of our feeling about those persons who served in Vietnam, and I congratulate him for his leadership of those Members of Congress who served in the military during the Vietnam era.

I would also like to commend the chairman of our full committee, the gentleman from Mississippi, SONNY MONTGOMERY. When I came to Congress I was placed on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee by senior Members from my delegation who did not think I was going to be around very long. And I feel a little bit like the kid in the commercial who has the cereal bowl pushed in front of him and his two brothers look and watch and suddenly he takes a bite and they both respond, "Mikey likes it." I have really enjoyed my opportunity to serve on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and deal with the issues of education, of employment, of readjustment counseling, of the issues relating to agent orange and trying to understand that chemical defoliant that was used in Vietnam that is inflicting great injury to many veterans. And it is the leadership of people like SONNY MONTGOMERY that has helped to make our committee a bipartisan committee where Democrats and Republicans alike struggle with the issues that are so important.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my friend and colleague, the gentleman from South Dakota, TOM DASCHLE, for requesting this tribute in honor of all those who served their country during the Vietnam war. In particular, I would like to express my personal appreciation for his leadership in being one of the founding members of the Vietnam Veterans In Congress. This congressional caucus, currently under the direction of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] has been one of the leading forces in supporting our efforts on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee in seeking meaningful recognition of the needs and strengths of all those who served during the Vietnam era.

Retracing our steps over the past 10 years in the Congress in our efforts to come to grips with the Vietnam experience is not an easy process. I was elected to Congress in November 1974 and joined the House Veterans' Affairs Committee in January of 1975. At that time there were no Vietnam veterans in Congress. There were very few of us then who even spoke out on behalf of Vietnam veterans issues. We were faced with a general consensus in this body and a growing feeling across the country that the Vietnam war should be put behind us. The blatant neglect which many Vietnam veterans experienced individually when they returned home was mirrored by the inadequacy of the programs, benefits, and services provided for them by the Congress.

It was the World War I generation in Congress, abandoned by their own Government when they returned home in 1918, who developed the GI bill, one of the most beneficial programs ever devised, for those who returned from World War II. The memory of that experience carried over to assist those who returned from the Korean conflict. But the Vietnam veteran fell quickly into the amnesia which surrounded the Vietnam war itself. Very few were willing to listen when we spoke out during those early years about the inadequacy of the Vietnam era GI bill, or the lack of proper employment training or readjustment programs for those who had returned from that war. There was very little understanding of the unique needs of Vietnam veterans. There was very little compassion or tolerance for their views when we fought to extend and expand education and rehabilitation programs specifically tailored to meet those needs.

Gradually and fortunately this attitude began to change. With it changed the perception and the appreciation of the American people for those who served in our last and longest war. We made progress slowly, but we still moved ahead with and for the Vietnam veteran. There were several landmarks in this process.

In 1978 Congressman DON EDWARDS of California and I called for the first hearings in the House Veterans' Affairs Committee on the impact of the use of the defoliant agent orange on the Vietnam veteran population. This led to a long and frustrating struggle which, while it continues, has since provided health care in VA facilities for those suffering disabilities which could be associated with exposure to the defoliant and a framework which will lead to a mechanism to provide compensation for those affected.

In 1979, the House Veterans' Affairs Committee finally accepted our recommendation through Public Law 96-22 to establish the first storefront readjustment counseling centers to provide outreach and assistance to those Vietnam veterans still seeking a way to fully readjust to civilian life. The centers were an immediate success. A nationwide study we authorized indicated that between 600,000 and 800,000 Vietnam veterans could benefit from these services. Despite efforts from the present administration to curtail the program or eliminate it entirely, we managed to both extend and expand the number of vet centers to over 186 communities across the Nation. Legislation, I introduced in the last Congress extended the program until 1988. Vet centers served two purposes. First, they were the key element in the congressional effort to advance the Veterans' Administration to the forefront in research, understanding, and treatment of post-traumatic stress disorder which has affected veterans from all wars. Second, they served as a catalyst to bring Vietnam veterans together for the first time to share with both their peers and the public at large the unique service and sacrifice that was Vietnam. The Vet Center Program sparked one of the largest volunteer efforts in the Federal Government when the call went out for assistance to augment the services provided by the program. Vietnam veterans from all backgrounds offered their help with counseling, job, and readjustment assistance. To date over 300,000 Vietnam veterans have sought assistance through the Vet Center Program.

In 1981, as chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment I introduced legislation, included in Public Law 97-72 which established a small business loan program for Vietnam veterans and disabled veterans. The provision served as a catalyst to encourage the Small Business Administration to implement their special outreach assistance to help Vietnam veterans start their own businesses.

In 1982, my subcommittee authorized and the Congress approved a targeted extension of the 10-year delimiting period for GI bill benefits to allow undertrained and unemployed Vietnam era veterans to utilize additional job training programs. We also, completely redesigned, through my legislation, the Department of Labor's veterans employment system to more fully meet the needs of those seeking employment and job placement services. Part of this process was also achieved through an amendment I offered to the Job Training Partnership Act which enacted a specific grant program for the States to provide community based and rural outreach employment centers for Vietnam veterans.

In 1983, we again addressed unemployment and underemployment among the Vietnam veteran population as one of our major issues of concern. Those who had gone to serve their country during the Vietnam war had historically been the last hired and the first fired. The serious economic depression in the early 1980's had brought this problem to crisis proportions within the Vietnam veteran population. Thousands of Vietnam veterans were out of work and seeking new skills. In response, we drafted the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983. An entirely new concept, it provided, for the first time, needed incentives for employers to hire and train Vietnam era and Korean war veterans in new skills and new occupations. The program was designed to help new business and growth industries as much as it was planned to retrain the long term unemployed veteran or the veteran displaced from previous employment and job skills. Sadly there are many regions of the country that have not recovered from the economic tragedy of the early 1980's. Today our committee approved legislation which would extend this needed program again.

But perhaps the most rewarding contribution we have made in my mind as the present chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care has been within the system of VA medical benefits and services. All of the programs and not perfect, and we still have much to do in directing the VA to focus a clearer attention on the needs of the Vietnam veteran and all veterans; but we have made progress.

This progress has been shown in directing the agency to expand its new intensive in-patient treatment programs for veterans suffering from post traumatic stress disorder as we did in the last Congress. It has been shown in our efforts and our legislation directing the massive major studies on the effects of agent orange exposure or on the special concerns of women veterans who served in Vietnam. But perhaps the most tangible example of the worth of our work has been demonstrated in very human and very individual terms. For this subcommittee chairman, there have been many examples of the individual results of our efforts which paid off in terms of wounds healed, of lives restructured. There have been examples of dedicated VA employees giving their time their interest and concern to help those who served in Vietnam. There have been the individual examples of members of our great veterans organizations who have lent their voice and support to our efforts here in Washington and their concern and guidance to help veterans in communities across this country. And there have been great examples of the healing we have been able to achieve both in mind and body and spirit over the past 10 years in demonstrating our obligation to the Vietnam veteran and the contribution Vietnam veterans can make to this society.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult in a short period of time, and merely through a litany of legislative measures to address the frustration, the concern, the excitement and the satisfaction of the past 10 years with our work in the Congress involving Vietnam veterans. It is also very true that Government programs, benefits and services are not, and should not, be the only benchmark we use in saying thank you and welcome home to those who served during the Vietnam war. But as politicians and representatives of the people we are tasked to address the needs of our constituencies and to meet the needs of those who require those services with specific solutions. I believe we have made and are continuing to make an honest effort to accomplish that goal. We have seen a new awakening of respect and understanding for all those who served during the Vietnam war in this process and not just those who have earned and deserved their Government's assistance. It is a record we all can share; both veteran and nonveteran alike. It is a debt we continue to owe.

I commend the gentleman in the well for just today you have acted in our committee to authorize a program extension and to provide for additional funds so that those who are still unemployed and underemployed might use that very program.

In listing out these programs, whether it is the storefront counseling centers, whether it is the Job Training Partnership Act, whether it is an issue to try to help focus the concerns on education, training, and employment for these Vietnam veterans, or simply counseling for those who are troubled, I think we have responded and taken the first steps. But through the efforts of the gentleman in the well [Mr. DASCHLE], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS], and through the bipartisan efforts of Democrats and Republicans, I think it is clear that we are beginning to address the needs of Vietnam veterans.

The real question I think for this body is what is our vision of the future? How can we help those who are still unemployed find meaningful employment? How can we help those who are caught up in drug and alcohol abuse problems find some security through centers throughout the Veterans' Administration? How can we help the Veterans' Administration understand the special needs that these veterans have? And how can we help the administration understand that they simply cannot cut budgets that impact on concerns for those who are combat-related veterans who have post-traumatic stress disorder and other related problems that they face as a result of their service? You can be troubled by the war, but I think all of us here understand the need to care about the warrior. I think the gentleman in the well has demonstrated that in our committee, and hopefully as chairman of the Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care I can relate that health care system to the specific needs of veterans of all wars, but those special needs of the veterans who served our country well in Vietnam.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his special order today and I appreciate his focus on this issue.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Early in my statement I said that not only did we need to tend from time to time the grounds and view the monument to the Vietnam veterans, but really those of us here have a special opportunity to build another monument, that is a monument of laws.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDGAR] has laid out the blueprint very well. That monument continues to find a need for construction, continues to find a need for completion, and continues to find a need among Vietnam veterans.

Let that be our goal and our commitment this afternoon.

To all of those who have participated in this special order, my thanks.

● Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, this week our Nation observes the 10th anniversary of the official end of the longest and most controversial military involvement in U.S. history—the war in Vietnam.

More than 9 million Americans served their country during that bitter and prolonged struggle. Nearly one-third served in the Vietnam theater, where combat prevailed. The average age of Vietnam veterans when they separated from military service was 24 years. The average time on active duty was 3 years, but most served in active combat zones for 1 year or less.

More than 58,000 of them lost their lives, 300,000 were wounded, and 75,000 were permanently disabled. We grieve not only for the dead, but also for the 2,400 or more Americans who are listed as missing in action in Southeast Asia and for their families who have waited for a decade or more to learn the fate of their loved ones.

For many Americans who were most affected by the conflict, the war seems in many ways not to be over. For the families of those killed and missing, it is surely not. Nor is it for the service men and women who came home not to the ticker-tape parades and fireworks that greeted the heroes of our previous foreign wars, but occasionally to hostility and often to lives of further sacrifice. Mostly, they and their unselfish contributions to their country were ignored.

Unfortunately, the reception these valorous and patriotic men and women encountered when they returned home was tainted by a nation anxious to put any thought of America's first battlefield loss behind it. In addition to the physical wounds endured by many of these veterans, thousands still suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder [PTSD] and other psychological problems which might have been alleviated by a more positive reception.

Now, 10 years later, we as a nation are finally welcoming home these gallant men and women. We are thanking them, as we should, for the service they rendered their country.

In November 1982, an awesome black granite wall etched with 58,022 names attesting to the high price of war, was dedicated on the Mall in Washington, DC—the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Last November, a statue of three fighting men was added and the memorial became a national monument. On Memorial Day 1984, a serviceman from the Vietnam war was laid to rest next to his comrades from previous wars at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

Long delayed but well deserved, these are appropriate tributes to the devotion and sacrifice of millions of Americans. The Vietnam Memorial and the Vietnam War's Unknown Soldier have become symbols of America's increasing desire to listen to the needs of those who survived the war and remember with love those who did not.

The Vietnam war is a powerful part of our history. Our veterans who served and sacrificed in Southeast Asia and during the Vietnam-era deserve our respect, our recognition, and our gratitude as we observe this anniversary of their service on May 7—"Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day."●

● Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, in this day and age, instantaneous communications and the rapid pace of daily life seem to make distance shrink and time rush forward. Yet even by modern standards, a decade is not very much time in which to heal and forget, particularly when the scars are so deep and painful as those left by the tragedy of America's involvement in Vietnam.

The second term of Abraham Lincoln began at the twilight of another divisive and deeply traumatic conflict, the Civil War. In his second inaugural address, Lincoln promised to rule over a time of healing in this Nation, offering "malice toward none and charity for all." Yet 10 years after his assassination, the nation was still feeling the divisiveness that bred that conflict. And has proven the same for Vietnam.

The battlegrounds of the Civil War were as close and familiar as Gettysburg and Antietam. In Vietnam, the names were unfamiliar, and bore a faraway sound—Pleiku, Khe Sahn, and Hue. Yet the war was as divisive to Americans as any in our history.

All we have to do to invoke those days is recall in our mind's eye the sight of the American flag being torn, trampled on, and burned. This sight is symbolic of the tearing apart of American society as the protests raged and Americans watched on their television screens the deaths of American boys in faraway jungles and the rioting of their counterparts on the streets and campuses of our Nation.

These intense memories, brought home to us nightly in images of death and destruction, are only now starting to fade, 10 years after the last helicopter lifted from the U.S. Embassy South Vietnam.

And there have been fresh horrors since then to drive home the enormity of the conflict in Southeast Asia. I speak, of course, of the holocaust played out on the killing fields of Cambodia in the wake of the takeover of the Khmer Rouge, the pitiful lunge for freedom by the boat people of Vietnam, following after the new communist Government of Viet Nam began its systematic anihilation of all organized opposition to the oppressive government.

I would be the last to say that these memories should ever be allowed to fade, or be forgotten. There is too much that must be remembered, and above all we must never forget the sacrifices of those brave young men who died so far from home.

But while these memories should remain with us forever, it is important that the painful wounds that caused them be allowed to heal, so that we can look back on these days with an historical prospective that will enable us to draw the proper lesson from this conflict.

I am very proud of the way this Nation has come together following the conflict in Vietnam to heal the wounds of war. I am especially proud of our Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, for the courage to tell the veterans of this country that their brothers who fought in Vietnam were part of a noble cause.

That remark caused a lot of controversy, but after thinking about it, who can deny the nobility of America's purpose. We did not seek to gain land, or wealth or power, but to stop communism dead in its tracks. And that is the noblest of causes for this Nation, the leader of the free world.

I'm also very proud to have been named by my friend and colleague from New York, STEPHEN SOLARZ, as the new chairman of the House Task Force on Prisoners and Missing in Action in Southeast Asia. We are pledged to a full accounting of the fate of the 2,500 Americans who are still unaccounted for. For their families and their friends, we are working to write the final chapter of the history of their bravery so far from home.

But, as I said before, as memories fade, the tempers cool, it is important that we gain some lasting lesson from the war in Vietnam. And I have learned one lesson that I want to share with my colleagues today.

Wars have been lost on the battlefield, wars have been lost in the command posts behind the lines, wars have been lost at headquarters. But the war in Vietnam was not lost by America's military, its fighting men or its generals. The war in Vietnam was lost here at home, right here in Congress, aided and abetted by the American media.

As we mark the 10th anniversary of the fall of Saigon, we must reflect on this lesson carefully. For I am very much afraid that the action of this House just 2 weeks ago denying aid to freedom fighters in Nicaragua could well set the stage for another anniversary 10 years from now—the fall of Central America.

When is this Congress going to learn to stand behind President Reagan's noble cause of stopping Soviet-style communism in Central America dead in its tracks. When are we going to learn not to nitpick and second guess our President? When are we going to learn that America can not have an effective and coherent foreign policy as long as there are 535 secretaries of state here on Capitol Hill? When are we going to learn to stop listening to men like Daniel Ortega and start trusting our own President? In short, when are we going to learn why we lost in Vietnam?

It's time we learn that freedom and democracy will face a defeat in Central America as great as that of Vietnam unless those of us who lived through that era learned from our mistakes.●

● Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, last week marked the 10th anniversary of the Communist victory in Saigon. In recent weeks much has been printed in the press, and broadcast on television, to resurrect for us the memories of that war, which for America, ended a decade ago. All the articles and documentaries serve to remind us of the impact which the Vietnam war had on this country then, and continues to have on us all today. Whether we served there, or had a brother or sister or child or friend who served there, we all realize the sacrifice which so many young Americans made to defend the ideals of freedom so far away from home. Undoubtedly, the memory of the Vietnam war will be invoked each time the United States finds itself at the brink of involvement in conflict around the world, just as it was recently brought forth during debate on the situation in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, we could talk all day about the Vietnam war and debate the pros and cons of that conflict and our actions, but I feel that today it is more fitting to talk about the brave Americans who undertook the arduous, painful duty of defending freedom against the threat of communism. Lets today honor the 2.8 million servicemen who participated in the war, the nearly 60,000 who lost their lives, and the 2,500 Americans who are still missing and unaccounted for in Vietnam. Today, let us reflect on the debt we owe all the American servicemen who fought, and those who sacrificed their lives, to defend the American principles of freedom and liberty and lets make it a high priority of our work in Congress to secure a full accounting of Americans still missing in Southeast Asia.●

● Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, 10 years after the fall of Saigon, the war in Southeast Asia remains a painful memory. It is the memory of America's only loss in war, but more than that it is the memory of the 58,022 Americans who gave their lives over the span of a decade and a half. It is the memory of a great power being humbled by its own arrogance and misguided tenacity.

The past decade witnessed in America a collective amnesia about Vietnam. Recently, that amnesia has subsided. This Nation has recognized the valiant efforts of the men who fought and died not for territory, or glory, or wealth, but merely because they were called to serve. On July 8, 1959, the first American was killed in Vietnam. On April 30, 1975, the last American fled, not because of defeat on the battlefield, but defeat on the homefront. Those men and women did not abandon their positions, it was America that abandoned them. It is time we acknowledged that those who served cannot be forgotten, or separated from our memories. They are part of our history.

It is fitting we should commemorate the fall of Saigon and the departure of the American presence in Vietnam. While we commemorate victories, we should recognize and learn from our failures as well. We must never forget the lessons that Vietnam taught. We learned that successful foreign and military policy hinges on clearly defined goals. Militarily we learned that body counts and bomb tonnage ultimately mean very little. And, morally, we learned that this Nation should never send its men to die with the same lack of conviction and determination we showed in Southeast Asia.●

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, next week on May 7 we will commemorate the 10th anniversary of the end of our Nation's involvement in the Vietnam war. That conflict involved over 9 million American servicemen, of which 57,000 lost their lives. Another 2,400 are still listed officially as missing in action.

The Vietnam war evoked great passions among all Americans. There was great division in the Nation over whether or not our soldiers should be fighting a war in Southeast Asia.

Whatever our feelings about what our role there should have been, it is fair to say the Vietnam war did not have the overwhelming national support that we associate with both World Wars and the Korean conflict.

Unfortunately, that angry feeling about the Vietnam war permeated the lives of our soliders when they returned home from the battlefields of Asia. There were no parades down Broadway for the Vietnam vets. Instead, because of our desire to get Vietnam behind us, they became the forgotten generation of American heroes.

In addition to horrendous physical disabilities, many of the Vietnam veterans came home with mental disorders caused by the trauma of the traumatic jungle warfare they suffered through.

Now, 10 years later, many of those soldiers still suffer from what has been termed post-traumatic stress disorder that causes them to suffer, among other symptoms, deep depression that prevents them from leading normal lives.

Mr. Speaker, it has only been recently that our Nation has begun to appreciate the valiant efforts made by our fighting men and women in Vietnam. The establishment of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington was a major step in acknowledging the bravery and devotion to duty of those who gave their lives in the name of freedom.

On this 10th anniversary of the end of that conflict we can take another step to honor those who fought in Vietnam and those who are still missing in action. I am most proud to join my colleague, Representative TOM DASCHLE of South Dakota, in urging President Reagan to declare May 7, 1985, as Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day.

Such a dedication is long overdue. It is my prayer that this observance will send a loud clear signal to all Vietnam war veterans that indeed, they have not been forgotten.●

● Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the accomplishments and achievements of the many young Americans who served with valor in the Vietnam conflict. On this, the 10th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam war, it is appropriate that we look back on this chapter in our history to honor those men and women who made the ultimate sacrifice on behalf of their Nation.

The Vietnam war was one of the most divisive in our history. The conflict in this country at times overshadowed the war itself.

The Vietnam era was a difficult time for our Nation and our Government, but its most profound impact was felt by the men and women who served in the Armed Forces.

Washington's Vietnam Veterans Memorial is one of the most moving structures in a city full of monuments. It is so moving because its message is so simple, yet profound. There is no greater service an individual can perform for his nation than to risk his life and limb on behalf of his country. The more than 58,000 American servicemen who died in Vietnam did so out of a commitment to their country. They served honorably and deserve nothing less than our fullest respect and appreciation.

While American troops no longer fight in Southeast Asia, many of the veterans of that conflict still carry the emotional and physical scars of the war. It is entirely appropriate that we recognize those who died in Vietnam. But we should also recognize the many thousands of soldiers who survive today. The State of Pennsylvania alone is home to more than 375,000 Vietnam-era veterans. We should never waver in our commitment to care for those who risk their lives for our freedom.

It has been 10 years since the fall of Saigon. Let us not forget that all wars are paid for in the blood of young soldiers. The men who served in Vietnam paid that price, and for their sacrifice we should be forever grateful.●

● Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, this weekend marked the 40th anniversary of the close of the Second World War. While it is right and just to celebrate the end of this tragic war, I would like to take this opportunity to remind my colleagues of the thousands of American soldiers who are missing in action from the conflict in Vietnam.

Saigon fell 10 years ago. Thousands of American soldiers left Vietnam to return to their loved ones. Thousands of others offered the ultimate sacrifice for their country. There are still thousands for whom there is no accounting. They are missing in action. Their status is uncertain. Are they alive? Have they passed away? Are they still being held captive?

Wars leave countries in debt. Whether a country is victorious or not, a debt to the soldiers, to their friends, and to their families is always accrued. It is a debt that we, as a people and a nation, must repay.

Our debt to the missing in action, to their families, and to their friends is overdue. I will not rest until the debt is paid.

By the most recent figures, there are some 2,400 brave American soldiers who are missing in action. The Defense Intelligence Agency has indicated that sighting reports and other information confirm the possibility that there are servicemen still alive in Southeast Asia. In fact, refugees have reported in excess of 750 firsthand sightings of live American soldiers.

Progress is beginning to be made with regard to ending the mystery of our missing in action. I do not, however, think that the current faint glimmer of hope is an adequate downpayment on our debt.

Today I am joining my colleague, Mr. HENDON, of North Carolina, in sponsoring House Concurrent Resolution 129. This important legislation would create a congressional commission that would report to Congress on whether or not there are American soldiers being held against their will in Southeast Asia, and what steps this Congress should take to ensure their return.

We absolutely must be ever vigilant in our efforts to determine the status of our soldiers who have yet to return.●

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

U.S. SMALL BUSINESS WEEK, 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, the climate during which we are celebrating U.S. Small Business Week 1985 is unparalled. I cannot recall in all the years we've marked this observance a more awesome threat to all that the week of May 5-11, 1985, represents.

The administration—if it dared drop its cloak of hyprocrisy and doublespeak—would acknowledge as its symbol for Small Business Week 1985 a thumbs down on small business; thumbs down on free enterprise; thumbs down on economic empowerment for disadvantaged small and minority business; thumbs down on what has made America a land of opportunity through Government for the people rather than subsidies for the special interests.

My fellow colleagues, as I speak today, I must say that though I am pleased with the fact that we honor small business in 1985, it is clear that this is the year that small business in the United States has suffered unprecedented dishonor at the hands of the Federal Government—at the hands of the President of the United States.

Indeed, 1985 is the year that the U.S. Congress has been called on to be an accomplice in neutralizing the Government's role in maintaining and fostering a viable small business sector. Since 1932, Congress has seen fit to assist small businesses with technical and management assistance, loans and subcontracting.

What could be more disturbing? What could be more self-defeating? What could be more counterproductive than terminating Federal aid to small business at a time when we're focusing on revitalizing our economy and reducing a Federal budget deficit acquired by mismanagement, fraud, and selfish fiscal and monetary policies.

Nine Americans who served as Small Business Administrators under seven Presidents between 1951 and 1980 have made a matter of record their abhorrence of the administration's proposal to eliminate the U.S. Small Business Administration [SBA].

Their positions are not predicated on any sentimental attachment to an agency they once served. Instead, they are simply a part of a chorus of public outcry against the administration's destructive and uninformed decisionmaking—decisionmaking that is not guided by fact, and is arrogant in its disregard for the taxpayers and the will of the Congress.

Let us look briefly at some of these facts that are now being expressed in the wake of the administration's proposal to eliminate SBA.

First, reaction has been bipartisan, not only on the part of the former SBA Administrators, but on the part of individuals, groups, and governmental entities around the country. Indeed, the House Committee on Small Business has received, firsthand, public tributes to SBA for the help it gave that could not be found elsewhere. The committee has heard from mayors, such as Tom Bradley of Los Angeles and Ernest Morial of New Orleans. They told the panel that no small share of the economic development—jobs, tax revenues, decrease in public assistance—in their cities is due to SBA assistance. Governors have spelled out in letters to the committee their displeasure and indeed, their concern that further erosion of their economic bases will occur if SBA's long-term credit assistance is eliminated. We all know that big business and government borrowing dominate the long-term credit markets. We also know that SBA is the only public or private financial institution designed specifically to provide long-term credit to small businesses.

Over and over, in city after city, small business owners—some have subsequently graduated from this classification—took time from busy schedules to have placed in the records their account of how Federal assistance was there when they had no where else to go. Loans were provided small and minority entrepreneurs who were turned down by commercial institutions.

THE ECONOMIC FACTS

There is no argument from the administration regarding the economic stimulus derived from small business activity.

There is, indeed, no argument from the Congress on the economic benefits of a viable small business sector. Legislative activity of the Small Business Committee during the 98th Congress and continuing with the 99th Congress is based on opening up opportunities for capital growth, plant expansion, payroll and employee increases through public law mandated by the Congress.

As a result of such legislative activity during the last Congress several new public laws are on the books to stimulate achievement of a competitive small business sector. For the first time in the history of the Federal procurement system, competition is open to small business. There was unusually vocal opposition to what is now the Small Business Federal Procurement Competition Enhancement Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-577). Strong lobbying against this measure made its enactment not only momentous but a true test of the bipartisanship that should prevail in regard to the small business issue.

I call on you to be governed in this legislative session by that same spirit of bipartisanship as we look at the administration's economic package as it relates to small business and a range of domestic programs.

Be governed during this period by these facts:

Since 1932, Congress has seen fit to assist small businesses. Through various wars, assistance to its veterans, depression and recessions, Congress promulgated Acts which would assist small businesses with technical and management assistance, loans and subcontracting.

Small businesses employ approximately 48 percent of the private work force, contribute 42 percent of all sales in the country and are responsible for 38 percent of the gross national product.

Small businesses provide approximately 67 percent of initial job opportunities and, thus, are responsible for the major cost in initial on-the-job training in basic skills.

Small businesses have been responsible for more than 50 percent of the new product and service innovations developed since World War II.

Almost every energy-related innovation of the past century has come from small businesses.

To measure benefits to the Government from SBA program assistance is to recognize that in every case the return far exceeds the monetary outlay. In the case of the Small Business Investment Program, for example, the cost-benefit ratio is 1 to 110. For a Government outlay of $4 million the Government takes in $441.3 million.

We have much to observe this week. We also have a small business sector to which we owe credit and a means of survival and growth.

In paying these debts and in giving this honor, we honor America and what it should always stand for.

□ 1740

In paying tribute to small business, we pay tribute indeed, we honor this Nation.

I would take this time to admonish and warn that any proposition, any proposal that would seek to dismantle, reduce, gut or render impotent the Small Business Administration is a gross, gross disservice to this Nation and to the small business of the Nation.

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, we are the land of opportunity. The best example of the endless opportunities available here in America is our small businesses. Small businessmen and women define the word "entrepreneur." They challenge the odds, start up their businesses, risking their money and reputation and struggle each day for survival. These entrepreneurs are the ones who contribute the most to our economy.

Small businesses were the power behind the drive for the 1983 economic recovery. Small companies created roughly 2.5 million new jobs in 1981 and 1982, more than offsetting the number of jobs lost by large industries. It is the small companies which are flexible enough to respond rapidly to consumer demands. More than 97 percent of all American companies are small business operations. These companies account for approximately 40 percent of our gross national product.

Small business also means innovation. Small companies carve out market niches too small for large companies, offering vital goods and services that large companies cannot or will not provide. Small companies generate 24 times more technological advances per dollar spent as compared to large companies.

The accomplishments of small business are made in an environment which is not always conducive to economic expansion. I have been a member of the Small Business Committee since I first arrived to serve in Congress. I have heard countless small businessmen describing the difficulties they face: obtaining capital, paperwork burdens, management, regulations and unfair competition to name a few. Small business owners have shown time and time again that they can overcome these difficulties and contribute so much to our Nation's economy by creating new markets, new jobs and improving our quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, this week is set-aside to honor small business owners for their countless contributions. But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my concern for the small businesses in rural America. Along with the 5.6 million people actively involved in farming today, there are more than 54 million people whose livelihood is directly dependent upon agricultural production. The crisis of the farm economy is theirs too, and their burden is no less the same. Bankruptcy makes no distinction between farmer and farm supplier, or between farmer and farm banker. Let us remember that the survival and future of this important sector of small business will be reflected not only in the success of the general economy as a whole, but the success of the farm economy as well.

It is in our Nation's interest to encourage the success of all small business intiatives. We must reaffirm our commitment to that entrepreneurial spirit, so uniquely American, that has been the pride of this Nation's past and shall be the hope of its future.●

● Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, during this week many of us are taking the time to honor some of our Nation's most successful small businessmen and women. These individuals are outstanding representatives of this important segment of our private sector economy.

I must say that I am proud that the small businessman of the year from Massachusetts is from my congressional district; Mr. Alfred D'Alessandro of Gloucester.

However, today there is a question on the mind of Mr. D'Alessandro and his fellow honorees. They are concerned over the future of the agency which has given so many a fighting chance, and are opposed to the administration's proposed abolition of the Small Business Administration.

SBA is the one Federal agency with the responsibility to assist this segment of our economy. Small businesses are at the forefront of the American economy, producing a majority of new jobs and innovation occuring in the United States today.

The administration is now apparently supporting a revised plan which, rather than eliminating SBA will dismantle virtually all of the agency's lending programs. They claim that an independent voice for small business will still be maintained. But I contend that without a strong, fully functioning SBA, we would be virtually ignoring the voice of small business—and reversing what has been a bipartisan commitment to the small business sector.

Opponents of the SBA claim that the agency is not well utilized by American small businesses. I wish they could have received all the mail that has flooded my office over the last few weeks. Since the administration's plans were announced, I have heard from a large number of small businesses who have used the agency and support all of its programs. Many of these businesses wrote that they would not be in business today were it not for the Small Business Administration. It is likely that even our small businessman of the year, Mr. D'Alessandro, would not be honored here today if the SBA had not been in existence to turn his ideas into reality.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that many people have not been listening to the grassroots supporters of the Small Business Administration. Indicative of this feeling is the sentiment expressed by the president of the chamber of commerce in my hometown of Peabody, MA. He has written to the National Chamber of Commerce in Washington, DC and urged them to reconsider their position in opposition to the SBA. The Peabody Chamber has informed the national office that it intends to withdraw from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce unless this position is reversed.

Mr. Speaker, I think the message from the grassroots is clear—save the SBA.●

● Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the many men and women of vision who have created small businesses with their own ideas and their own energies.

During U.S. Small Business Week, it is appropriate that we reflect on the fact that all businesses began as small businesses.

In my own district of New Jersey, a man of vision named Henry F. Henderson, Jr., began a new business in 1954 and has built an engineering and design company that merges our industrial manufacturing strengths with high tech know-how.

Mr. Henderson has been recognized by the U.S. Small Business Administration for top honors in New Jersey.

He and thousands of men and women like him have begun with a dream and developed a strong future of growth and employment for hundreds of other people.

Cooperation between Government and the private sector has produced impressive results in my home State of New Jersey. I feel strongly that we must create that same type of cooperative atmosphere in Washington, if we are to be successful in our efforts to promote growth in the economy.

Small businesses are the backbone of our economy.

Most major corporations today depend on the support services provided by a wide variety of small businesses. Growth in one area promotes growth in related fields.

Last year, in the 11th Congressional District of New Jersey alone, 11,000 new businesses opened their doors.

These operations, and other businesses like them, employ a majority of the work force. Growth in this sector of the economy is a positive sign for the future.

Questions have been raised in Washington about Government's involvement in business investment and support services through the work of the Small Business Administration.

There is no question that Government has an important role in cooperative efforts to promote a strong economy. The question involves the form that role should take.

I have learned from the New Jersey experience that Government's involvement should include cooperative efforts to help small businesses. It is an idea with a proven track record.

The current challenge to the future of Federal programs for small business development may be a blessing in disguise.

By forcing all of us to review current programs and discover avenues toward improvement, this process will result in an ever-stronger cooperative commitment, based on proven ideas and methods.

We must work together to create a new level of Government-private sector cooperation to promote economic growth.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, commitment. To me this three syllable word best describes the stuff that makes up the small businessmen and women around this country. They are people who are willing to take a gamble and follow through on their own beliefs. They are the pioneers of today, setting forth on new adventures; often times risking all they have to achieve their goal; relying on their own determination, knowledge and entrepreneurship. That's commitment, and that is why it is fitting and proper that we set aside a week to honor the small business person—truly the backbone of the American economy.

Small businesses are the foundation on which our economy was built. It was the small business person who paved the way for our economic recovery. They are the innovators; over the past 50 years small businesses have been responsible for the creation of the majority of new products in the United States. Firms with less than 1,000 employees generate 24 times as many technological innovations per research dollar than do businesses with over 10,000 employees.

Small businesses are the job creators; 80 percent of all new jobs are created in the small business sector. More Americans have jobs now than ever before in our Nation's history.

Small businesses are the producers; during the 1970's small business accounted for 50 percent of the private sector GNP.

Today, more than 14 million small businesses across the Nation provide the initiative to propel our Nation to new heights. Last year the American economy soared ahead by 6.9 percent, defying dire predictions of many economists by turning in its best possible performance in 33 years.

Small businesses provide the locomotion to keep our economy on track.

However, we should not underestimate the strength of Government to derail this powerful engine.

The Federal Government has a two-part role to play in ensuring a bright future for small business. First, it should take every responsible effort to free small business of burdensome regulations which hamper growth and productivity. Second, it should promote a positive atmosphere in which small business can flourish both domestically and abroad.

An example of meeting the first goal will take place this week. It is appropriate that this week the Congress will take final action to repeal a tax recordkeeping law governing the business and nonbusiness use of automobiles and other equipment. This regulation required that excessively detailed vehicle logs be maintained in order for business people to receive routine tax deductions. This placed an unfair burden on the small businessman. It is fitting and proper that it be removed as soon as possible.

On January 21, I introduced legislation, H.R. 541, the Paperwork Reduction Act, to repeal the "adequate contemporaneous records" provision. In the past "adequate records" or "sufficient corroborating evidence" served as the legitimate standard for tax purposes. Productive business people should not be made unproductive bookkeepers. It is unfair for them to spend even more time coping with Government redtape. Companies which faithfully followed these regulations would have no time to do anything else. Repealing this onerous requirement is an example of fitting Government action to reduce burdensome regulations for small businesses.

In meeting the second goal, a Federal agency is needed to serve as small business's watchdog within the Government and liaison between the public and private sectors.

I believe the wholesale elimination of the Small Business Administration would be a serious mistake. Though there has been dissatisfaction with major elements of its programs, the SBA remains the only agency at the Federal level to serve as an important clearinghouse for all small business information. Its district offices provide necessary advice, counseling and resources to the small business community.

Abolishing the SBA is not the way to fight the deficit; closing down the agency and selling off its portfolio would cost the taxpayers in lost payments almost exactly the same amount as the projected savings. Instead the agency should be revamped and made more responsive.

We are entering a new entrepreneurial era, and the SBA should be redesigned to meet new challenges. Programs that cost far more than they produce must be eliminated. Programs that could produce valid results if better managed should be made more efficient and effective. Programs that already work well should be retained and enhanced. If these reforms can be made, then the Small Business Administration can meet its historic goal as the practical manifestation of small business's importance to the economy.

As regards international promotion, we must look toward the future and keep in mind that the world is becoming increasingly interdependent.

I have introduced legislation to give small business a "leg up" on the international market. House Concurrent Resolution 70 calls for international agreement on tariff and tax preferences to encourage exports by small businesses. If we are serious about expanding small business participation in world trade, tariff reductions would be one way to offset the extra complexity and risk inherent for small business exporters.

Our national economy, as well as the world economy, stands to benefit from a global free trade zone for small business. We can significantly ameliorate our trade deficit by attracting more American companies into the international trading area. A free trade zone targeted to independently owned small business will help foster free enterprise and entrepreneurship around the world. It is an important U.S. foreign policy objective to encourage the healthy growth of an active private sector, particularly in the developing world.

In the end, however, the Government can only do so much. As any small businessman will tell you the success or failure of a company will depend on the individual, how good a manager he or she is, and his or her commitment. We from Wisconsin have had a long history of committed small business people working for a better future in our state. I am proud that two of my fellow Wisconsinites will be honored during this week for superior achievement in the field of small business.

Ted Batterman of Fort Atkinson, the Wisconsin Small Business person of the year, saw the commercial potential in shelving mounted on tracks. His simple technology resulted in an annual 44 percent average growth of sales and the employment of 95 people in the last dozen years.

Gene Boyer of Beaver Dam has been named Woman in Business Advocate of the year. She has designed a framework for an entrepreneurial training program that involves educators and established business owners in providing classroom and on-the-job training for aspiring entrepreneurs. As head of the newly formed Wisconsin Women's Business Coalition, Boyer has taken steps toward her goal of organizing Wisconsin's women in business, management, and public life into a force for change in the state's political, legislative, and policymaking processes. With leadership such as this, I have no fears for the future of small business in my state.

As President Reagan said in proclaiming Small Business Week, "The history of America is the history of a nation at work—a nation of farmers, manufacturers, and merchants joining together to build a better society." This week we take time to honor that commitment to hard work and the belief that through that work of the individual, a difference can be made a better society can be built.●

● Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate those in our small business community across the country during this, U.S. Small Business Week. The men and women in our small businesses are often on the leading edge of innovation and progress. They bring particular skills and capabilities to our business sector that allow our economy to move ahead.

I am especially honored today to represent the area in Minnesota in which Dianne and Rocco Altobelli reside. The Altobellis are being honored this week as Minnesota's small business persons of the year. When the Altobellis started their business 11 years ago, Dianne managed the books and the reception desk, and Rocco hired three stylists to work with him. Today, the six Altobelli salons serve approximately 15,000 customers a month and gross $5 million annually. Also very important, Rocco and Dianne have not lost their ability to continue their community spirit. For the past 2 years, they have sponsored a fashion show/hair styling competition raising money to benefit the University of Minnesota Organ Transplant Assistance Fund.

The businesses represented by the various States range from a lumber company in Arkansas to a chemical corporation in Arizona. Many of these entrepreneurs started with little cash in their pockets but a strong spirit in their hearts. Through hard work and determination, they were able to make a go of their operation.

I would like to thank my colleague, Mr. MITCHELL, for arranging this special order, and again extend my congratulations to our 13 million small business people across the country and encourage them to continue their hard work and dedication.●

● Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague from Maryland, PARREN MITCHELL, the chairman of the House Committee on Small Business, for organizing today's special order honoring small business. It is a privilege to be able to participate in this celebration of Small Business Week.

The small business community has been the engine behind the tremendous recovery our Nation has experienced during the past several years. As small business owners in my State of Florida can testify, the continuing recovery has been strong and broadbased. In many sectors of the economy, small businesses have enjoyed considerably higher growth than their larger competitors. For example, between October 1982 and October 1984, employment in industries dominated by small firms rose 11.4 percent, nearly double the employment increase of larger firms.

Business starts across the country have set records for the past 2 years. In Florida alone, statistics indicate a 31-percent increase in new corporate formations during the past 4 years.

What has made this growth so dramatic? I think the answer is crystal clear—we have had a consistently low level of inflation.

I can think of no better way for this Congress to pay tribute to the economic importance of small business in America than to pledge that we will make the hard decisions necessary to promote an economic environment conducive to continuing growth and prosperity. First and foremost, this means that we must achieve substantial reductions in the projected budgetary deficits in not only fiscal year 1986, but in the outyears as well.

In a recent survey of its membership by the National Federation of Independent Business, it was learned that nearly 90 percent believe that reducing the deficit should be our Nation's highest priority. Almost 80 percent think that taxes are too high and accordingly, oppose efforts to force a citizen "bailout" of the Government. The message is—let us make the sacrifices across the board, let us not rely on new revenues that would inhibit further business expansion, and, let us pull together and do what is in the interest of the entire country, not narrow interest groups.

Doing what is best for small business is doing what is best for America. I urge that this House recognize this fact when we address the Federal budget in the coming weeks. If Congress is able to achieve significant deficit reduction, I am confident that the next few years will witness new records for small business expansion, continued employment increases, and a healthy, growing economy.●

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in rising today to salute what I consider to be the backbone of our Nation's economy; the small businessman and woman.

Some 21 years ago this week, Congress designated "National Small Business Week" to honor and recognize the achievements of those men and women who make up the small business community throughout our Nation.

Figures detailing the role the small business owners play in our economy are starting. It is estimated of the 15 million businesses in the United States, some 98 percent are considered to be in the category of small businesses.

The small business sector is by far the largest creator of jobs in our economy. In fact, the number of jobs created in the small business sector was twice that of large businesses.

Owning and operating a small business has been the dream of millions of Americans. The dream has become a reality for many of minority and women entrepreneurs. From 1983 to 1984, the percentage of women who owned their own businesses increased 5.1 percent from 2,440,000 to 2,566,000.

The number of minority small business owners jumped 10.3 percent during the same time period from 570,000 to 629,000.

It is vital that Congress continue to support the efforts of the small business community in our Nation. Small Business Week is the perfect vehicle to highlight the achievements of our small entrepreneurs and to send out the message that the small businessman will be the leader in providing us with economic growth in the years ahead.●

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Small Business for reserving this time to honor the Nation's small businesses.

Much has happened since last year's National Small Business Week. In a year, the Small Business Administration has gone from the praise of President Reagan to the scorn of David Stockman. The SBA, in 1 year, has gone from Presidential commendation to bureaucratic rathole.

But Mr. Speaker, it is not the SBA that has changed in a year. Most of the agency's programs continue to offer benefits to the Nation far exceeding costs. And it is not the small businesses that have changed in a year. Small businesses continue to need Government loans to expand and remain competitive.

What has changed is that some people stopped listening to small business men and women. Some people decided that honoring small businesses is enough but listening to them is too much. I disagree. To honor small businesses, we also must listen to the message of small business owners and employees carried in letters. They are asking us to save the SBA. To honor small businesses we also must listen to their testimony at committee hearings. They are telling us to save SBA's financial assistance programs.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit three letters from small business men and women. Listen to Isabelle Sanderman, the president of Li Wong Enterprises in West Covina, CA:

MARCH 1, 1985.

Mr. ESTEBAN E. TORRES,
Congress of the United States, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. TORRES: I have received your "Keeping in Touch" letter dated February 21, 1985 regarding the future of Small Business Administrations livelihood. I am one of those who used the Small Business Administration to help me along with an occasional problem. Nothing major, but it is a comfort to me to know that there is a place I can go if the need arises. No doubt there are countless others who stated their business with the help of the SBA. I am aware that the cost to keep this organization running is enormous, but I feel that we received so little for the taxes we pay in the way of community services from the government that I am in favor as you are to keep the SBA as long as possible.

You can tell the President for me that I voted for him because I like some of his policies and I think he is a fair man, but he cannot help the poor because he's never been there like so many others; and even though he means well, he can't do something about certain domestic issues if he knows nothing about them.

Thank you for keeping me informed.

Sincerely,

ISABELLE SANDERMAN,
President.

Listen to Richard D. Sullivan, the owner of Sullivan Janitorial Services in Cleveland, OH:

MARCH 4, 1985.

Congressman ESTEBAN TORRES,
Small Business Committee, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

CONGRESSMAN TORRES: We feel that the Small Business Administration has been a vanguard in helping small business.

In the beginning they made some mistakes, and had a few "kinks" in their procedures, but they have overcome the difficulties that they previously entertained and at the present time they are an effective and efficient "machine" working for the ongoing progress of the small business.

At this point in time the Small Business Administration is at the crest of what it was originally created to do.

The new programs which are being proposed and those that have been implemented, I am sure, will do some of things they are intended to do in 10 or 15 years, but not today. The Small Business Administration is doing them now.

In short, I think to disband the Small Business Administration at this time would be a great mistake if it is indeed your true intentions to aid and assist small businesses. We are sure the economical return will be more than tenfold the current investment in America's future.

Thank you for taking the time to listen to the voice of one small business owner.

Sincerely,

RICHARD D. SULLIVAN,
Owner.

And listen to Josie Mena, the project director of the San Joaquin Valley Business Consulting Center in Fresno, CA:

FEBRUARY 28, 1985.

Congressman ESTEBAN TORRES,
House of Representatives, Longworth Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN TORRES: I was pleased to receive your bulletin "Keeping in Touch" where you express your support for the continued funding of SBA.

As a Minority Business Development Center that provides management and technical assistance to minority owned business in Fresno County, we can certainly attest to necessity of SBA. Approximately 95 percent of our clients, financial packages are guaranteed through SBA. Their elimination would have a devastating impact in the formation of small business—specifically minority owned. Small businesses are the backbone of our economy and needless to say, they create the largest percentage of jobs.

Thank you for your support of SBA and if I can be of any assistance in lobbying for SBA please do let me know. For your information, I am attaching a copy of letter that I sent recently to Congressmen Coelho, Pashayan and Lehman.

Sincerely,

JOSIE MENA,
Project Director.

Mr. Speaker, these people are the small businessmen and women which we honor today. Listen to their words, save the SBA.●

● Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I commend the chairman of the House Small Business Committee, our friend and colleague PARREN MITCHELL, for scheduling this time to honor the Nation's small business community. Your stewardship of the Small Business Committee and its jurisdictional issues pertaining to legitimate small business concerns is to be applauded. It is, indeed, my pleasure to be able to serve and work with you.

As a member of the Small Business Committee and chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy, Environment, and Safety Issues Affecting Small Business, I am pleased to take the opportunity to salute the men and women of this Nation who contribute to the economic welfare of America by operating and maintaining small businesses. The almost 13 million small businesses in this country are the very foundation of new jobs, ideas, and technologies that further the economic system we enjoy. Moreover, our Nation's small businesses provide communities with a sense of continuity and support that go beyond just dollars and cents.

My district, the 17th District of Texas, is a perfect example. In this predominantly rural area, there are almost twice as many small businesses as the national average. These businesses, and the people who maintain them—many of whom are third or fourth generation families carrying on a long tradition in business—are the backbone of the communities they serve, economically and culturally. These businesses and the people they employ are a part of the community, and the community is a part of them; this interdependence between a small town or city and its business persons can overcome recession and economic hardship that would otherwise destroy the fiber of a community.

On this note, I commend the Nation's small business community during U.S. Small Business Week, and remind my colleagues and all Americans that this week should not be the only time we offer our thanks to these men and women: their contributions are felt in every city and town in this country every day, and our appreciation should be extended to them on a daily basis.●

● Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in honoring small businesses during U.S. Small Business Week.

51-059 O-86-23 (Pt. 8)

The efforts expended by small businessmen and women in operating their businesses efficiently, contributing to the development of new innovations and utilizing American talent in the workforce, is commendable. This week we recognize their important achievements and we honor them.

Today I would like to read to you some remarks made to me by small businessmen and women from my district. I think that they reflect the state of small business in my district and most importantly, they describe the character and motivation of the small businessman and woman.

First, I want to recognize the "Kansas small business person of the year." His name is Mr. Bruce F. Burdick, president of Burdick's Computer Stores, Inc. He is a resident of Overland Park, KS. Mr. Burdick is a successful businessman who has opened up a number of computer stores and often counsels Computerland franchisees. Last night at the small business reception he stated that he "supports the SBA and that some of it's loan programs assisted him in starting his business."

The following statements are made by small businessmen and women from my district and I would like to read them into the RECORD:

Ms. Mary Birch, executive secretary of the Overland Park, KS Chamber of Commerce: "Overland Park and Johnson County have been fortunate in the last 10 years to experience a vast array of dynamic business growth. In the pattern of growth it seems to become evident that the glue of the community are the small businesses who are developing and expanding. Small business growth has been the catalyst that has resulted in over 10 years of business expansion and growth in employment opportunities."

Mr. John Jullian, president of the Small Business Council of the Kansas City, Kansas Area Chamber of Commerce:

"The small businessman is not a stereotyped chairman of the board. He is not a 'sit behind the desk' professional. He is an adventurer. He is a speculator and a dreamer. And when you think about it, isn't this how business gets started? An idea, with a dream—the American dream.

"The American dream is still out there for every person who is willing to roll up his or her sleeves and stop bellyaching. It takes time and patience to realize a dream. Faith is also a strong factor. Sometimes it is more powerful than logic or theoretical thinking. Remember that big business did not start out that way.

"Success stories of small business are increasing at a greater percentage than anytime in our history. This leads to Keener competition and professionalism. It sounds like a tough way to go but it's not impossible. When success is realized with the accompanying self-satisfaction and financial contribution to our community, as Jackie Gleason used to exclaim 'how sweet it is!'.

"I believe that if you do what interests you, bearing in mind love, sensitivity, and cooperation with others, and strength and conviction, it can be done. It all makes you worthy of your own self-respect and that of others."

Mr. Mike Dugan, president of the Kansas City, Kansas Area Chamber of Commerce:

"Small business is big business in Kansas and throughout the United States. Locally, 96 percent of the area businesses have fewer than 50 employees. And those small businesses mean big numbers for employment. The Nation's 14 million small businesses employ one-half of the Nation's workforce.

"During National Small Business Week the Kansas City, KS Area Chamber of Commerce, in cooperation with the SBA, is saluting this essential group within the American economy. Today the chamber and the SBA announced the selection of the community's small business of the year. That small business is the Douglass Bank with Mr. Donald Ford as president and Mr. Will Taliaferro as chairman of the board. Additional awards were given to the new small business of the year. This business is River Views Newspaper, with John and Mary Walizeck, owners and publishers. The outstanding contribution to the community was made by the small business named Buchanan Architects, Eugene and Georgia Buchanan, principals."

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to honor small business in Kansas and throughout the Nation for their important and innovative contributions to the economy.●

● Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, it is with a mixture of pride and fear that I join with my distinguished colleagues today to celebrate National Small Business Week. Pride because of the spirit of entrepreneurship which has given life to the dreams of small business people all over this Nation. Fear, because the little assistance that the Federal Government has been able to give to help those dreams come true may be swept away by the Reagan administration.

As a member of the Small Business Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have listened with great interest to the testimony of many small business owners, bankers, and elected officials in this country. I have been impressed by their courage and their perserverance. There have been stories filled with sadness and stories filled with joy, but they are all filled with hope for a better tomorrow.

Small business generates 38 percent of our Nation's gross national product. Additionally, small business accounts for over 85 percent of newly created jobs in the country. In the district that I represent on Chicago's south side, unemployment is 17 percent. Unemployment among our youth is over 60 percent. Given the potential to create jobs and opportunities for economic development, I am extremely concerned about the Reagan administration's proposal to eliminate some of the SBA's most successful programs. The direct loan program, the guaranteed loan program, and the surety bonding programs are targeted for elimination, and yet, these are precisely the programs that have helped to create, sustain, and expand businesses; businesses that last year added an additional 13,000 jobs in my home State of Illinois. I fear that under the pretense of "deficit reduction," the administration will do away with helpful, meaningful, programs that Budget Director David Stockman does not want to keep anyway—deficit or no deficit.

Small business had rallied to the defense of the SBA, however. We have heard from small businesses, Government agencies, and elected officials. The message has come from far and near and the message has been loud and strong; small business wants to have a strong and independent SBA. If deficit reduction is the goal, then SBA will take it's share. I strongly oppose, however, elimination of programs that have been proven effective.

It is with this message, and with the hope of present and future small businesses, that I salute "Small Business Week." I salute the small business "people of the year," especially those in Illinois. I also congratulate Jack Smith, Chicago District Director of SBA, and the Chicago District office staff. Keep up the good work and good luck to all of you.●

● Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, all this week we are honoring this Nation's small business community. It is fitting that we do so, especially since they contribute so much to our economy.

At the same time, we need to realize that the Reagan administration wants to cut the lifeline to our small business community. I am talking about the proposal to eliminate the Small Business Administration.

The Small Business Administration [SBA] has been responsive to the needs of the small business entrepreneurs, including women and minorities, for the past 30 years. The SBA has proved effective in increasing Federal contract opportunities for small firms as well as by implementing set-aside provisions for minority-owned businesses.

The SBA has provided support to countless numbers of people in the Fifth Congressional District of Tennessee to operate many of this area's small enterprises. These are enterprises which stimulate and sustain our local economy. These are businesses that produce, innovate, and generate a large number of new jobs for the people of this county.

Small business is not just another special-interest group, it is a very vital component of our economic system. Tennessee's small business firms produce millions of dollars worth of products for both our domestic and foreign markets.

I believe that the real strength of our economy lies in the good health of the small business community. Without the continuation of the Small Business Administration, that strength in our small businesses and our economy would weaken. That is why I believe we must continue the programs sponsored by the Small Business Administration. I encourage all my colleagues here in the House of Representatives to support the continued funding of the Small Business Administration.●

● Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, in 1840, Alexis De Tocquevile made this observation about the American economy: "What most astonished me in the United States was not so much the grandeur of some undertakings as the innumerable multitude of the small ones." Today, nothing has changed since 1840. Small business is the most vital segment of our economy.

Small businesses total 97 percent of all business establishments, and the goods and services produced by the American small business person makes them the world's fourth greatest economic power. The value of small business is even more critical to my home State of California, which accounts for over 11 percent of the Nation's small business establishments. Small business is not just important to California, it is our economic lifeline. It is estimated that by the year 1990, California's dynamic economy will create 2 million new jobs, most of which will be provided by the small business sector.

Part of that dynamic influence comes right from my congressional district. As part of Small Business Week, in honor of our Nation's more than 14 million small businesses, I have recognized four of the many outstanding small business individuals in my district. They are: Don Beckhart, PIP Instant Printing in Pomona; Ken Casford, Whittier Mailing Service in Whittier; Jerry Oxman, Oxman Surplus in La Mirada; and Patrick Gatti, La Verne Florist in La Verne. These four small business people epitomize the dedication and perseverance it take to become successful small entrepreneurs in a free and growing economy. As Members of Congress, we need to do our part to insure steady growth and opportunity so that every American can attain successful dreams similar to these four outstanding individuals.●

● Mr. BARNES. I am pleased to take part in this recognition of National Small Business Week by honoring one of the more unique small businesses in my community of Montgomery County, MD—Integrated Microcomputer Systems, Inc.

As the following testimony by John T.C. Yeh, the owner, will show, Integrated Microcomputer Systems represents an inspiring example of how a long-shot business venture can succeed through the resourcefulness and perserverance of one individual—and with some help from the Small Business Administration.

When Mr. Yeh arrived in this country from Taiwan in 1947, not only was he completely unschooled in the English language, he was also deaf. Although he obtained a masters degree in computer science from the University of Maryland, he found that he was unable to advance in his chosen career because of the unwillingness of potential employers to hire someone with his handicap.

Frustrated by seeing his nonhandicapped brothers achieve professional success with similar qualifications, Mr. Yeh decided to strike out on his own. He received a loan from the Small Business Administration's Handicapped Assistance Loan Program and went on to achieve his dream of owning a business which has not only been financially successful, but has also provided employment for a number of minority and handicapped individuals.

The testimony follows:

TESTIMONY OF JOHN T.C. YEH BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS, APRIL 30, 1985

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as you can see my testimony will be presented in sign language. A member of my staff will be interpreting for me.

I am John Yeh, owner and president of Integrated Microcomputer Systems, Inc. IMS is a high-tech company located in Rockville, MD. We are involved in computer systems engineering, software development, office automation and telecommunications. Currently, we employ 175 people, almost 50 percent of whom are minorities and 20 percent of whom are deaf individuals. Most of these deaf employees were either unemployed or significantly underemployed before joining us.

I have been told that it might be useful to the 99th Congress, as it deliberates the future of the SBA and its various programs, to hear the story of why and how I founded the company and even a little about my background.

I was born deaf in Taiwan in 1947. In search of a quality education for my deaf sister and me, my parents moved the family to the United States when I was 15. I arrived not knowing a word of English but thanks to a constantly used Chinese/English dictionary and dedicated teachers at the federally funded Kendall School for the Deaf here in Washington, DC, I was accepted at Gallaudet College. It was at this internationally known college for the deaf, that I received a bachelor of arts degree in mathematics. Knowing that job opportunities were limited for deaf individuals, even for those possessing a bachelor's degree, I enrolled at the University of Maryland. There with the aid of interpreters and extra readings recommended by professors, I earned a masters degree in computer science.

After months of effort and the distribution of hundreds of resumes the only job I could find was as a computer programmer at my alma mater, Gallaudet College, a place not afraid to hire a deaf person. I advanced to senior programmer, a position I did not find sufficiently challenging and a position from which it was impossible to advance because of the limited opportunities inherent in any college's computer unit.

It was during this time that I saw my three hearing brothers, each of whom also received a graduate degree in computer science from the University of Maryland, advance quickly in the high-tech field.

Once again, I spent many months looking for a position that offered the professional advancement of which I knew I was capable. Potential employers, however, lost all interest as soon as they discovered I was deaf.

It was a very frustrating time for me. The high-tech world was rushing forward with many exciting advances, my brothers were experiencing constant professional progress and I, it seemed, would be in the same unchallenging, dead end position for the rest of my life.

At this point it became clear to me that the only way I would ever advance was to start my own business, a business which, hopefully, would allow me to provide employment opportunities to some of the many deaf people I knew who were unemployed or, like myelf, underemployed.

After collecting several almost instantaneous rejections from bank loan officers, I received a $100,000 loan from the SBA's Handicapped Assistance Loan [HAL] Program to start Integrated Microcomputer Systems in 1979. The Small Business Administration continued to be of vital assistance through its many excellent publications and technical assistance, but most of all through its 8(a) set-aside program for minority-owned business.

I am certain that I would not have been able to start the business without the SBA. I am equally certain that the company would not have grown from myself, a secretary, and a part-time business manager to the 175 employees we have now without the SBA.

Although I am a Republican and support the administration in several respects, I vigorously oppose the elimination or reduction of the Small Business Administration as a very shortsighted attempt to reduce the Federal deficit. I firmly believe that the SBA and its Handicapped Assistance Loan Program are wise investments in the future of our country's economy. The billions of dollars small businesses and their employees pay in taxes shows the Administration's strategy to be "penny wise and pound foolish".

I respectfully urge this Congress to retain the Small Business Administration in its entirety. And I respectfully request this committee to make special efforts to assure that Congress retains the Handicapped Assistance Loan Program. The latter is the only way many disabled people will be allowed to reach their potential for contributing to the economic and social health of our country.

Thank you for the opportunity to share my experiences and views.●

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in recognizing the vital role that small businesses play in our Nation's economy.

President Reagan in his proclamation declaring the week of May 5 as "Small Business Week," stated that throughout our history small businesses have "provided the foundation for a growing and prosperous America". The President further asserted that small businesses "provide the technology to keep the economy growing, the manufacturing and marketing skills to keep the Nation competitive, and the innovation to guide us into a better future."

The President's words are not mere rhetoric. The fact is that small businesses provide 58 percent of the jobs in this country, are responsible for 45 percent of the GNP, and produce half of all major innovations at only 4 percent of what it costs big business and government to produce the remainder.

Thirty-two years ago, recognizing the importance of small businesses, the Congress established the SBA. Over the years it has played, and continues to play, a critical role in the expansion and development of small businesses throughout America. A great many small businesses would not exist today were it not for the financial and technical assistance made available to them through the programs administered by the SBA.

Yet the administration proposes to do away with the SBA. The President, as usual, was eloquent in his Small Business Week Proclamation. But this country and this economy needs more than just lip service from the White House, it requires a President who will provide a positive climate for small business. A good place to start would be with the removal of the SBA from the administration's hit list.●

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute small businesses all over the country as we celebrate Small Business Week this May 5-11.

Our Nation is a nation at work with small business leading the way. It is small business men and women who have created the jobs and the wealth of this great land and helped make our country the richest in the world. It is small business people who have done the innovation and have created the new ideas to keep America No. 1 in technology, manufacturing, farming, and in many other areas.

Our Nation's 14 million small businesses have led the way for our current economic prosperity. It is small business that has been willing to take the risks, hire the manpower, and rekindle that great American competitive spirit. Many young entrepreneurs have seen the opportunities and have striven to meet the challenge.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in celebrating "America at Work" and in saluting America's small businesses.●

● Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, in a recent Washington Post editorial George F. Will wrote: "Since 1970 the United States has produced more jobs every day than Western Europe has produced in the decade and a half." This is a tribute to small businessmen and small businesswomen who, by using what President Reagan calls enterprising genius, created more of these jobs than any other sector. In just 2 years, from 1980 to 1982, small business created 2,650,000 new jobs. All this is evidence small business is a driving force in our economy. It is fitting we honor them this week.

But what will we do to them next week? For gentlemen, we stand here today not only in the midst of "small business week," but also on the eve of the budget debate. The outcome of that debate will have a tremendous effect on small business and all Americans, for some time to come.

I believe we have but one alternative and that is to substantially reduce the deficit. This is a difficult chore, but not one that is optional. And if we meet the challenge, most experts agree interest rates will fall and small business will be off and running again. So, let us go forward in a bipartisan manner to reduce the deficit. This would show we truly honor small business. Thank you.●

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

BIG STEEL HAS BIG PROBLEMS; NOW WE NEED WORKABLE SOLUTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennslyvania [Mr. GAYDOS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker it should come as no surprise to anyone in this body who has followed the American steel industry when I say that the industry is in big trouble. I have been saying so for the past several years and, while I fear that my words have fallen on deaf ears, I know I am not alone in my concern.

Recent reports strengthen my concerns. Just the other day, Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp., which about 1 month ago filed for reorganization under chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code, issued its financial report for 1984—and the picture isn't too good.

Wheeling-Pittsburgh reported that in 1984 it suffered an operating loss of $8.2 million. Admittedly there was some improvement from 1983 to 1984. In 1983, Wheeling-Pittsburgh showed an operating loss of $93.3 million. Keep in mind, however, that there are operating losses, the difference between net sales and operating costs. The net loss for Wheeling-Pittsburgh in 1984—that's after interest on debt and other costs—was $59.3 million, as compared to a net loss of $54 million in 1983.

And, given the figures for the first quarter of 1985, things are still bleak. For the first quarter of 1984, Wheeling-Pittsburgh showed an operating profit of just over $7 million. For the first quarter of this year, the company reports an operating loss of $11.6 million.

But Wheeling-Pittsburgh is not the only steel company feeling the pinch. Armco, Inc., will sell up to $800 million in assets in order to reduce its debt and consolidate its operations. Armco hopes to stave off continuing problems through this means.

And, late last month, Inland Steel Co. announced that it would reduce its steelmaking capacity by 30 percent on a permanent basis over the next year and a half, laying off some 900 hourly workers and 150 salaried workers in the process.

In addition, other major steel producers in this country are facing similar problems that could result in similar actions—filing for reorganization and reductions in capacity. Given the fears that American lenders have with regards to loans to steelmakers, the problems could affect many others as well.

An article in the Wall Street Journal on May 2 clearly outlines the issue. The article quotes one bank vice president as advising loan officers to show extreme caution in making new loans to major steel making firms. That bank officer says that despite a reduction in steelmaker bank debt from 1983 to 1984, the industry's failure to rebuild its balance sheets during the economic recovery makes new credit just too risky.

What this means for the steel industry in this country is that at a time when it is seeking resources in order to modernize its plants and install new technological advances as a means of competing better with imported steel, it will not be able to get those funds from traditional lenders.

I am enclosing the article because I think every member of this body should be very much aware of the pressures facing this most important industry.

But, that isn't all. The United States Steel Corp. held its annual meeting in Los Angeles earlier this week. At that meeting, David Roderick, United States Steel board chairman, told stockholders that the American Steel industry would continue to shrink over the next 5 years and that United States Steel, itself, would survive only if the Government restricts imports and labor unions grant concessions.

Mr. Roderick, who strongly supported this administration's decision to aim for voluntary restraint agreements with several steel exporting nations, seems now ready to change his mind. How, he hopes the agreements work, but he isn't overly optimistic.

I don't know why he is so surprised. I have been saying since last September that only worldwide quotas would work. These agreements we have developed will only go so far.

The problem, simply stated, is that the agreements have been drawn with some eight steel-exporting nations. What we, who are concerned, see is other nations with whom there are no agreements shipping more here.

Last week, a new report on the steel industry was released. This report,

"The Competitive Status of the U.S. Steel Industry," was prepared by the Steel Panel Committee on Technology and International Economic and Trade Issues of the Office of the Foreign Secretary of the National Academy of Engineering and the Commission on Engineering and Technical Systems of the National Research Council.

The opening paragraph of this report sets the stage as well as any other single report I have read on the future of the American steel industry:

The domestic steel industry, probably more than any other industry in this country, offers a unique opportunity to study the influence of technology and international trade policy alternatives on mature or declining industries. For roughly two decades the steel industry in the United States has been beset by a plethora of related factors: Severe competition from imported steel, often sold at allegedly dumping prices; relative long depreciation schedules; outdated facilities; de facto price controls; high labor costs; high capital outlays to meet regulatory requirements; poor public relations; and management problems. Moreover, the international trade aspects of the problem appear to be increasing rather than diminishing. The world steel industry has access capacity and little or no profits while at the same time some developing countries are adding new capacity. These conditions are likely to induce foreign producers to export more steel to the United States, the world's largest and most accessible market.

There is almost nothing else to be said about the American steel industry except what to do to resolve the problems.

The report by the National Academy of Engineering and the National Research Council does not make any specific recommendations, but instead looks at a number of those that have been proposed and reviews both the positive and negative impacts of those suggested solutions.

Enforcement of countervailing duty or antidumping laws, the study says, would be beneficial in that industry would see the maximum extent of American fair trade laws. On the obverse side of that coin, there is no assurance that the imposition of unfair trade duties on particular countries or geographical regions would prevent other countries from expanding their steel exports.

The disadvantage of quotas, according to the report, is that they eliminate any foreign price competition and weaken the constraint on domestic wage settlements. On the other hand, they are the most direct way of assuring the domestic industry a specific market share and eliminate concerns about fluctuations in exchange rates and supply-demand balances.

One other suggestion worth noting concerns liberalization of antitrust policy in the United States. Such changes that would permit mergers and acquisitions to promote combining and matching of facilities; joint ventures to reduce capital costs; and jointly sponsored research and development.

This is an important study and one I recommend to each and every Member of Congress so that we, as a body, will be in a position to understand the problems of this most important industry and develop solutions that will have some long-lasting impact.

I have never made a secret of the fact that I would prefer specific quotas for a specified period of time, probably 5 years, because I believe that is the only way we will be able to control the flow of steel into this country and ensure our domestic steel industry an opportunity to hold its share of the American market.

That way, we would not have to fear increases from countries that have not signed voluntary agreements with us and, at the same time, we would have a better handle on exactly what our needs are.

I recognize that quotas alone might not do the job. It may well be that some combination of factors, such as strong enforcement of unfair trade laws and easing of antitrust laws as well as quotas, might be a better answer.

None of us, however, even those opposed to quotas, should close his or her mind to seeking workable solutions that will enable the American steel industry to remain healthy and productive.

Banks Fret Over Exposure in Steel Industry

(By J. Ernest Beazley)

Since J.P. Morgan founded U.S. Steel Corp. in 1901, the alliance of steelmakers and bankers has been an intimate one. But that once-stable relationship appears headed for the rocks as lenders increasingly fret over their exposure in the troubled industry.

Last month's bankruptcy-law filing by Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. and Armco Inc.'s near-bankruptcy only exacerbated already-strained ties between capital and industry. They also illustrated the turbulence and heightened risk in steel lending.

Not long ago, the unraveling of the steel industry would have seemed unthinkable both to producers and bankers alike. But cheap foreign imports, high labor costs, obsolete hardware and the dwindling demand for steel have ravaged steelmakers, shattering their lenders' smokestack orientation.

Although loans to the industry pale next to the enormity of Latin debt, steel industry bankers find themselves in vulnerable positions. Most major U.S. lenders already are carrying large portfolios of shaky foreign loans, and their capital-to-assets ratios scarcely meet federal regulatory guidelines.

Money-center banks are reassessing major steelmakers as credit risks, while some lenders have turned to stronger producers such as Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., a specialty-steel maker, and Pohang Iron & Steel Co. of Korea, a government-controlled producer. Most banks are seeking to use debt-restructuring talks such as those with Wheeling-Pittsburgh and Armco to strengthen the security for existing loans.

Consequently, "it's getting to the point that banks hear the word 'steel' and think 'no'," says Mark Steitz, steel analyst for the U.S. Congressional Budget Office.

Credit status is damaged

Steel executives agree. "There isn't any doubt that lenders will be a little more edgy," says Robert Wilkins, Bethlehem Steel Corp.'s senior vice president, finance. Wheeling-Pittsburgh's bankruptcy-law filing, he adds, "damages everyone's credit status."

Even some profitable mini-mills have detected a coolness of late from usually friendly money-center banks. John Morris, assistant treasurer and controller of Roanoke Electric Steel Corp., says that when he discussed financing a planned new rolling mill recently with a large New York bank, "they told us they weren't at all interested because they already had so many steel loans in their portfolio."

Although steel industry exposure for individual banks is difficult to determine, such loan portfolios add up to several billion dollars for the nation's top five or six lenders alone. As a result, Frank Renaud, a Marine Midland Bank vice president and economist, advises lending officers to show "extreme caution" in making new loans to major steelmakers. Despite a reduction last year from 1983 in steelmakers' bank debt as a percentage of total liabilities, the indistry's failure to rebuild its balance sheets during the economic recovery makes new credit "just too risky," he contends.

"The damage is probably containable, but it's a problem with a lot of long-term implications that we'll be wrestling with for years," says one major steelmaker's banker. Adds a director of another producer: "If the banks didn't already realize how serious the situation is, Armco and Wheeling-Pittsburgh got their attention."

Wheeling-Pittsburgh's Chapter 11 filing for bankruptcy-law protection, which followed months of talks aimed at restructuring the No. 7 producer's debt, left Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. and 10 other lenders holding more than $300 million in unsecured debt.

Just a month earlier, Armco—less visibly—faced an equally severe crisis. The nation's No. 5 steelmaker, unable to meet regulators' demands for $130 million in fresh reserves to shore up its troubled insurance operations, turned to its banks to put together a new $300 million revolving credit agreement.

"Nobody wanted to stay in (the new agreement), but there wasn't a lot of choice," says one Armco lender.

Wheeling-Pittsburgh's filing and the gradual deterioration of steelmakers' finances didn't catch lenders totally by surprise. Bank of America is known to have conducted an extensive study of steel industry lending, long dominated by traditional Northeastern banks, only to conclude that a major entry was far too risky.

Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and Chase Manhattan Bank, meanwhile, have done recent analyses that found the banks had a large share of the industry's credits relative to other money-center banks. Bankers say the studies concluded that the two banks should be increasingly selective in steel lending.

Bankers say that the bulk of the industry bank credit is advanced by five or six major lenders, all but one of them in New York. The industry's top three lenders are said to be Citicorp, Chase Manhattan and Morgan Guaranty. Other major lenders are Manufacturers, Bankers Trust Co. and Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago.

The banks declined to discuss their exposure in the steel industry.

The increasing risk that comes with lending to steelmakers is illustrated by regulators' classification of industry debt. Before Wheeling-Pittsburgh's filing for bankruptcy-law protection, the steelmaker's bank debt already was classified as substandard. The category is the least serious of three used by bankers and examiners to designate problem loans. It basically means the loan carries excessive risk.

Bankers say Wheeling-Pittsburgh's loans now will be downgraded to doubtful, a more serious category that reflects increased likelihood of loss. Such classifications require the lender to add to its loan-loss reserve, with that amount subtracted from a bank's earnings.

Similarly, large portions of the bank loans extended Armco and Bethlehem Steel, another deeply troubled steelmaker, are also believed to be classified as substandard.

Compounding the problem for lenders is the seeming inevitability of the industry's continued decline. "The real fear we all have isn't so much that there'll be more Wheeling-Pittsburghs now during the industry down cycle, but that they've been wounded so badly they can't participate in any kind of an upturn," one lender says.

The extent of bank exposure to the industry is difficult to gauge. At least one large New York investment house recently tried to assess individual bank exposure only to come up short. "It's tedious and damned near impossible," says one of the firm's executives. Neither the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency nor the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. require their bank examiners to keep tabs on such loans.

That's partly because of the large numbers of contingent liabilities, off-balance-sheet financing transactions and other "creative" financing arrangements that steelmakers have resorted to as their finances—and credit ratings—deteriorated. Many commercial arrangements with steelmakers in which banks' assets are clearly at risk don't appear as loans to the companies on banks' balance sheets.

EQUITY INTEREST IN MACHINERY

When Bethlehem needed to make $540 million in mill improvements at its Sparrows Point, Md., and Burns Harbor, Ind., plants last year, the steelmaker's heavy debt load and poor credit rating ruled out conventional bank and insurance-company financing. Instead, Morgan Guaranty, Chemical and Bankers Trust agreed to take an equity interest in the modern steelmaking machinery. Once the machinery begins operating next year, the banks expect to recover their investment through a tolling, or fee, arrangement that hinges on usage.

Banks have financed other steelmakers' iron ore and metallurgical coal suppliers on a production-payment arrangement. Although the banks technically have extended loans to the mining companies, repayment hinges on the steelmakers' ability to accept the ore. The loans, of course, don't appear on the banks' books as loans to steelmakers.

Even many steel bankers aren't able to assess the exposure. During Armco's negotiations with its lenders, the company circulated a three-ring binder outlining both its bank debt and lenders' contingent exposure—mainly letters of credit to back its reinsurance operations. Bankers dubbed it "The Debt Book."

"I was stunned," one Armco lender said. "There was a page in it for every bank, and I hadn't even heard of some of these banks." The banker adds: "If you define exposure as assets at risk, the big banks' exposure is far above what anyone thinks."●

INDUSTRIAL COMPETITIVENESS LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

● Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a package of legislative initiatives designed to address the serious decline in the competitiveness of this Nation's industries in the world economy.

Two years ago, the Economic Stabilization Subcommittee, which I chair, began an extensive set of hearings on the competitive problems of American industry and the need for a public response to those problems. A major source of these problems is the overvalued dollar, but it is only one source. Our hearings disclosed deep-seated structural problems in the American economy that have persisted through fluctuations in the value of the dollar—slow productivity growth, high unemployment, stagnant wages, and high capital costs, Dozens of witnesses warned that these problems would hamper our ability to compete in world markets and make it impossible to sustain the rate of growth which is essential to provide a rising standard of living and decent jobs for all American workers.

We have failed to address these issues adequately and the results are clear. When I first introduced legislation in late 1983 to deal with our competitiveness problems, our trade deficit was running at a $69 billion annual rate. Last year it rose to a devastating $123.3 billion, and it is continuing to spiral rapidly upward. We are reaching the point where the losses our industries are suffering in terms of reduced market share, inadequate investment, plant closings, and declining employment, will be impossible to recoup.

Trade performance is increasingly critical to our prospects for growth—fully 75 percent of all goods produced in this country are now subject to international competition. But as our trade dependence is increasing, our trade performance is becoming even more abysmal. We are rapidly losing whatever competitive edge we had, not only in older industries such as steel and machine tools, but in potentially high-growth high-tech sectors. Imports are taking an ever-increasing share of our domestic markets in a whole range of goods, including steel, autos, and machine tools. Simultaneously, our share of the world's export market in such areas as semiconductors, computers and chemicals has dropped dramatically. Burdened by the overvalued dollar, the industrial strategies of our competitors, and their own competitive problems, our industries are no longer holding their own.

The burgeoning trade deficit that has resulted has become a tremendous drag on our economy. We have only to look at the newspaper to see that the President's engine of growth is grinding to a halt.

As of the first quarter of this year, our growth has plummeted to a 1.3 percent annual rate—the smallest quarterly gain since the recession ended in late 1982. The Commerce Department has just reported yet another drop in two key indicators used to gauge economic activity—the index of leading economic indicators and new orders for factory goods. New orders for factory goods now have declined in 8 of the last 12 months. Orders for nondefense capital goods have dropped 7.4 percent. New orders for consumer goods and materials are down, net business formation is down, contracts and orders for plant and equipment are down, vendor performance is down. The sudden acceleration of investment that begin in 1983 has been fading for the past year.

Our economic slowdown is apparently picking up speed and our trade imbalance is a central factor. Domestic production gains are continuing to be limited by higher imports and flat export sales, holding down growth. Manufacturing activity, which never fully recovered from the last recession, has been weakened as demand has shifted from domestic products to foreign goods. We cannot possibly keep growing if we're importing all our goods.

If this period of minimal growth continues, and there is every indication that it will, the management of the American people will once again face the prospect of a serious recession. The administration can no longer apply what has been its chief economic stimulant—larger and larger budget deficits. Our reckless fiscal policy is now self-destructing. President Reagan has been counting on real economic growth of about 4 percent this year to prevent the Federal budget deficit from growing even larger. Instead, slow growth will swell that deficit. Lower economic activity, among other things, implies lower incomes, profits and Treasury revenues. It also suggests the economy's growth may not be vigorous enough to prevent a significant rise in an already unacceptable 7.2 percent unemployment rate.

We can no longer push these problems aside and hope they will solve themselves. It is long past time that we put the competitiveness of our industries, and the economic stability that competitiveness can bring, at the top of this Nation's economic agenda. The President's own Commission on Industrial Competitiveness perhaps put it best:

> The United States is losing its ability to compete in world markets . . . A close look at U.S. performance during the past two decades reveals a declining ability to compete—a trend that, if continued, will lead to a lower standard of living and fewer opportunities for all Americans.

Through subcommittee's hearings, we identified three basic causes for our competitiveness problem:

First, we clearly have an extensive set of government policies which grant support to industry, but we have been unable to focus these policies into a coherent strategy to improve our international competitiveness;

Second, we have failed to support an adequate level of applied research and development to keep American goods and technologies competitive; and

Third, we have been unwilling or unable to make the investment required to keep our industries competitive in world markets.

This is not my view of our competitiveness problem, or even the Democratic view. It is a view shared by nearly two dozen panels of distinguished experts of varying political persuasions—including President Reagan's own Commission on Industrial Competitiveness—who have tried to divine the roots of our economic slump.

The legislation I am introducing today would meet these problems head on. This legislation would create a Council on Industrial Competitiveness to address the issue of policy coordination; establish an Advanced Technology Foundation to facilitate the development and dissemination of new technology; and create a bank for industrial competitiveness to respond to the problems of inadequate investment and high capital costs.

Stunning confusion marks U.S. policy affecting competitiveness. While existing policies profoundly affect individual industries, their overall impact on key industrial sectors is too often neither intended, understood, nor anticipated. The Federal Government ostensibly applies public policy in pursuit of a public purpose, but in fact often has no clearly articulated purpose against which to measure the policy or its impact.

The basic issue confronting the U.S. economy is the inability of all those participants with important stakes in its success to act together, to build a consensus about common economic problems and to mobilize resources in pursuit of our common goals. In report after report, a principal recommendation is the need for better coordination of the various government actions that influence business activities and U.S. participation in the global marketplace. Business, labor and government all have critical roles to play in restoring America's global competitiveness. Consensus-building must, therefore, be the cornerstone of any competitiveness strategy.

The first bill I am introducing would create a Council on Industrial Competitiveness which would provide a mechanism for coordinating government policies and would allow government, business, and labor to work together and achieve consensus to better the competitive position of American industry. The bill would establish a national Council, charged with thinking broadly about the structure of our economy and the problems of international competitiveness. The national Council would in turn sponsor a series of industry subcouncils to explore in greater depth the problems and prospects of specific industries or sectors. The agenda for both the national and sectoral councils would be the same: to determine ways in which private action and public policy can further our common goals of economic growth and international competitiveness.

At the heart of the deficiencies in current government policies affecting the competitiveness of U.S. industries is an appalling lack of both basic economic data regarding competitive opportunities and problems and the focused analytical capability that could make use of it. This incredible lack of information contributes to this country's inability to devise effective economic strategies and perpetuates our unfortunate tendency to be "blindsided" by foreign competitive advances which could easily have been foreseen. This Nation's already inadequate economic data base has been eroded by cuts this administration has made in critical data collection programs. But even before these reductions, the Federal Government's capacity to analyze international economic data from a competitiveness perspective was minimal.

The Council would also be charged with undertaking precisely such analysis. It would interpret and analyze relevant domestic and international data concerning current and future economic trends and market opportunities. Consequently, it would be in a position to monitor the changing nature of the U.S. industrial economy and its capacity to provide marketable goods and services in domestic and international markets, providing an early warning system regarding problems in responding to international competition.

A second bill I am proposing would address our failure to support an adequate level of applied research and development. Applied research is the key to international competitiveness, as it is central to the production of new products and the introduction of cost-cutting breakthroughs in existing production which will allow American industry to retain the needed edge over foreign firms. Yet American industry systematically underinvests in applied research.

The Government has for years recognized the need for public support of research, yet we presently concentrate our efforts on either basic research via the National Science Foundation, or applied research in the military sector through the Department of Defense. We devote a far larger fraction of our government-funded R&D to defense purposes than does either Japan or West Germany and spend a substantially smaller fraction of GNP for civilian R&D purposes. The Reagan administration has increased the fraction of Federal R&D funds for defense purposes from about 47 percent in 1980 to the 1984 level of 70 percent.

The bill I am introducing today would create an Advanced Technology Foundation to provide our civilian industrial sector with the same type of support which NSF provides for basic research and the Defense Department provides for military applied research. The Foundation's mission would be to focus national attention on the vital link between technological innovation and the international competitiveness of the American economy, and to provide financial assistance programs to stimulate the development of technological innovation in the private sector. The bill would also create a Federal Industrial Extension Service in order to speed the diffusion of new technologies to small- and medium-sized firms that are not generally able to gain ready access to many new technological developments. The Foundation would focus on research in areas of industrywide significance. Such support will help all sectors of the American economy develop and maintain a strong competitive position in the world economy.

A third piece of legislation would address serious deficiencies in our capital markets. The bill would create a Bank for Industrial Competitiveness which will help to catalyze private financial support for industries and firms whose health is essential for a vital and competitive national economy. Although this country possesses one of the most efficient and highly-developed capital markets in the world, there remain certain key areas in which private capital markets fail to meet the needs of the economy. In particular, financial markets often fail to provide adequate flows of capital to mature industries seeking revitalization, and fail to supply innovative, growing firms with the patient capital they need for expansion. The bank's mission would be to promote the competitiveness of America's industry by cooperating with private banks in overcoming structural gaps in capital markets, thereby improving the efficiency of these markets.

As a market-perfecting institution, the bank would focus its attention solely on niches which are presently underserved by private financing. It would not be a source of subsidized rate financing. The bank would only help to finance projects that are financially sound when measured largely against market criteria.

In basic industries requiring modernization, the bank would help negotiate the kinds of revitalization agreements among all participants in the industry that are essential to producing a viable investment package. Failure to reach such a consensus between management, labor and lenders put Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. in bankruptcy court only a few weeks ago. This failure has serious implications for other companies in the steel industry and in other industries which face heavy debt and uncertain futures. In new and emerging industries, the bank would provide patient capital for new product or technology development through direct lending, and by promoting decentralized forms of development finance. In all cases, Bank financial participation would be limited to a maximum of 30 percent, and each package would have to bear the test of acceptance by private lenders.

Together, these three initiatives give us a comprehensive approach to our competitiveness problems. But each stands alone as an important contributor to an overall competitiveness strategy.

Ideally, I believe a comprehensive approach embodying these three initiatives is the way we should proceed. But I am a political realist. We know that the administration knows of our competitiveness problems—his own Commission has told him of them in devastating detail. We also know the President's response.

President Reagan has dealt with our desperate need to bring competitiveness issues to the top of this Nation's economic agenda by creating an advisory Commission on Industrial Competitiveness and then ignoring its recommendations. He has dismissed out of hand his Commission's recommendation that we establish a Department of Science and Technology—a proposal far more ambitious than the Advanced Technology Foundation I recommend. And despite continuing plant closings, rapid movement of production overseas, and decreasing levels of domestic investment, the administration has yet to even acknowledge that we have a capital investment problem. Perhaps our growing economic instability will eventually grab the President's attention—but, to date, his indifference has been devastating.

Given these political realities, I have included in the package I am proposing two bills which constitute an alternative approach—one creating a White House Adviser on Economic Competitiveness and the other establishing an Economic Information Center within the Department of Commerce. Virtually every group that has examined our international competitiveness problems has endorsed two specific recommendations. First, all agreed there is a need to create a Presidential Adviser on Economic Competitiveness to raise competitiveness to the highest level of U.S. economic policymaking, and to bring greater coordination and coherence to the welter of Federal policies that affect the competitiveness of U.S. industry. Second, there is agreement that the Federal Government must establish the analytic capacity to assess U.S. and foreign competitive shifts and the likely effects of U.S. domestic and foreign policies on American competitiveness.

As the other bills I have introduced today demonstrate, I believe far more needs to be undertaken than these two recommendations if our country is to make a serious effort to address its declining ability to compete in international markets. However, these are both sensible suggestions that have attracted widespread bipartisan support. Together they would make a constructive beginning toward developing a more coherent set of national competitiveness policies. In my view, these proposals represent the very least we can afford to do given the serious problems we face.

The first bill would establish within the Executive Office of the President the position of Special Adviser on Economic Competitiveness to advise the President on issues relating to the international competitiveness of the U.S. economy. The second would create an Information Center on Economic Competitiveness in the Department of Commerce to collect and analyze information pertaining to the international competitiveness of U.S. industry.

The duties of the Special Adviser would include evaluating existing government policies and business practices in terms of their competitive impact, analyzing relevant domestic and international data concerning current and future economic trends and market opportunities affecting U.S. industry, and providing policy recommendations and guidance to the President and the Federal agencies to further the development of a more coherent, long-term set of industrial strategies.

The Special Adviser would have the authority to constitute such advisory committees and consult with such representatives of industry, labor, consumers, State and local governments, and other groups as he deems necessary. He would be able to secure directly from any department or agency of the Federal Government, as well as private research organizations, the information necessary to carry out his duties. He would also be able to employ on a consultant basis the experts necessary to carry out the duties of his office.

In sum, he would serve as a desperately needed highly visible focal point for the making of U.S. competitiveness policy.

The Information Center on Economic Competitiveness would be responsible for collecting and analyzing, in consultation with the appropriate Federal agencies, all information pertaining to the international operations and competitiveness of U.S. industries. It would be responsible for collecting data and conducting studies on all sectors of the U.S. economy, as well as collecting comparative international information on specific industries and the policies of foreign governments toward those industries.

The Center would also serve as a national clearinghouse for information on economic competitiveness, providing data and analysis to State and local governments and to private industry. The Center would also help identify impending import threats and potential export opportunities for U.S. industries, and make available to industry currently unobtainable translations of foreign trade laws, regulations, and publications essential to the successful operation of American business.

In addition, the Center would be charged with maintaining updated input-output tables of U.S. industries capable of providing detailed analysis of the economic transactions among industries at particular periods in time. This essential analytical tool is currently updated only once every 8 years, making it almost useless for effective policymaking. In contrast, the Japanese update their tables on a yearly basis.

Since the Federal Government has a highly decentralized system of data collection, the success of the Center will largely depend on the cooperation it receives from the numerous departments and agencies that collect information relating to economic competitiveness. These agencies include, among others, the Federal Reserve Board, the Departments of Labor, Treasury, Agriculture, and Justice, the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, and the Federal and International Trade Commissions. The bill explicitly directs these agencies to use the programs under their authority to provide the Center such assistance as the Center deems necessary to carry out its responsibilities.

The legislative initiatives I am introducing today are intended to refocus our national debate on economic policy. Improved competitiveness must be central to that debate, and it is my belief that these specific initiatives represent public actions which are essential to rebuilding our industrial competitiveness and insuring the long-run prosperity of the economy.●

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include therein extraneous material on the subject of the special order today by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PETROLEUM MARKETING PRACTICES ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, along with my good friend and colleague from Iowa, Congressman TOM TAUKE, I am today introducing legislation to amend the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act of 1978 [PMPA]. The purpose of this bipartisan legislative effort is to correct deficiencies in the existing Petroleum Marketing Practices Act, and to promote healthy and vigorous competition in the petroleum marketing industry in the United States.

This legislation is similar to PMPA amendments—H.R. 5023—which TOM TAUKE and I introduced in 1984. That legislation was cosponsored by 52 of our colleagues in the House, and the Fossil and Synthetic Fuels Subcommittee held 2 days of hearings on the proposal.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the original Petroleum Marketing Practices Act of 1978 was to enhance fair and open competition in the petroleum marketing industry by preventing franchisors—refiners and distributors—from arbitrarily terminating francise relationships with their franchisees—distributors and dealers.

Unfortunately, some narrow judicial interpretations and some abusive and predatory marketing practices by some refiners have severely limited the ability of our Nation's independent marketers and dealers to reasonably compete in the marketplace, despite passage of the original PMPA law over 6 years ago.

The number of gasoline distributors and retail service station dealers in the United States has declined dramatically over the past years. While some of that shrinkage is attributable to normal market changes, it is also clear to us that predatory marketing practices by some refiners have hastened the decline. Our legislation seeks to address these abusive practices without unduly interfering in the marketplace.

Some major refiners will be quick to assert that declining petroleum prices have increased competition in the marketplace and that, through this legislation, inefficient marketers and dealers are simply seeking protection from the vagaries of the marketplace. Nothing could be further from the truth. While declining oil prices have increased the competitive nature of the market, what those same major refiners won't tell you is that this has exacerbated the predatory and abusive marketing practices of some refiners who attempt to sustain or increase their market share at the expense of their independents.

During the past several years, I have had the opportunity to speak with hundreds of independent dealers and marketers about the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act and their relationship with their suppliers. Contrary to what the refiners assert, these independents seek nothing more than fair and open competition—not protection from it. But, under current law, the deck is stacked against them and it's time we put an end to it.

I have yet to meet any independent marketer or dealer who is not willing to compete head to head in the marketplace provided the rules of the game are fair for both sides. But, Mr. Speaker, the rules as currently drawn are full of loopholes which are of advantage to only one side—the refiners. The legislation we are introducing today attempts to balance the rules a little bit, to give independent marketers and dealers the chance they deserve to go head to head in the marketplace. It won't protect independents from the normal pressures of competition; it will put a stop to some of the more flagrant marketing practices of those refiners who now take advantage of any and every existing loophole in order to undercut their independents.

The majors will also suggest that this legislation is an attempt to "regulate" the market, but that is not true. It does not set up any new Federal regulatory bureaucracy to enforce the law. Instead, it only gives independent marketers and dealers a self-enforcing right to action to ensure them a fair and reasonable opportunity to compete in the marketplace, by ensuring that normal contracting practices can and will work in the interests of a competitive market—rather than a restricted market.

Mr. Speaker, the need for this legislation is just as compelling in 1985 as it was a year ago. Accordingly, while some changes have been made in the language of some provisions to meet legitimate questions or criticisms raised by refiners last year, the thrust and the intent of the bill are the same—to benefit the industry and consumers alike by establishing fair and balanced rules for petroleum marketing and to promote healthy and vigorous competition in the industry.

As introduced, the bill would:

Prohibit franchisors from terminating franchisees for failure to purchase a minimum number of gallons, unless such volumes were offered at a competitive price;

Prohibit franchisors from discriminating in price and allocation policies between their classes of franchisees;

Provide that in the event of market withdrawal, refiner franchisors must offer franchisees the right of first refusal to purchase the leased marketing premises;

Require that changes made in the franchise agreement at the time of renewal be fair and reasonable;

Prohibit station conversions during the term of the franchise agreement;

Allow franchisees to continue operating the leased marketing premises in cases where the underlying lease had expired and where the franchisee had been able to negotiate his or her own agreement with the owners of the property;

Prohibit franchisors from engaging in anti-competitive pricing practices in instances where they are in direct competition with their own franchisees; and Allow for the sale or transfer of a franchise agreement and allow for succession of a franchise under a plan to be approved by the franchisor.

I urge all my colleagues to join us in this bipartisan effort by cosponsoring the legislation we are introducing today.●

● Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, over the past several years, Members of Congress have spent a considerable amount of time reviewing the petroleum marketing practices of the major refiners of crude oil. The record that has been compiled suggests that the major oil refiners have pursued policies designed to force a substantial number of service station dealers and oil jobbers out of business. These practices have reduced competition in the petroleum market. It is apparent that Congress should enact legislation to address this problem.

Let me begin by affirming my belief that Congress should enact divorcement legislation prohibiting the major refiners from engaging in the retail marketing of petroleum products. Having pursued that course for 6 years, I recognize that it is unlikely that divorcement legislation can be passed. Yet the problem persists. Therefore it is essential that Congress consider legislation that is "doable"—an approach that can receive majority support and be passed into law.

Toward this end, Congressman SYNAR and I began last year to work with the Petroleum Marketers Association of America [PMAA] and the Service Station Dealers of America [SSDA] to resolve their long-standing differences on legislation affecting the marketing of petroleum products and to develop a proposal both groups could support. As a result of lengthy discussions among Members of Congress, their staffs, the NOJC, the SSDA, and other interested parties, today we are introducing this bill, the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act Amendments of 1985.

This legislation is in the best interest of consumers because it will encourage competition in the marketplace. There are those who contend that the best way to serve consumers is to permit the major refiners to engage in predatory pricing practices to take over the marketplace. While there may be some short-term benefits to this approach, I am convinced that this is to the long-term detriment of consumers. We must not permit competition to be stifled, and thousands of small business men and women must not be replaced by the marketing arms of a few large refiners.

This bill is good for small business. Small businesses do not have the economic power to bargain effectively with major refiners, which is why Congress passed the PMPA in 1978. While the act has helped preserve competition in the marketplace by giving small businesses leverage in contract negotiations, it is clear that current law is not halting the purge of the small businesses engaged in marketing petroleum products.

Let it be clear that we are not trying to regulate the marketplace. This measure will not bring the Federal Government into the marketplace nor will it add additional regulations written by a Federal bureaucracy. What it does is ensure that the normal contracting processes which establish business policies in petroleum marketing can work and will work in the interests of a competitive marketplace and the consumer.●

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows to:

Mr. WEAVER (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT) for today, on account of illness.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. BILIRAKIS) to revise and estend their remarks and include extraneous materials:)

Mr. GINGRICH, for 60 minutes, today.
Mr. WALKER, for 60 minutes, today.
Mr. BLILEY, for 60 minutes, today.
Mr. BURTON, of Indiana, for 60 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. FAZIO) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. CROCKETT, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. LAFALCE, for 30 minutes, today.
Mr. GONZALEZ, for 60 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. MITCHELL) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. MARTINEZ, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. SYNAR, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. DARDEN, for 5 minutes, May 8.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. LAFALCE, and to include extraneous material notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,803.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. 597. An act to amend subtitle II of title 46, United States Code, "Shipping," making technical and conforming changes, and for other purposes, and

S.J. Res. 128. Joint resolution to designate May 7, 1985, as "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day."

JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on May 6 present to the President, for his approval, joint resolutions of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 195. Joint resolution designating May 1985 as "Older Americans Month," and

H.J. Res. 258. Joint resolution to designate May 6, 1985, as "Dr. Jonas E. Salk Day."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 8, 1985, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1223. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Air Force, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the retention in active status until age 60 of certain Reserve officers employed as military technicians; to the Committee on Armed Services.

1224. A letter from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for distribution to the States of certain amounts resulting from enforcement of the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1225. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend various health services authorities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1226. A letter from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting notification of the use of emergency authority to provide assistance under part I of the Foreign Assistance Act to the Afghan people, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2261(a)(2); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1227. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notification of the Department of the Navy's proposed letter of offer to Korea for defense articles and services, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1228. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs, transmitting the text of ILO Recommendation No. 169 concerning employment policy, pursuant to article 19 of the ILO constitution; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1229. A letter from the Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, transmitting a report on the admission of aliens who were affiliated with certain subversive organizations and who have established opposition to such subversion, pursuant to INA, section 212(a)(28)(1)(ii)(b) (66 Stat. 182); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1230. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting the sixth annual report on the administration of the offshore oil pollution compensation fund, pursuant to Public Law 95-372, section 314; jointly, to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1231. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting notification of the determination, on constitutional grounds, not to appeal the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit in United States v. Wulff, pursuant to Public Law 96-132, section 21; Public Law 98-411, section 203(a) (98 Stat. 1558); jointly, to the Committees on the Judiciary and Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1232. A letter from the Acting General Counsel, Department of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend sections 5315 and 5316 of title 5, United States Code, to change the position of Chief Counsel for the Internal Revenue Service, Department of the Treasury, from level V to level IV of the Executive Schedule; jointly, to the Committee on Ways and Means and Post Office and Civil Service.

1233. A letter from the Railroad Retirement Board, transmitting a report on the acturial status of the railroad retirement system, pursuant to 45 U.S.C. 321f-1 (Public Law 98-76, section 502); jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce.

1234. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Social Security Act to make certain program and fiscal improvements in the program of aid to families with dependent children, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committee on Ways and Means and Education and Labor.

1235. A letter from the Acting General Counsel, Department of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to raise the authorized pay level of the Treasurer of the United States to executive level IV; jointly, to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs; Ways and Means; and Post Office and Civil Service.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. MOAKLEY: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 157. Resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 1157. A bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for certain maritime programs of the Department of Transportation and the Federal Maritime Commission. (Rept. No. 99-65). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FROST: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 158. Resolution poviding for the consideration of H.R. 1784. A bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for the operation and maintenance of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes. (Rept. No. 99-66). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI: Committee of conference. Conference report on H.R. 1869 (Rept. No. 99-67). Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWKINS: Committee on Education and Labor. Report pursuant to section 302(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. (Rept. No. 99-68). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI: Committee on Ways and Means. H.R. 2005. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act and related provisions of law to make minor improvements and necessary technical changes; with amendments (Rept. No. 99-69). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FLORIO (for himself, Mr. ECKART of Ohio, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. SHARP, and Mr. SIKORSKI):

H.R. 2372. A bill authorizing appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. LaFALCE:

H.R. 2373. A bill to improve the industrial competitiveness of the United States; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

H.R. 2374. A bill to promote the commercial application and diffusion of advanced technology within industrial sectors; jointly, to the Committees on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and Science and Technology.

H.R. 2375. A bill to establish the bank for industrial competitiveness; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

H.R. 2376. A bill to improve the economic competitiveness of the United States; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

H.R. 2377. A bill to establish the information center on economic competitiveness; jointly, to the Committees on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs; Foreign Affairs; and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. KASTENMEIER (for himself, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. FISH, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. MAZZOLI, Mr. SYNAR, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. GLICKMAN, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. SWINDALL and Mr. COBLE):

H.R. 2378. A bill to amend section 504 of title 5, United States Code, and section 2412 of title 28, United States Code, with respect to awards of expenses of certain agency and court proceedings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BEDELL:

H.R. 2379. A bill to amend the Federal Meat Inspection Act to prohibit the importation of live animals and meat products from countries having standards for the use of certain antibiotics in food-producing animals that are not as stringent as those of the United States, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Agriculture, Ways and Means, and Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CAMPBELL:

H.R. 2380. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the period for making tax-free rollovers of certain distributions from qualified plans from 60 to 90 days; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARR:

H.R. 2381. A bill relating to user fees for customs services at certain small airports; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHAPPIE (for himself, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. WILSON, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, Mr. TRAXLER, Mr. HORTON, Mr. THOMAS of Georgia, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. MARLENEE, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. ROBERTS):

H.R. 2382. A bill entitled: "The Beekeeper Preservation Act of 1985"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ALEXANDER (for himself, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. LELAND, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. EVANS of Illinois, and Mr. HAYES):

H.R. 2383. A bill to provide price and income protection to family farmers through the management of the supply of the 1986 through 1999 crops of certain agricultural commodities, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committee on Agriculture and Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DIOGUARDI:

H.R. 2384. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to permit first-time homebuyers to use amounts in their individual retirement accounts or annuities to purchase a home without including such amounts in gross income or incurring the penalty for early distributions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLORIO:

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 2068

By Mr. VENTO:

—Strike Section 126 and insert the following:

SEC. 126. ESTABLISHMENT OF A TRAVEL ADVISORY ON THE STATE OF JALISCO, MEXICO.

(a) VIOLENCE AGAINST AMERICANS.—The Congress—

(1) deplores the brutal murder of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar, and the abduction and disappearance of numerous other Americans, including John Clay Walker, Alberto Radelat, Dennis Carlson, Rose Carlson, Benjamin Mascarenas, and Patricia Mascarenas; and

(2) finds that the violence perpetrated by drug traffickers in Mexico constitute a danger to the safety of United States citizens living and traveling in the State of Jalisco, Mexico.

(b) TRAVEL ADVISORY.—The Congress, therefore, directs the Secretary of State to issue a travel advisory warning United States citizens of the current dangers of traveling in the State of Jalisco, Mexico. Such travel advisory shall remain in effect until those responsible for the abduction or murder of any of the aforementioned United States citizens have been brought to trial and a verdict has been obtained.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

In compliance with Public Law 601, 79th Congress, title III, Regulation of Lobbying Act, section 308(b), which provides as follows:

(b) All information required to be filed under the provisions of this section with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be compiled by said Clerk and Secretary, acting jointly, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar quarter with respect to which such information is filed and shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate jointly submit their report of the compilation required by said law and have included all registrations and quarterly reports received.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the first calendar quarter 1985:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the first calendar quarter 1985:

(NOTE.—The form used for reporting is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.
